HELEN'S GIFT.

It was early in June, and Helen Seebright, home from the shop, sat in a low easy chair gazing dreamily out of the window.

She heard a brisk step on the porch, which was followed almost instantly by a short rap. Her aunt opened the door just in time to hear the postman say, "A letter for Miss Helen," before he was off again.

Helen had read and seen much; yet she impressed one as having a large amount of reserve force, which nothing in the experience of her life had awakened. She had been raised in one of the neutral States. At 16 she came to a northern city to live with a wealthy aunt and uncle, who were glad to welcome the orphan in their beautiful but childless home.

She was a lady both in appearance and in manner. Though she had the real sea shell, pink complexion and full, dark eye, no one ever thought of calling her beautiful. Indeed, many wondered what it was that her face lacked that kept it from being handsome. "Strange," one of her friends said, "that a young girl of Miss Helen's capacity never says or does anything interesting." Two years after her arrival north her portly uncle died of apoplexy. Everything but one small cottage went in "settling up his business."

After Helen and her aunt moved into this cottage they had just one $10 bill left.

Helen turned to her aunt and said: "What shall I do? I don't know enough to teach, I can't sew; for I never made a garment in my life."

"We'll starve! We'll starve! That is all," said Mrs. Belle, in a despondent tone.

"We will do nothing of the kind," said Helen, with more spirit than she had ever shown in her life.

Putting on her wraps, she went to Fourth street, and entered the largest and most fashionable stores, asking in each for a clerkship. The answer was either that the season was either too dull, or that they already had more help than they needed. She did not give up. The next morning she entered the plainer stores, but she had no better success, and was treated with even less courtesy.

At the end of the third day she was both tired and discouraged. Turning to go home she met Mary Paine, a young woman of wealth. She knew Helen well, and was acquainted with the reverses in her fortune. At a glance, she understood what her business was.

"Helen, you are just the girl that I wanted to see. My father needs some one in the button department, and as usual came to me to recommend one of my friends. Our clerks are my pride. I never recommended one who does not actually need the place for bread and butter."

Helen winced under this last speech. "What need I care?" she said mentally. "She means to be kind. If I am to be a working woman, I might as well make up my mind to share the pain as well as the gain of such a life." When she spoke aloud, it was with a tear of gratitude that she said: "Thank you, my friend."

Without any more ado, Miss Paine slipped her arm through Helen's. After walking a half square in silence they entered one of the largest stores in the city.

"Father," said Miss Paine, "there is Col. Belle's niece, Miss Seebright. I have selected her to fill the vacancy in the button department. She is a capable girl and, with a little instruction, will give you satisfaction."

She walked off, leaving Helen alone in the private office of the great merchant.

He looked at her steadily for a moment, and then said: "You do not want to talk too much to your customers. Remember that you cannot be too obliging. My success depends largely upon the courtesy of my employes."

He then struck a little bell, and one of the floor walkers entered.

"Mr. Robinson," he said, "this is Miss Seebright, who is to have charge of the button department. You will please remain in here and give her the necessary instructions. I will take your place."

It is, perhaps, not an exaggeration to say that Helen learned more in that half hour than in any other month of her life. When he had thoroughly tested her attention to the minutiæ of his instruction, he said:

"Your salary will be five dollars a week. Report to me at half past 7 Monday morning."

She knew that she was now dismissed. While delighted to obtain the situation, she had many misgivings as to how they could live on five dollars a week. She had business insight enough to know that in her uncle's time their daily expenses were rarely less than that amount.

At the appointed hour she reported to Mr. Robinson, and entered the work with an ease that surprised even that calm business master. As the days went by she was given harder work and a higher salary. At the end of five years Mr. Paine asked her to come to his office at 6 o'clock. How her heart beat when she entered! Not seeming to notice her excitement, he said, pleasantly:

"Miss Seebright, you do good work, but I have always thought it was in you to do better."

"I am sorry," she said, in a trembling voice.

But Mr. Paine interrupted her: "I am not finding fault with your work. There are few women in the store that do better. To-morrow Miss Brown takes the supervision of the silk department, and you may take her place in the lace department."

"Thank you," said Helen, and arose to go; but before she reached the door Mr. Paine said, in a careless tone: "Your salary will be $10 a week."

Again Helen said "Thank you;" but this time it was in a tone that was at once haughty and indifferent.

"Why is it," mentally ejaculated Mr. Paine, "that the very women who need money the most are ever the proudest about the acceptance of it?"

Helen was indeed at home among those soft, creamy laces. She handled them as tenderly as a student would a rare manuscript; her touch seemed to have a magic about it. Under her handling patterns seemed almost to match themselves. How it hurt her when people came in with soiled hands and took hold of those dainty meshes.

When the customers were gone she talked very little to the other employes; but if any of them were sick or tired out no one was so quick to detect it as she. If they ever thought her handsome it was when that sympathetic look crept into her face, as she said: "Let me take your place a while."

When the rainy days came or the dull season set in a far away look crept into her eyes. "Helen is dreaming today," the other girls would say.

With the same dreamy look Helen opened her letter. It was from an attorney in San Francisco, informing her of the death of her only uncle, who had left her a bank deposit of $150,000.

Helen read the letter with great agitation to her aunt. When she was able to think she kept wondering what she could do with so much money. Her joy was subdued from the first by an overwhelming sense of responsibility. Her uncle had given his life for this money. The great question to her was how should she make this life worth something to the world.

After a long consultation with a friend, who was a lawyer, she decided to turn the money over to him to invest in mortgages. He was to pay her 6 per cent., and retain all above that amount that he made.

As she went home she kept repeating: "Nine thousand a year. I must make a great many hearts happier with that."

When she entered the store the next morning everyone had a word of congratulation for her. The publicity worried her, but she tried not to show her irritation, lest it might be misinterpreted. Mr. Paine came in at 9 o'clock, and she followed him into the office. Before she could say a word, he said: "I see by the morning paper that the fates have been very kind to you."

"They have treated me more kindly than I deserve. I came to resign my position."

"Perfectly natural. It has always been my custom to require two weeks' notice; but these circumstances are so unusual that I will make an exception in your case."

"The first homage that my wealth has received," she said mentally, but aloud. "If that has been your rule I shall remain at my counter two weeks longer," and walked out.

"Heigh day!" exclaimed Mr. Paine. "She does not seem to know that she showed more pride by remaining."

Back to her place she went, and sold her laces better than ever. The novelty of her position aroused her. It was wonderful to see how many of the friends of her former days recognized her. They asked so kindly after the health of her "dear aunt," too.

Some of the shop girls patronized her, but the majority of them had penetration enough to see that it was offensive to her.

One evening, about a week later, Mary Paine came up to her and said: "How glad I am for you. Especially glad, because you have too much sense to let this inherited wealth make a fool of you. As soon as you are free, go and see sweet little Lucy Snow. She is completely broken down."

The two weeks at last came to an end, but in that time Helen had decided that to put people into relations where they could help themselves was a higher and better thing to do than to give them direct assistance.

When Helen reached home her aunt said: "Mrs. Thompson just left and her last words were, 'I must have this cosy cottage when you move.'"

"Move!" exclaimed Helen.

"Why, of course. You do not mean to live in this little seven-room cottage? I had been hoping that you would buy our old home on Washington avenue."

"We will live right here."

"Helen you surely have lost your senses?"

"On the contrary, my mind was never clearer. We will keep a servant, however."

"Really, I feel like sending for Dr. Churchman and having him examine your head. A woman with $150,000 to be content with one servant! There is something wrong with you, my child."

"No, aunt; the wrong is with the women who make a business of running a big establishment. To manage a household of servants is an occupation in itself."

"Seriously, what will society think of your Quixotic notions?"

"It is very immaterial to me what society thinks."

"Helen!"

"Society dropped me at 18; at 28 I do not propose to take it up."

"What are you going to do?"

"I am going to see Lucy Snow just now. Goodby."

"Strange girl!" said Mrs. Belle. "She is never so full of plans as when she will say nothing about them. I prepare myself for anything that is unselfish; for while she is economical, she could not do a little or mean thing."

Helen found Lucy on the third floor of a fourth rate tenement house. There was but one window in the room, and that overlooked the back yard of a soap factory.

Helen was shocked to see how the girl had changed since she left the store. Her face was as white as a lily and her large brown eyes were so clear and brilliant that they were startling.

Lucy was weak and nervous and almost hysterical. When she looked up and saw Helen, the tears filled her eyes.

Helen did not seem to notice this, but said pleasantly; "How are you today?"

"I don't know. I just feel so tired. The least little thing that occurs excites me so. The doctor says I must have a change. He recommends that I go to the sea shore. He might as well recommend the leopard to change his spots."

"There is your piano, Lucy."

"I know that." Again the tears filled her eyes, but she controlled herself to say: "It was a secondhand one when I got it. I was three years paying for it. No one will ever know the sacrifices that I had to make to pay for it. How can I ever part with it?"

"I know only too well what sacrifices women clerks have to make, if they ever try to make their salary do more than feed and clothe them. But, my friend, you must be more practical. Do you propose to keep the piano and die?"

"Oh! I hope to get better."

"Not in this hot room." Opening the piano she struck several chords, and rich tones filled the room.

"This is an excellent instrument, Lucy. What did you pay for it?"

"One hundred and fifty dollars."

"It is worth every cent of it. I will buy it of you at that price."

"You don't need it, Helen. You have the fine one that your uncle gave you before he died."

"I am not buying it for myself, but for a friend, Amelia White, who is a seamstress. Every Sunday afternoon she comes over to our house. I always ask her to play, for I know that is why she comes. Such beautiful music as she does play—and it is all her own, too."

"Thank you, Helen—thank you."

"No need of thanking me. This is strictly a business transaction. Amelia will pay every dollar it is worth in her neat sewing."

"What a good woman you are, Helen!"

"Please don't be ironical over my bargains. By the way, I too am feeling tired. Suppose that we go to some quiet place in Maine for two or three weeks."

"Now, Helen, there is some more of your kindness."

"Oh, no! My aunt has not been out of the city since my uncle's death. It my first duty to give her a little pleasure after so many long and monotonous years. I think it would be so pleasant for us to go together."

"Delightful!" exclaimed Lucy. Positively a little color crept into her face.

"When can you be ready?"

"Any time. I have nothing to do but pack that little trunk, and have not enough to fill it."

"Very well. I mean to be the man on this expedition; will get the tickets and send the expressman for your trunk. Good-by."

"Good-by. May God bless you, my friend, for your sympathy and kindness."

Helen started off, deeply touched by Lucy's gratitude. She had not gotten down but one flight of steps when she suddenly turned and went back.

"Lucy," she said, "we will start early to-morrow morning. I will tell the expressman to come and get the piano in the afternoon."

Just as she was closing the door she heard Lucy say: "You thoughtful creature! You did not want me to see the piano go."

The next morning three happy women took the train for a quiet seashore town.

The excitement of the preparation gave Lucy the strength to start, but by the time they reached their journey's end she had almost to be carried into the hotel.

Helen rose early the next morning to see the sun rise out of the ocean; she went down on the piazza. Imagine her surprise when she found Lucy sitting in an easy chair.

"Oh, Helen! was there ever anything so strengthening? I am well already."

"I suppose it must be to you, my dear. Those great surging waves only make me feel my insignificance."

She seated herself and neither of them spoke another word. Hearing a footstep they turned, and there stood one of Helen's schoolmates.

"Helen Seebright? I never dreamed of seeing you! Are you married yet?"

"No; but those two little brown eyed girls tell me you are."

"Yes, I married Charley Marshall, whom I used to hate so, because he teased me with his practical jokes."

On and on they talked about their school days. Lucy, who knew none of these people, took the children on the beach for a walk.

The days were so bright and restful, Mrs. Belle, who had in some way regained her old social position, grew ten years younger, and Lucy, she fairly blossomed. Her songs and stories completely fascinated the children. They literally lived out of doors; the beach, the bathing, the walks, the croquet and the tennis left them only time in the house for their meals.

At the end of two weeks Helen suddenly announced that she should take the evening train for home. Her aunt and Lucy must stay, but that she had some very important business to attend to.

The trunk was soon packed and the goodbys hurried through.

On reaching home the first familiar face she saw was that of her seamstress.

"Why, Amelia! You look as though you had been to the seashore."

"I have, Miss Helen, and roamed over plains and climbed mountains besides."

"How?" said Helen, who understood her perfectly, but wanted to give her an opportunity to express herself.

"With my piano keys."

Helen passed on smiling with pleasure and wondering if the poets themselves had not had something to do with the creation of paradise.

Her practical mind found itself busy in renovating the cottage. Never did she find it so hard to keep from actual manual labor. Seemingly she was idle, but oh, the needy people to whom her folded hands gave employment! They always left her with the feeling that they had performed a service that no one else could have done half so well.

"Mrs. Craft," she said one morning, "don't you want to rest from washing for a week and help me with the house cleaning?"

"I'd be so glad for a change."

"Very well, then. I will pay you just as much as you get for your washing, and, besides, you may have the old carpets, if you think that you can do anything with them."

Mrs. Craft, who had not one yard of carpeting in her house, smiled her thanks.

"In refurnishing the house," continued Helen, "there will be many of the dear old things which I should love to give to some one that I knew."

At last all was complete. Helen met her aunt several days afterward with the new phaeton and gentle pony. Mrs. Belle was very enthusiastic about them.

"They are your very own, my dear aunt. Simon Craft is to have the care of them, and at any hour will be on hand to drive you."

Presently Mrs. Belle said: "Why don't you ask something about Lucy?"

"I supposed of course Mrs. Marshall had taken her home with her to be the governess for her children."

"What made you think of that? Lucy would not write about it, but wanted me to surprise you by telling you."

"I am not at all surprised. The eternal fitness of things suggested it to my mind before I left the seashore. So Lucy is to live in that comfortable southern home. She is one of those fragile plants that blossom only under the sunniest of skies.

When they reached home Mrs. Belle was so delighted with the tasteful arrangements of the house that she almost cried. She opened the kitchen door. There sat old "Dinah," Helen's colored nurse, who had come north with her and had lived with them as long as they were able to keep a servant. This was too much for the tired traveler. The tears, already so near the surface, rolled down on her cheeks.

When she could finally control herself she said: "This is better than the big houseful of strange servants. My child do you mean to spend your life and fortune in trying to make other people happy?"

Helen answered evasively, "Not a very bad to do, is it, Aunt?"

The next morning Amelia White came over to fit a fine wool tea gown for Mrs Belle. While she was busy, Helen came into the room, dressed for walking.

"Where are you going now, Miss Helen?"

"Only to the postoffice."

"Only to the postoffice means something else. What errand of mercy are you on now?"

"I am going to mail a note to Lucy Snow, and a letter of recommendation to Mr. Paine for our bright young neighbor, Harry Born, and"—

"And what else?"

"One of my old academy teachers, who is now president of a college in central Kentucky, is here looking for a music teacher, but that he wants kept a secret."

"What has that to do with your going to the postoffice?"

"You don't give me the chance to tell you. There is Professor Moller, who knows so much about music"—

"But he has a position in the public schools," said Amelia, interrupting her again.

"No, I saw in the morning paper that that shrewd Mr. Miller was elected to that place last night. I mean to invite Professor Moller and my teacher to take tea with us tomorrow evening. That is all."

"Are you sure that is all?"

"It is all that I have to do in the affair. I hope that my teacher will like the professor; but his music must be his first recommendation for such a position; after that, I am ready to say all sorts of nice things about his noble character."

As she walked off Mrs. Belle said: "Helen ought to have been a Sister of Charity."

"She is Charity dwelling with us," said Amelia, and she folded up her sewing to go home.—Elizabeth Ware in Independent.

The Only Pure Baking Powder.
(From Hall's Journal of Health.)
We feel it our duty to state that of a number of different kinds of Baking Powder purchased in a neighboring city for examination, the only one we found made of Pure Grape Cream of Tartar, and that did not contain any Alum, Acid Phosphates, or Ammonia, and that was absolutely free from adulterations, was Cleveland's Superior Baking Powder.

From letter written by Mrs. Ada E. Hurd of Groten, S. D., we quote: "Was taken with a bad cold, which settled on my lungs, cough set in and finally terminated in Consumption. Four doctors gave me up saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Saviour, determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones above. My husband was advised to get Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. I gave it a trial, took in all eight bottles; it has cured me and thank God I am now a well and healthy woman." Trial bottles free at H. L. Flanders & Co's Drugstore, regular size, 50c. and $1.00.

Among various expressions of intelligence which often places the dog in no mean place of comparison to his master, a little habit developed by a dog in the suburbs is worth mentioning. Whenever this dog becomes angry, instead of making an exhibition of his temper he turns away from the offending person as quickly as possible and makes a bee line like a flash to the nearest brook. In a few minutes he returns dripping, but serene, without a trace of his former excitement in his manner. His plunge has apparently cooled off all angry feelings and even caused forgetfulness of causes of disturbance.

100 Ladies Wanted

And 100 men to call on any druggist for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicine, the great root and herb remedy, discovered by Dr. Silas Lane while in the Rocky Mountains. For diseases of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys it is a positive cure. For constipation and clearing up the complection it does wonders. It is the best spring medicine known. Large size package, 50 cents. At all druggists'.

While the Indians of Eagle Valley, Nev., were at a fandango last week they left in camp an aged buck named Teekaboo and his squaw. Teekaboo was quite infirm, so his spouse dug a hole in the ground, put him in up to the neck and filled in the dirt solid. She then left for the fandango, first placing a cup of water near the buried buck. He was rescued by some sheepmen after 65 hours' confinement. The squaw had not been found at last accounts.

What Does It Mean?

"100 Doses One Dollar" means simply that Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most economical medicine to buy, because it gives more for the money than any other preparation. Each bottle contains 100 doses and will average to last a month, while other preparations taken according to directions, are gone in a week. Therefore, be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla, the best blood purifier.

There is an old lady living in Polk county, Fla., who is quite a genius. She can write poetry and set it to music, and has written two books. She hunts phosphate, plants trees, clears land, works in an orange grove, can knit dresses, make neat shoes, plait hats of palmetto and make flowers out of shucks.

How Nice

Miss Bell is looking, Addie. Yes, Laura. Why, only a year ago her face was completely covered with pimples, blotches and sores. She told mother that she owed her nice, clear complection to her using Sulphur Bitters. Well, Laura, I shall try them too.

The work of restoring the historic castle at Heidelberg has begun and will continue for two years at least. It is not intended to restore the picturesque ruins, but to renew the foundations and restore certain portions of the castle in strict conformity to its appearance in the time of the Electors Palatine.

Until the blood is cleansed of impurities, it is useless to attempt the cure of any disease. Rheumatism, which is traceable to an acid in the blood, has been cured, in numerous cases, by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, external treatment being of no avail.

"NO CAUSE OF ACTION."

Last Monday the legislative investigating committee appointed to look into the matter of the West End charter for an elevated railroad in Boston reported to the Legislature "no bill" against that corporation or anybody connected with the business in the capacity of legitimate attorneys or members. The committee gave the lobby quite a severe handling which was deserved or not according as people look at those things.

George Fred Williams, Mugwump member of the House, instigated the investigation, made the charges and helped to manage the case before the committee, and the general feeling around the State House was, at the close of the trial, that George Freddie wished very much that he had let the matter severely alone.

The West End Company spent considerable money in getting their charter for the elevated road but there was no evidence that any member of the Legislature was ever paid a dollar or was promised one for his vote on the bill. The whole body of lawmakers emerged from the trial absolutely clean and undefiled.

Williams wanted and expected to fasten bribery on the West End and members of the Legislature but his attempt was a complete failure. He didn't start out with any intention of doing the State or morality a service but to gratify his disposition to meddle with other peoples' business. If it had been an honest attempt at legislative reform, although there was really no reforming needed, George Fred's efforts would have commanded public respect and sympathy; but as it was, he was the laughing stock of everybody not only in the Legislature but out of it. His failure was signal, complete, and must have been very humiliating to his Mugwump spirit.

The committee dressed down the lobby in severe measures, but as the testimony failed to convict that body of outside legislators with the inside ones, or with the West End Co., only in a very weak and uncertain way, the scaring didn't count very much in the proceedings or report. Thus ended a great legislative farce.

GOV. BRACKETT'S VETO.

The Governor displayed good sense and a praiseworthy regard for the interests of the people when he sent back to the Senate the Gas and Electric Light Consolidation bill the other day with his veto attached. The measure was calculated to play into the hands of unscrupulous men and was thoroughly bad in principle as it would have turned out to be in practice. It was against the common people and favored the rich, which was enough to condemn it in the eyes of Gov. Brackett. His reasons for vetoing it were sound and clearly expressed and strong enough to convince any person that he did exactly right in rejecting the measure.

Gov. Brackett is quite apt to be found on the side of the masses when their wellfare is endangered by the machinations of speculators and monopolists.

— We can't find anybody in this city who has not made up his, her or its mind to attend the great 4th of July celebration at Winchester to-day.

— Mr. S. C. Small has sent us an illustrated catalogue of the contents of his big Boston fine furniture store. In church, hall and lodge furniture S. C. Small & Co. excel.

— The report is current that Andrews, Cutler & Co. are about to start a newspaper in this city. It is a pretty poor field for such an enterprise, but the more the merrier.

— Mr. and Mrs. William C. Lawson started for their home in Chicago last Tuesday noon. They went via White Mountains, Lakes George, Champlain, and Ontario, Canada, etc.

— Mr. W. H. Cummings says building is reviving in good shape and that business in that line is very encouraging. He sees signs of renewed prosperity for our city in other directions.

— The people of this city who persist in violating law by the sale of intoxicating drinks without a license will think by and by perhaps that a law-abiding, honest life pays the best after all.

— Dr. John M. Harlow and wife left on Thursday morning for Chicago, St. Paul and other points in the West. Mrs. Harlow will visit old friends in Chicago, and the Dr. once practiced at St. Paul.

— Mr. Willard Smith has had a very nice trade indeed in carpets this spring and early summer. It is a well known fact that such goods, as well as others, can be bought as low at Smith's as in Boston.

— The manufacturers and business men of this city will do well to read carefully an article in this issue of the JOURNAL taken from last week's Shoe and Leather Reporter. There is much food for reflection in it.

— Rev. Fr. Slattery is passing his vacation in the White Mts. and getting well and rugged. He will take up his pastoral work here in the fall which, it is to be hoped, will not be interrupted by sickness again very soon.

— William McClancy had three fingers on his left hand split open in a splitting machine at Murdock's factory last Saturday afternoon. All three of them were split right in two making a bad accident of it for William.

— A card from the County Commissioners announces that the new Probate Building at East Cambridge will be open for public inspection from 2 o'clock this p. m. (July 3) to 5 p. m. Saturday. It is said to be a very fine building.

— Mr. J. L. Smith of near Locke's Hill in Winchester made us his annual visit last Tuesday and duly deposited his offering on the altar of real genuine journalistic worth. Having been lads together Mr. Smith's and the Editor's annual meetings are very pleasant personal affairs.

— Mr. W. R. Cutter, Librarian of Woburn Public Library, wrote the historical sketch of Winchester which is to be read to-day at the grand celebration. He did it at the request of the Winchester Historical and Gen'l Society because of his recognized ability and reliability as a local historian.

— It is said that Mr. Faxon has pledged $100 for the purchase of a window to be inscribed with prohibition sentiment and that Rev. Hugh Montgomery very much desires that it may have a companion W. C. T. U., window. There is opportunity for some generous friend to contribute for the purpose.—Ex.

— The Woburn High School Battalion declined a Jack-at-a-pinch invitation from the Winchester 4th-of-July Committee to parade in the great celebration there to-day. They say that after the Boston and Medford H. S. B. declined the Woburn boys were honored with an invite. "Small potatoes and few in a hill."

— Mayor Johnson will speak for Woburn at the after-dinner tables of the Winchester 4th of July celebration by invitation of the managers. We shouldn't be surprised if the Mayor made rather a spicy speech—that he will make a good one nobody doubts. The grand celebration will come off this day, Friday.

— A new Automatic Chair is offered for sale which is so contrived as to follow every motion of the body automatically. The head rest, the foot rest, the back, the seat, the leg rest and the arms all work automatically. It is a marvel of comfort. It can be seen at Paine's Furniture Warerooms, 48 Canal street, Boston.

— Hon. J. G. Pollard has received the appointment from Collector Beard of Janitor of the Boston Custom House. It is a position of responsibility with a good salary. Mr. Pollard has many friends here and elsewhere who congratulate him on his good fortune in securing such a desirable position in the public service.

— The JOURNAL Book and Job office is complete in all its appointments and has the reputation of turning out as fine work and as much of it as any printing establishment in Middlesex county. It is fully supplied with presses, all the latest styles of type, stock and men to use them, and gentlemen, your work is respectfully solicited. —tf.

— Almost a fortnight ago Mr. John Gilcreast, Superintendent of the Woburn Gaslight Co., returned from a visit with his son at Pottsville, Pa. He spent a good deal of time among the coal mines in that region and gathered up considerable valuable information respecting the modes of operating them and matters connected therewith. He enjoyed the trip and visit very much.

— In connection with matters concerning the grand Winchester 4th of July celebration to-day we would state that a substantial Grand Stand has been erected on Bacon's field for the accommodation of those attending the Band Concerts and Fireworks, so that all can have a nice comfortable seat for a very reasonable price. This is a capital good thing.

— Mrs. Paulina and her daughter Miss Clarabel D. Flinn started last Wednesday for East Wilton, N. H., where they expect to spend the summer months with relatives and friends up there. Neither lady enjoys very robust health and it is hoped that a sojourn among the hills of the old Granite State will do them good. And the JOURNAL hopes it will.

— Mr. Samuel W. Mendum, Assistan Principal of the High School, Mr. O. F. Bryant, a teacher of more than 25 years standing in Chauncy Hall School, Boston, and Mr. Winthrop Hammond, expect to join the excursion which will leave Boston today (4th) for the annual convention of the National Teachers Association to be held at Minneapolis, Minn., on July 7-11.

— Last week Judge Wade of Helena, Montana, a nephew of the old Abolition war-horse Ben Wade of Ohio, paid Col. Hayes and family of this city, a visit. He is a relative of Mrs. Hayes who was a Wade on one side of her parentage. The Wades were natives of Medford and there is where old Ben's ancestors settled when they came to this country. Col. and Mrs. Hayes enjoyed the visit of their Montana relative.

— Lawyer Allen, for the defense, and Lawyer Curren for the Commonwealth, got up quite a breeze in the District Court last Tuesday morning over the trial of druggist Mitchell and his clerk Devlin for alleged selling of intoxicating liquors illegally. There was considerable "pitching in" on both sides, and it took pretty plain talk from Judge Converse to quell the war of words. Nobody, however, was very seriously hurt.

— Mr. Elisha F. Hayward, one of the census enumerators, has addressed Commissioner Porter for permit for him and his associates to disclose the number of inhabitants which they find Woburn to contain. It was a good thing for Mr. Hayward to do and we can see no reason why the Superintendent of Census should not comply with his very reasonable and proper request. It is to be hoped that the permission asked for will be promptly granted.

— Farmers are just about well under way in their haying operations. Now and then a very smart one has finished up the job and has his hay all nicely housed, but the most of them are not half through yet. It used to be the old stereotyped habit of farmers to set in haying, in right down good earnest, the next Monday after the 4th of July, but of late years the rule has been so far modified as to allow of considerable work in that line being done the week before the 4th.

— The JOURNAL's family have enjoyed a visit this week from Rev. and Mrs. Drake, home missionaries and residents of South Dakota, who have been preaching and lecturing in Massachusetts ever since the National Convention at Saratoga early in June in behalf the churches and church building in that new State. They have been cordially received everywhere and have secured handsome contributions for the support of their noble work. They will leave New England for their Western home early next week.

— Mr. Fred A. Flint has kindly consented at the request of the Managers to receive subscriptions for the purchase of a parlor organ for the Old Ladies Home and those of our people who wish to aid this worthy object will find him at his desk in the store of G. R. Gage & Co., and himself ready to receive and give credit for contributions. The object is a good one. The Managers would like to buy the instrument but cannot do so without help from the public, and Mr. Flint has volunteered to lend a helping hand.

— The records of Water Registrar Barrett show a large increase of water takers in this city since April 1. Changes of course are always going on; people are leaving tenements and others come in and take them. The records referred to show that the number of new takers is just about twice as large as the number who have gone away, the total figuring showing that Woburn's population has been increasing rapidly in the last few months. The JOURNAL believes that the reports of the census men will show that this city is and has been growing right along.

— George W. Emery who died at the city almshouse a couple of weeks ago had experienced a good many of life's vicisitudes in his nearly 70 years of existence. He was a prominent comb manufacturer once at which he made a good deal of money. There was a time when he could count his dollars by the many thousands and nobody held their head higher than he. But rum, the great enemy of mankind whose victims outnumber those of all the wars that have been waged since Adam's Fall—rum got the upper-hands of him; he lost his business, his wealth, his health, his good name, his everything that a man ought to hold dear; he was taken "over the hill to the poor-house" at last, and there he died, a poor, broken-down, friendless old man, a couple of weeks ago. That is just the way rum serves them all.

— The Johnston Electric Signal Company have elected Mr. C. H. Delano Superintendent of their factory in this city and he has accepted the position. Up to a few months since he was manager of the business of the Woburn Electric Light Company in which capacity he did first class service which was appreciated and prized. He understands the electrical business as thoroughly as any man we have among us and will fill the position of Superintendent of the Johnston Company to the satisfaction of everybody. The Company are already beginning to turn out electrical wares from their factory and in about three weeks will be in operation under a full head of steam. At present they derive their power from J. T. Freeman & Co., in the same building. They have orders from the B. & R. RR. Co. to finish up the work on that road at once, in addition to which orders for signals are being received daily from away. It is the intention of the Company to manufacture not only electrical railroad signals but all sorts of electrical goods, for which they are rapidly getting into working trim. Things will soon be heard humming down there at the Johnston electrical factory.

— Watson's Illuminator of Biddeford, Maine, came out last month double its former size, that is, 16-page instead of 8, and such another crowing and and swinging of hats history has made no record of. The Illuminator is the jolliest monthly in America, and Editor Watson knows it, and nobody Down East takes more pride in his production than he does.

— The Board of Trade special committee, Messrs. Lawrence Reade, Fred A. Flint and F. H. Lewis, appointed to consult with the authorities of the Boston & Maine Railroad Co. in relation to securing an earlier morning mail, called on Superintendent Sanborn a few days since and submitted to him their story. Supt. Sanborn received the committee in the most friendly and courteous manner and gave them assurances that their wants should be promptly and carefully looked into and acted upon. The committee were right well pleased with the new Superintendent of the Lowell System of the B. & M.

— "The Fall of Babylon" is a grand open-air spectacular representation at Oakland Garden, Boston, by Barnum (the prince of showmen) and Bailey, which everyone in this city ought to see, and a great many of them will, we have no doubt. It is one of the most gorgeous and at the same time unique shows ever given to the public. The first presentation of this wonderful and colossal scenic, scriptural and historical drama was on last Monday evening when thousands visited and admired it and will be continued until further notice. Nothing of the kind or anywhere like it was ever given in this country. It no doubt will attract throngs of people daily from all over New England for there has never been anything in Boston so well calculated to draw crowds.

— A considerable fear of dogs prevails in this city at the present time. Considering that two persons have died of hydrophobia in the last few months it is not very strange that people feel alarmed about themselves. The fright is not confined to this city either—there is a good deal of a mad dog scare in other parts of the State and New England. There is a feeling prevailing in this this community that something ought to be done by the authorities to protect the inhabitants against possible injury by the dogs, and the JOURNAL thinks it would be a good plan for them to look into it. Just what the authorities can do in the premises we are not aware, but we have no doubt they will take such measures as may be in their power to protect the people from harm from the dogs.

— The surprise party for Mr. and Mrs. Austin A. Crowell which was given at their residence, 221 Salem street, last Monday evening, was an affair that will not soon be forgotten. It was a genuine social treat which everyone enjoyed and none more so than Mr. and Mrs. Crowell who were the recipients of fine presents among which were a set of dining-room chairs. Music, conversation and games constituted an evening's excellent entertainment. Among the friends present were: Col. O. J. Hart and wife, Mrs. Austin G. French, Mrs. George H. Woodside, Miss Lucy Woodside, Geo. Butters, Mrs. Ella Howard, Edgar S. Ellis and wife, Arthur U. Dickson and wife, Mrs. Sidney S. — Edward H. Lounsbury has been Master of the Cummings School in this city five years. Our educational authorities all say he has done excellent work there, besides which, parents and pupils hold him in high esteem. It is said, and it is probably true, that Mr. Lounsbury's work has steadily grown more valuable to the school year after year on the score of increased experience, and that his interest in the young people under his charge is excelled by no teacher in the city's corps. There is a rumor that Mr. Lounsbury contemplates leaving the Woburn schools for either some other one or some other occupation. He had an invitation not long back to accept a firstclass position in the Somerville schools at a handsome salary and why he did not take it is what we do not know. His salary here is $1,200: he thinks his services are worth $1,500, and declines, as we hear the story, to remain longer for less. The School Committee, while they do not doubt the value of his services, are afraid Mr. Lounsbury might, even at $1,500 per annum, take it into his head to leave here—in other words, they would not be assured of his continued services even were the salary he asks paid him, and therefore make a halt before his proposition. So the matter rests, rumor says, and what will come out of it cannot yet be determined. If Master Lounsbury should go our schools will lose the services of one of the best educators in this part of the State.

Cummings Grammar School.

"Public Day" was observed on Tuesday, June 24th, closing with exercises in the school hall. In spite of the intense heat, a large number of friends favored the school with their presence. An hour before the time set for the exercises, people began to arrive; by two o'clock every available seat was occupied, and late comers were obliged to stand. The decorations were simple and save for a slight excentricity on the part of the "1890" were really very pretty. At ten minutes past two the "assembly" was sounded and the long lines of pupils marched to the hall to the inspiring music of the Cummings School Fife & Drum Corps.

The exercises, presented chiefly by the graduating class, were of a varied character, designed to call forth the talents of the individual as well as of the class as a whole. The literary part of the programme was entirely original in both conception and elaboration. A curtain being necessary, an ingenious arrangement had been made by means of wire and pulley, which, nevertheless, though carefully tested beforehand, took a malicious pleasure in breaking at a critical point. Thanks, however, to the ready resource and prompt action of stage-carpenter Dimick and an able corps of assistants, serious delay was avoided.

The programme as a whole was well rendered and gave evidence of hard work. The choruses—in four parts and without instrument—were particularly fine and reflect much credit on Professor Russell, the Director of Music. The Class History, by Alice Huse provoked much laughter by its brilliant sallies, and the illustrated pieces were well received. The most interesting part of the programme in the opinion of many was the Calisthenic exercise by the girls of the graduating class, assisted by some from the eighth grade. Their marching in particular was so well done as to call forth outbursts of hearty applause, and must have opened the eyes of those juvenile cynics whose notions of a girl's general ability to "do things" is based on observation of her efforts to throw stones or sharpen lead pencils.

The following is a programme of the exercises.

1. March. By the orchestra.
2. Semi-Chorus. 7th, 8th and 9th grades.
   a. Contentedness. German Folk Song.
   b. Sweet and Low. Barnaby.
3. Dumb Bell Drill. Boys of 9th grade.
4. Male Quartette. Integer Vitae.
5. Calisthenics.

The Class has organized with Leon F. Parkhurst President, and Hattie J. Buck, Secretary. The members are as follows: John C. Andrews, Jennie M. Barter, Samuel D. Bartlett, Clara L. Blake, Irene F. Boone, Philip M. Brown, Hattie J. Buck, Almy M. Carter, Charles R. Carter, Etta F. Charman, Daniel B. Dimick, Chester R. Fowle, Florence M. Hartwell, Herbert C. Hartwell, Gertrude M. Heartz, Benjamin S. Hinckley, Alice M. Huse, Cyrus F. Lamb, Edward A. Maguire, Thomas J. McColgan, Maud McLean, Florence C. Meriam, Peter N. Miller, Mabel T. Newton, James A. Ordway, Grace M. Page, Leon F. Parkhurst, Lilla E. Patterson, Clara M. Ryder, Leila A. Seller, Frank H. Smith, Ada C. Waterman, John W. Waters, Mamie Waters.

On Thursday evening following graduation, the class held a lawn party at the home of Leon Parkhurst, Green street, and despite the depressing pressure of "Rabat-joie the Venerable," had a delightful time. Games were played on the lantern-lighted lawn and a few of the old school room songs were sung to a large and appreciative audience without the gate of Paradise. After refreshments the company went indoors and the President of the Class, in a speech so neat and appropriate as to call for three separate editions thereof, in behalf of the class presented their teacher, Mr. Lounsbury a very fine pair of opera glasses. The recipient was visibly affected but by special indulgence was allowed to retire to the front hall for reflection, after which he thanked the class in a short speech. More games and singing followed, a little dancing, and then the strains of "Auld Lang Syne" told the close of an evening of perfect enjoyment. As one by one the bright faces vanished and glad laughter died in the distance, to many came like a benediction, an echo from the verse of the sweet singer by the Charles,

"Bear through sorrow, wrong, and ruth,
In thy heart the dew of youth,
On thy lips the smile of truth"

The thanks of the class are due to Mr. Henry L. Andrews for the gift of programmes for the lawn party.

Recent experiments on the Annapolis proving ground have demonstrated that this country is now not only manufacturing the finest rifled breechloading cannon in the world, but that it is also producing the most effective modern powder. In view of the fact that a half a dozen years ago we were behind all the other nations of the world in the art of making modern ordnance, this is a most conspicuous object lesson of the wisdom of encouraging home industry.—Boston Journal.

The 4 o'clock Mens meeting next Sunday afternoon, will be led by Mr. Frank Johnson of Amherst College. We also expect a cornetist to lead the singing.

The Boy's meeting will be held as usual at 3 o'clock Sunday, afternoon. The speaker will be one who understands how to interest boys. Be sure your boy hears him.

The regular quarterly members meeting last Tuesday evening was well attended. The chairmen of the different committees gave encouraging reports of the work of the past quarter.

The Boys are talking of a summer encampment with other Junior Branches. The place is to be Paddock's Island opposite Pemberton and parents of Juniors who desire to know about it will have sent them a circular of information on application.

The Woman's Auxiliary met last Tuesday week. After a very interesting meeting, they adjourned until September. The reports of the different committees showed that active work was going on, and that the interest was increasing among members, and also among others who are not members, but will be in the fall. A good sum was netted at their last sociable.

Lately we have heard such expressions as these: "The Y. M. C. A. Rooms have been the means of keeping me out of bad company;" "The influence I have received at the Y. M. C. A. Rooms has changed my course of life, and a few months ago I gave myself to Christ in one of the 4 o'clock meetings, and I thank God for the Young Men's Christian Association." And yet we hear people say of "what use are they?" "What good do they do?" My friend, if you knew more of the work, you would not critisize so harshly. If you want to see results, give us encouragement instead of discouragement. God is certainly blessing His work in this place. For when we see one young man, who has led a wasteful life, change to a useful one, it certainly shows that some one has been busy in the Master's vineyard.

Lawn Party.

On the afternoon of Tuesday, June 27, the officers of the Woburn Woman's Club gave to the members and ex-officers of the Club a lawn party on the grounds of Mrs. P. L. Converse and of Mrs. Martha Hayward. Showers had fallen during the morning but the sun shone brightly at the proper hour of four, and many were the guests received by the President and the two Vice Presidents between the hours of four and six. Invitations were extended to the Board of Management of the Winchester "Fortnightly," and to the ex-President of the Malden Club—"The Old and New"—who served as a delegate to the convention of the "Federation of Women's Clubs" held in New York city this spring; and to the ex-President of the Melrose Woman's Club who was a delegate to the 21st anniversary of Sorosis in the same city last year; and to other friends who had at one time or another served the Club.

Mrs. Hayward generously allowed the Club the use of her roomy barn, and the interior was prettily decorated with flowers of the garden and the field. Within was placed the long table from which was served the refreshments of cake and lemonade.

And let me say here that the "Woburn Woman's Club" possesses many excellent cake makers. A pleasing effect in white and green was given by a scarf of ferns which lay on the white cloth through the centre of the table, and among the ferns reposed the daisy heads. The study in green and white was further carried out in the wall hangings of white linen which were dotted and fringed with ferns that still retained their woody fragrance. In the centre of the hangings, peonies, roses and other garden beauties made a gay bit of color.

As a fitting tribute to one whose presence on this gala-day had been so sadly missed, the flowers that had brightened the fete were laid by loving hands on the grave of Emma Putnam Kelley. G. M. B.

Trying To Defraud Housekeepers.

Respectable grocers are much incensed at the disreputable practices resorted to by a baking powder concern to introduce its goods in this market. It employs a lot of cheap and incompetent people to go around and make what they call "tests" of baking powders, which simply mean condemning every kind except the one they peddle. So ignorant and unprincipled are these parties that where two samples from the same package have been given them they have pronounced one very good and the other very bad. They indiscriminately condemn the best known goods of very highest reputation which in any way compete with their own. All the high class grocers are dealing largely, and have been for years, in the baking powders condemned by these itinerants, and they resent the accusation that they are selling impure and adulterated goods, especially as they know it to be untrue and made for purely mercenary purposes.

An evidence of the fraudulent intent of these parties exists in the fact that in several instances they have given their own baking powder to examine, when, supposing it to be another, they have unhesitatingly condemned it as adulterated.

Methods of this kind indicate both ignorance of the first principles of business and absence of either honor or morality, and will disgust consumers as well as dealers.

Thompson—Wyman.

A notable wedding took place in this city last Monday afternoon, the contracting parties being Miss Ella Frances Wyman of Woburn and Mr. Leonard Smalley Thompson of Boston. The bride is a twin daughter of the late Calvin A. Wyman, and the ceremony was held on the lawn in front of the residence of Mrs. Sophia B. Wyman, the bride's mother, at 46 Wyman street. The event was witnessed by the relatives and a number of immediate friends of the couple, the Rev. Charles Macomber Smith, D. D., of Somerville officiating. The bride was dressed in a cream white satin de Lyon, moss plush, lace and silk cord, with a head dress of lace and natural moss to match, Miss Emma Louisa, her twin sister, stood with her, dressed in a costume exactly the same. The services took place at 3 P. M. and was the Christian Science ceremony. Many letters and telegrams of congratulation were received from friends at a distance. A wedding repast was served, after which the happy pair started on a wedding trip in New Hampshire, Vermont, New York and Canada. The bride has been for some time a teacher in the Rice Training School of Boston. The newly-wedded couple were the recipients of elegant and beautiful gifts.

Among the friends present were: Edwin P. Seaver, Superintendent of the Public Schools of Boston, and wife, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Crane of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Gregg of Boston, Mrs. Daniel Lane of Boston, Mrs. John Cummings and Mrs. A. Maria Winn of Woburn, Arthur A. Fowle, Managing Editor of the Boston Globe, and wife, E. C. Dana of New York, Lewis J. Chase of Providence, R. I., Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Warren of Boston, and Major and Mrs. C. W. Stevens and family of Boston. There were many other Woburn friends and relatives present from all of whom the bride and groom received warm congratulations.

A Correction.

The publication in the JOURNAL of date June 13, ult., of an article headed "The Geographical Centre" evidently gave rise to considerable irritation of temper in this community—at least, it probably intensified feelings that had not been theretofore altogether fraternal. Several people were suspected of being the authors of the screed and blame was bestowed accordingly. None of the parties suspected, however, had anything to do towards writing or had any knowledge concerning it, until it appeared in the JOURNAL.

The Editor of the JOURNAL wrote the article and was alone responsible for its authorship and publication. No one else had the first thing to do about it—no one even suspected that such a piece of composition was to appear in print.

The Editor based what he said about the school house lot on what he honestly supposed to be a solid groundwork of facts. In this he was in error. His informant had been mislead, for while he supposed he was relating hardpan truth to the Editor his statement in relation to the location of the new school house on Mr. Pollard's land was erroneous. The sub-committee on the new school house had not then even held a meeting and therefore had indicated no choice of site by word or act. Irresponsible rumors were the only basis for the statement in the article that a site on Mr. Pollard's land had been selected, or strongly preferred.

"The Geographical Centre" was written in a spirit of pleasantry and ought so to have been accepted. It probably would have been so taken but for the irritating public talk that preceded its publication and officious intermeddling of people subsequently. All this assailing the ears of Mr. Pollard and Mr. Carter it naturally threw them out of humor. But with this the JOURNAL has nothing to do.

The Editor of the JOURNAL hadn't the remotest intention of wounding the feelings of anyone when he wrote and published the article: he does not now believe the article was of sufficient importance to have caused so much stir and talk, or to have disturbed anybody's equinimity; but that, seemingly, having been its effect, the Editor and author of it embraces this means and time to assure the parties aggrieved that to do them injustice was as opposite his intent as one pole is from the other.

How It Works.

EDITOR OF WOBURN JOURNAL: I have kept strict watch of the result of the no-license vote in our city. While there has been a desperate effort made by the liquor sellers to evade the law yet there has been a steady decrease in drunkenness, which the following figures show: Total arrests for all offences in June, 1890, was 18: Drunks, 11. For June, 1889, total arrests 54; Drunks, 35.

This shows one criminal under no-license this year for three under high license last year. This week I asked the Chief of Police if his force were as faithful in arresting drunken men as they were before. He said: "Certainly, if not more so."

Through the Chief's faithfulness an ex-Alderman and ex-Counciliman, together with two other liquor sellers, are now serving their sentence in Cambridge. There are more whom he expects to see lodged in the same place before many months.

Now is the time for every honest, law-abiding citizen to rally to the aid of our Chief of Police in an unbiased enforcement of the liquor law. The liquor dealers will make a strong effort to have the people believe there is more liquor sold than ever, thus boasting in their ability to defy the law in order to change the vote to license the coming fall. The facts concerning the absence of drunkenness and profane language in various parts of the city prove that no license is a great success.

Next Sunday evening I propose to tell how the illegal sales are carried on and give the names of the parties who are engaged in them.

Yours for suffering humanity,
HUGH MONTGOMERY.

The Other Side.

EDITOR OF JOURNAL: In the issue of the City Press of June 26, 1890, appeared an article headed "No Relief!" which impugned the official act of the Overseers of the Poor, and from which, if permitted to go unanswered, the public would infer that the said Overseers grossly neglect their duties. The case so highly colored by the City Press I will speak briefly of.

The family in question consists of husband, wife and two children—one 15 years old and the other 12. They have received aid for the past five years and up to June 1, 1890. During the summer months—say, June, July and August—whenever any reduction can be made, particularly where there are no young children, it has been the practice of this Board to make it when no suffering would be caused thereby. As the father of this family appeared to be physically able to labor (for I have seen him so employed), the mother took in washing, and the eldest boy, 15 years old, could earn something after school closed, it was thought they might be able to get along without any aid from the city for two or three months during warm weather—then have their aid restored. The family was able not long ago to entertain one of the inmates of the Almshouse for a week or ten days, therefore the Overseers concluded that they must have had some food to spare (even in their impoverished condition) for a man who was provided with full support by the city. Again, for the week ending June 28 the man "so used up with rheumatism" worked on the highways, and was so employed when the said article was written.

There must have been some motive of the author in going to so much trouble to make an exparte investigation, when the Overseers of the Poor were in session in their rooms at the time the farce was taking place in the City Clerk's office, and all that was necessary to be done was to step across the hallway, about ten feet, and hear what the Overseers of the Poor had to say about the case. But no, they were particularly avoided! Why?

The writer goes on to say that "we publish these particulars to call attention to the matter." Would it not have looked better if he had stepped into the room of the Overseers of the Poor with the asthmatic woman and requested them to review the case? They might have changed their verdict and Mr. Moreland thus saved his money. If they had refused to reconsider the case, then go ahead with the publication in the City Press.

The Overseers of the Poor never allow any of the poor to suffer. When a case of destitution and suffering is brought to their notice prompt action is invariably taken and that too without giving publicity to their acts. JOHN FERGUSON.

George T. Smith Sentenced.

George T. Smith of Somerville was yesterday (Wednesday) sentenced in the Superior Court at East Cambridge to three years and a half in the State Prison for burning the vacant dwelling house in Woburn belonging to John R. Carter on the night of Nov. 6, 1888. The grand jury failed to find any evidence connecting Samuel P. Smith with the matter, and he was discharged; as soon as Kendall learned of the arrest of Smith he skipped the country and it is said he is now in Europe. The insurance companies paid the loss on the house to J. R. Carter, who was an innocent victim, although they were not bound to, as he had neglected to notify the companies that the house was vacant. It is learned that Samuel P. Smith has died since the above events transpired.—Boston Paper.

Dry Goods and Carpets,

399 & 401 Main Street, Woburn.

Woburn Is All Right.

"Why don't the leather makers of Woburn," asks the JOURNAL of that city, "try to get many more of the same trade to settle there and make this city the largest leather manufacturing place in the world? They can do it." The remarks of this leather city contemporary are pertinent. Woburn has advantages and disadvantages. All of her tanners with two or three exceptions are well located and arranged for a large business. The advantages which Woburn possesses over some other localities are many. Situated within ten miles of the greatest leather city in the world, undoubtedly, the place is enabled to get the product to market at very cheap freight rates and within a very limited time. The tanners and curriers of Woburn can easily watch the market. Spur tracks lead into all the principal tanneries, and the bark is unloaded directly from the car into the bark run, thus saving double or triple handling, which does much towards reducing the cost of bark. Woburn also has the experienced help, which a more remote point or a smaller tanning center might not be able to obtain. The city possesses all the advantages of a great metropolis, with its society, schools, and libraries, and it certainly offers an inducement to tanners to locate there, rather than in the hemlock or oak forests away from these advantages. It is not likely there will ever be any trouble in obtaining the best workmen. The two disadvantages which work against the city is the higher cost of bark and hides. But it is stated the advantages getting the bark directly to the vats with little handling in a measure makes up for the eighty per cent advance in cost of bark as compared with many tanneries located in the bark districts: The freight on hides is nearly balanced by the saving of freight of the finished leather. There is no reason why Woburn should lose any of its prestige as a leather producing center for many years to come; but what it needs is more enterprise, push and energy, in meeting the competition which is springing up in other sections of the country. Every legitimate improvement should be furthered, and the business men should never "hide their light under a bushel."—Shoe and Leather Reporter.

Has it ever occurred to you that cheap fuel is more attractive to the manufacturer than exemption from taxation for a few years?

Has it ever occurred to you that the proposed new Middlesex Canal will place the Town of Billerica in close connection with the coal fields of Pennsylvania and cheap fuel?

Has it ever occurred to you that the Towns-people of Billerica exhibited very inconsiderable civic sagacity in opposing this public improvement?

"Chipman's Liver Pills

the best in the world. Never gripe or make you sick. They are purely vegetable, and will sure cure your bilious trouble. All who use them speak well of them. Sold by all druggists."

Twenty-five years ago I knew every man, woman, and child in Peekskill. It has been a study with me to mark boys who started in every grade of life with myself, to see what has become of them. I was up last fall and began to count them over, and it was an instructive exhibit. Some of them became clerks, merchants, manufacturers, lawyers, doctors. It is remarkable that every one of those that drank is dead; not one living of my age. Barring a few who were taken off by sickness every one who proved a wreck and ruined his family did it from rum and no other cause.—Chauncey M. Depew.

It is wonderful the large trade Moore & Morris are having in Brussels soap.

The Legislature.

BOSTON, June 17, 1890.

EDITOR WOBURN JOURNAL:

The Massachusetts Legislature will soon adjourn. It was remarkable for many things. It dealt with the gypsy moth, and appropriated thousands of dollars on its account. It saved the scalp of the woodchuck, and left the little beast to devour the clover in summer time and to hibernate in the winter. It left the dogs to go unmuzzled, and the sheep to shift for themselves. It measured the length of a salable lobster, and saved his carcass from being broken in two, so that the purchaser may not be cheated with two halves that do not belong together. It left the little baby trout, with his five small inches, to swim till he gets to be six inches long, and then he may be fried, poor thing! It made the feathers fly while it went after the chicken thieves, even venturing into the province of the courts to fix the penalty for the thief who gets away with five dollars' worth of fowls, and for him who steals only one dollar's worth. It trifled with the rights of the courts again in trying to settle the punishment of burglars who enter by day, and of those who enter at night. It spent much time upon butter and lard and oleo, and it pursued the English sparrow, and tried to find the weight of a dozen of eggs.

But the most remarkable action of the Legislature is found in the care it took of the right of men to vote. Hitherto, if a man changed his residence, it involved the possible loss of his right to vote at the next election. But, to save to the human male his right to vote every time, the Legislature guarded him by a law, so that no change of residence can affect his right to vote at any election.

Several gentlemen from Lowell and Lawrence and Lynn appealed to the Legislature for protection from a class of gentlemen who have a habit of changing their residence often and of never paying rent. They have the names of a thousand such "dead beats." The gentlemen who had houses to rent got no protection from these frequent movers. But all the same the "dead beat" had his right to move and to vote made safe.

Then came up the case of men "guilty of infamous crimes," with the question whether, as a punishment for these crimes, the right to vote should be withheld from the criminal for ten years. But the right of the human male to vote was respected, and even with infamous crimes upon him he can still go unquestioned and deposit his vote.

It was proposed that the men who need "assistance to mark their ballots," presumably because they cannot read well enough to distinguish the party names readily, should have the assistance of a member of their own party to help them mark their ballots, but this did not pass. Still, however, there was the poll tax which a man must pay before he could vote. But the Legislature declared by a majority vote of both branches that the paltry tax of $2 must not stand between the freeman and his right to vote. All this for men.

Now, note the different treatment this remarkable Legislature gave to women. We asked that women may vote who have no need of assistance to mark their ballots, who have not been convicted of crime, and who have been in the country long enough to understand somewhat of its institutions. We did not ask for full suffrage, but only that such women might vote for the men who would levy taxes upon their property and have the spending of their money, and that in the cities and towns where they live they might vote on questions of common interest to man and woman. But the Legislature, so tender to suffrage for men, turned its heart to stone, and the House of Representatives, by a large majority, denied to all women the smallest shred of suffrage. There was indeed "a saving remnant" who stood for equal rights for women. God bless them! But, for the others, the historian has set down their shameful action, and the recording angel will not forget it.

Then women asked that a married mother may have the same legal right to her child that its father has, so that neither parent may dispose of the custody of the child without the consent of the other. But their petition was refused.

Then they asked that when a husband or wife borrows money of the other, the obligation to pay may have the same legal validity that it would in other cases of borrowed money. But their petition was refused. Now a husband may borrow the money of his wife and never pay a cent.

They asked that a woman whose husband is dead may have more than the forty days the law now allows to a widow to stay in the house without paying rent, while she adjusts herself to her new and hard conditions, with no man to help her. But the petition was refused.

Thus this Legislature has distinguished itself. It remains to be seen whether the same men can be returned another year. Meantime we have Bunker Hill, and Concord, and Lexington, and the harbor where the tea went over. We have the memory of noble men who "pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor" for the defence of the very principle for the application of which women have sought in vain for many years. The heroes of that old time redeem their pledges with their lives. Surely, somewhere, they must have descendants who believe in representative government, who know that taxation without representation is tyranny no less to-day in the case of women, than it was in the case of George III and the colonists a hundred years ago. Where are they?

Literary Notices.

OUR LITTLE ONES for July is a fine number of one of the prettiest and best magazines for children published in America. Its publishers are the Russell Publishing Co., Boston. The current issue contains a large number of pictures that will delight the small people, and stories and poetry full of interest and that make good reading for grown folks. OUR LITTLE ONES is a very nice magazine for children.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE for July contains a large number of illustrated articles, of which Port Tarascon has 24 and Texan Types and Contrasts nearly as many. Social Life in Oxford, Baltic Russia, and A Famous Chapbook Villian also contain many pictures. It is a mid-summer number and as such is worthy of all praise as a literary and pictorial production.

The July number of THE COTTAGE HEARTH is a credit to the publishers and everybody else having had anything to with his makup. As usual it is filled with the very best of reading matter both in poetry and prose; there is a nice piece of new music in it; there are pages relating to the latest styles in the dresses of women and children; there is much useful information respecting household affairs, etc., etc., the total value of which far exceeds the cost of the magazine, as everyone who reads it will say.

We furnish THE JOURNAL ($2 a year) and THE COTTAGE HEARTH ($1.50 a year) for $2.00 payable INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE.

Mellin's Food is not the bulky, indigestible product of the miller or baker, but is the result of skilful manipulation, by careful and uniform chemical processes based upon scientific principles; it is a soluble dry powder, made from wheat and malted barley, and is the concentration of nourishing properties.

WINCHESTER.

A wedding in high life is on the tapis.

The Star just more than spreads itself this week.

Abijah Thompson, Esq., and wife expect to pass a portion of the summer at Hull.

People are coming to our great 4th of July celebration from all quarters of the country.

It is said that Mr. Spurr, lately deceased, has insurance on his life to the amount of $8,000.

The footings of the enumerators will show a big increase of the population in this return unless everybody has been guessing wild lately.

The Star says Dr. Evans (druggist) set out "flagrant Havanas" ad. lib. on the birth of an heir last week. There ought to be a law against setting out "flagrant" cigars.

This (July 4) is the big jubilee day for Winchester. Mystic Valley never saw such a celebration as ours is going to be today. All Woburn are expected to come down and help us celebrate.

The following list includes the High School graduates this year: Classical course, Edith Louisa Bishop, Mary F. Hinds, Edith J. Swett, Earnest W. Hatch, Herbert A. Rowe. English course, Elsie C. Locke, Nellie E. Smalley, Florence W. Underhill, Richard S. Sanborn; Scientific course, Albert E. McClellan; Partial course, Alice D. Homans.

GOOD SEATS. John H. Carter, Chairman of Committee on Fireworks, has had erected a spacious Grand Stand on Bacon's Field for the accommodation of those who wish to attend the Band Concerts and Fireworks at the celebration to-day which will afford everyone a full opportunity to secure good, comfortable seats for a very little money. The people will do well to make a note of this.

This is the true list of the Grammar School graduates: Lucy W. Bishop, Mary A. Boutwell, Bertha Brackett, Mabel Brooking, Carrie L. Ellard, Marion E. French, Gertrude E. Hall, Mary E. Haley, Grace F. Hawes, Edith A. Kimball, Anna S. Littlefield, Mary McGuinity, Anna K. McKenzie, Lucy M. Pratt, Alice S. Russell, Alice P. Sanborn, Hattie E. Snow, Ruth M. Taplin, Jennie Thompson, J. Donahue, Bertie A. Emerson, Henry B. Fielden, Miles A. Holbrook, Harold Huntress, Albert Littlefield, Henry M. Lyons, John F. O'Connor, Earl Richardson, George N. Robinson, John I. Sullivan, Frank C. Wilson, Walter W. Marsh, Edward W. Ray.

U. S. District Attorney Allen has appointed J. M. Marshall, Esq., of this place as Asst. Dist. Atty. The appointee is a son of Rev. B. D. Marshall, D.D., and was born in Lockport, N. Y., June 11, 1859. He was educated at the high school in Worcester, and was graduated from Brown University, in the closs of 1881, studied in the Harvard Law School, and was admitted to bar in 1885. After a year in the West, he returned and formed a law partnership with T. M. Osborne, with whom he was associated until Mr. Osborne's appointment to a position in the Superior Court. He is one of the best liked and respected among the younger members of the Suffolk bar, with an office at 54 Devonshire street.

Burlington.

Mrs. Affa Marion, the wife of Mr. E. T. Marion who died in Weymouth, June 24, was formerly a resident of this town and had many friends here who regret her early departure from this world.

The strawberry festival held in the church vestry Tuesday evening was a decided success. A large number of people attended and the tables, furnished with icecream, strawberries and cake, were well patronized. An enjoyable musical and literary entertainment was given by the young people assisted by Messrs. Haskell, Newton and Stephenson and other friends from Woburn whose musical efforts were much enjoyed.

Last Saturday afternoon the Lexington Historical Society visited the places of historic interest in Burlington. Taking the route of Hancock and Adams on the nineteenth of April, they first viewed the house of Mr. Edward Reed where the first prisoners of the Revolutionary War were kept for a time when it was owned by Capt. James Reed, an ancestor of Mr. Edward Reed. The party then proceeded to the house of Mr. Samuel Sewall, which was the retreat of Hancock and Adams with Dorothy Quincy on the eventful morning of the Battle of Lexington. It was then the home of Madam Jones, the widow of the second minister of Woburn Precinct. After a call at this house the society rode to the house of Mr. Joshua Reed one of the oldest houses in the State used as a garrison house when Indians infested the broad meadows of the Shawshine and at the time it was built one of the outposts of civilization in that direction. Here the party were most hospitably received by Mr. Joshua Reed and his wife. Mr. Reed is now verging upon his ninetieth year but is still interested in life and able to converse in an interesting manner of olden times. From this house the party guided by Rev. E. G. Porter and Mr. Lester B. Skelton took a footpath into the woods and after a short walk reached the Mecca of their pilgrimage, the site of the house of Amos Wyman where Hancock and Adams took refuge after being driven by a false alarm from the house of Madam Jones. In a little grassy clearing in the woods are still to be seen the cellar of the house filled with stones and the old well. Here the party halted and interesting accounts of the history of the places visited were given by Rev. E. G. Porter and Rev. C. A. Staples. Mr. Porter also read selections from "Henry Dunster and his Descendants"—a book of historic interest in which is recorded a sketch of the life of Rev. John Marrett, the son-in-law of Rev. Thomas Jones and his successor as minister of Woburn Precinct. Mr. Marrett was a direct descendant of Rev. Henry Dunster the first president of Harvard College. After a short time of resting during which a photograph of the place and the visitors was taken by Mr. Parsons, the party separated and adjourned to their carriages which had been left at Mr. Reed's for the homeward drive. About fifty ladies and gentlemen attended.

A New Superintendent.

Last week General Manager Furber of the Boston & Maine Railroad and its systems issued the following general order:

"Mr. William F. Simons, Superintendent of the Southern Division of the Lowell system, having tendered his resignation, to take effect July 1, Mr. Daniel W. Sanborn will, on July 1, be transferred to the position heretofore filled by Mr. Simons.

"The title "Lowell System," will hereafter be dispensed with, and the Boston & Lowell, the Nashua & Lowell, the Stony Brook, the Central Massachusetts, the Wilton, the Peterborough, and the Manchester & Keene railroads, with all other branch railroads, comprising what has heretofore been known as the "Southern Division of the Lowell System," will hereafter be known as the "Southern Division of the Boston & Maine railroad," and on and after July 1 will be under charge of Mr. D. W. Sanborn as Division Superintendent, with headquarters at Boston.

"Mr. Winslow T. Perkins is hereby appointed Division Superintendent of the Eastern Division, in place of Mr. Sanborn, transferred, and will assume the duties of his office on Tuesday, July 1, with headquarters at Boston."

Mr. Daniel W. Sanborn, the new Superintendent of the Southern Division of the Boston & Maine Railroad, is one of the best railroad men in New England. He was born in Wakefield, N. H., and entered the railroad service in 1859. He has gradually risen through the various grades, serving as master of transportation of the Eastern railroad from 1879 to 1884, when he was appointed superintendent of the Eastern division of the Boston & Maine. Away back he was one of the most faithful and popular conductors on the Eastern Railroad and at the time a resident of Portland where he was held in high regard. "Dan Sanborn's train" was as well known all over eastern Maine as it was between Portland and Boston and travelers always tried to make it in their way to hit it when going to and returning from the "Hub."

Supt. Sanborn will be likely to scrape off some of the moss which his predecessor has allowed to accumulate on the back of the B. & L. and to infuse new life, energy and get-up into its system. Our Woburn business men and passengers will find Mr. Sanborn an accommodating and courteous gentleman to deal with.

Base Ingratitude. Mrs. Baskley—"What's the matter, Henry? You look disgusted." Baskley—"Why, I gave a poor widow ten dollars on the sly to buy coal with, and she didn't tell anybody."

LAW OF THE SABBATH.

LESSON I, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 6.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xiii, 10-17—Commit Verses 15-17—Golden Text, Matt. xii, 12—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

After encouraging them with the fact that it was their Father's good pleasure to give them the Kingdom, and that therefore He would surely see to their present need in the small matters of food and raiment, He commanded them to be watchful and diligent, expecting persecution while they improved the present time of grace. He then turned to the people with an admonition to repent, and by the parable of the fruitless fig tree taught them that they were spared as a nation only because of intercession, and through the long suffering of God.

10. "And He was teaching in one of the synagogues on the Sabbath." In His early ministry we read of Him that "As His custom was, He went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day;" and although He knew so well the hypocrisy of those who taught in the synagogues, yet He does not depart from His usual custom. Because there are false teachers, and many calling themselves Christians who are only hypocrites, this is no reason why others should forsake the house of God; but simply a strong reason why those who know and love the Truth should be always in their place and stand boldly for the Truth, both in public and in private.

11. "And, behold, there was a woman which had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years." Not so bad as the man at the pool of Bethesda who had an infirmity thirty-eight years (John v, 5), but bad enough surely. In Luke v, 15; vii, 21; viii, 2, we read of many who had been healed by Him of their infirmities, and it may be that this woman had heard through some of them of His wonderful power and love, or she may have been, notwithstanding her infirmity, a regular attendant at the synagogue and a true worshiper of the One God. The word translated "infirmity" signifies also "without strength" or weakness, sickness, disease—and it is the word used in reference to our Saviour in Matt. viii, 17, where it is written: "Himself took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses." In Him is health of body and soul for all the world.

12. "And when Jesus saw her, He called her to Him, and said unto her, Woman, thou art loosed from thine infirmity." When He called, she evidently came; He is still calling "Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest;" but how few seem to come. This woman was conscious of her helplessness and earnestly desired release, therefore she came readily. Sinners, though bowed down and unable to lift themselves up, are too often unconscious of it, do not think they are sick, and therefore heed not the physician. Oh for a deep conviction of sin and a realization of our utter helplessness. Lazarus stood at the grave's mouth alive and well, but he was bound hand and foot with grave clothes so that Jesus said unto them, "Loose him and let him go" (John xi, 44). Many Christians are bound hand and foot by some besetting sin, some earthward tendencies, from which in vain they seek to free themselves, but Jesus is able, and if they only knew the meaning of "Thine is the power" they would look to Him and be set free for service.

13. "And He laid His hands on her: and immediately she was made straight, and glorified God." His word was sufficient, for "He cast out the spirit with His word;" and "By the word of the Lord were the Heavens made" (Matt. viii, 16; Ps. xxxiii, 6). His word, without His actual presence, was sufficient, as in the case of the centurion's servant and the nobleman's son (Matt. viii; John iv). Yet He often used His hands in giving forth His power, as in Luke iv, 40; v, 13; viii, 54, etc. After His resurrection and ascension we find Him in Patmos laying his right hand upon John and saying, "Fear not." To every true believer He is saying, "I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not, I will help thee." Concerning the ungodly He says, "All day long I have stretched forth my hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people" (Rev. i, 17; Isa. xli, 13; Rom. x, 21).

"And immediately she was made straight." How quickly the eighteen years' infirmity flees, and just as quickly was the man healed who was thirty-eight years sick. Neither infirmity, nor disease, nor death itself can abide in His presence, for He is The Life. That which neither skill, nor money, nor human effort can accomplish, He instantly does with a word or a touch. He is the same Jesus still and there is no necessity for any of His redeemed to be under the power of the devil (Luke x, 19).

"And glorified God." She either believed that Jesus was God or that God had given Him this power, and she glorified God for Him. Paul writes to the Galatians: "It pleased God to reveal His Son in me; and they glorified God in me" (Gal. i, 15, 16, 24). If we glorified God because of all He has done for us, our lives would be a continued thanksgiving.

14. "And the ruler of the synagogue answered with indignation." Here is a man more sick spiritually than this woman was physically. He is truly bowed down, and cannot lift himself up, but he does not know it. He is like the tree in the parable, a fruitless cumberer of the ground spared by the mercy of God. Satan in him grows indignant because some of his goods have been spoiled. A piece of work that Satan has had in hand eighteen years has been suddenly scattered to the winds, and this child of the devil grows angry.

"Because that Jesus had healed on the Sabbath day." This holy man (in his own estimation) was so jealous for the sanctity of the Sabbath day that he would not on any account have a sufferer relieved, but it was all right for him to get angry. I once saw an officer on a ferryboat rebuke a man for whistling on the Lord's day, while he himself was running his boat for ordinary traffic and collecting fares as on any other day. There is much straining out gnats and swallowing camels in religious matters.

15. "The Lord then answered him, and said, Thou hypocrite, doth not each one of you on the Sabbath loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering?" A hypocrite is one who conceals his real motives and professes to be what he is not. This man professed to have a great reverence for the Sabbath, while his real motive was his hatred of Christ. He little thought that Christ read his inmost thoughts and knew well his real motive.

16. "And ought not this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom Satan hath bound, lo, these eighteen years, be loosed from this bond on the Sabbath day?" The first verse in the New Testament calls Jesus the Son of Abraham; and Gal. iii, 16, says that "To Abraham and his seed (that is Christ) were the promises made." Here stood the seed of Abraham, the Christ, but unacknowledged, despised, hated by this hypocritical son of Abraham who gloried in the name, but was in reality no son of Abraham at all (John viii, 39). Here also is a poor afflicted woman, a true child of Abraham, yet despised by this proud Pharisee, who has been convicted by Jesus of esteeming an ox or an ass better than her.

Eupepsy.

This is what you ought to have, in fact, you must have it, to fully enjoy life. Thousands are searching for it daily, and mourning because they find it not. Thousands upon thousands of dollars are spent annually by our people in the hope that they may attain this boon. And yet it may be had by all. We guarantee that Electric Bitters, if used according to directions and the use persisted in, will bring you Good Digestion and oust the demon Dyspepsia and instal instead Eupepsy. We recommend Electric Bitters for Dyspepsia and all diseases of Liver Stomach and Kidneys. Sold at 50c. and $1.00 per bottle by H. L. Flanders & Co., Druggists.

In an investigation of the lives of seventy-four centenarians it has been stated that most of these were above average height. None had a bad digestion. Out of fifty returns where fatness or leanness were mentioned only nine individuals were fat. Out of forty-six returns fifteen took no alcohol at all, and only one is described as taking "a great deal of beer." Seven out of forty-five smoked a great deal.

THE DEAD MARCH IN SAUL.

I hear it yet, that requiem for the dead—
The roll of muffled drums, the measured beat,
Like a world's pulse, of countless marching feet
Advancing slow with loud and louder tread.
The mournful thunder crashes overhead,
And seems with far off echoes to repeat
The rumble of the cannon in the street,
Pealing the knell for him whose soul has sped.
The long procession passes on its way,
The lightning flashes faintly through the gloom,
Above the thunder's growl the charger's neigh
Comes shrill upon the wind, the cannon boom
Their last farewell, and he is left for aye
To sleep in silence in a warrior's tomb.

Gentlemen in Philadelphia.

Coming home a day or two ago the loveliest woman I have seen this season entered the car. She was a picture in her dark blue cloth suit, with its chic trimming of blue. A dainty velvet bonnet sat perched above the red gold locks, while from beneath the gauzy veil a pair of the prettiest eyes imaginable sparkled and danced. My, thought I, that will bring them to their feet sure; but not a man moved. The pretty woman hung on to the strap while three ancient dames and a one legged man received first attentions. As my beauty left the car she remarked to her companion in distinctly audible tones, "The gentlemen of Philadelphia must all ride in their carriages. Catch a Washington man if you can keeping his seat while ladies are standing."

I want to tell this spoiled young woman that Washington was not a commercial city, which makes all the difference in the world.—Dorothy Maddox in Philadelphia Inquirer.

Good Sponges Are Expensive.

Good sponges have become so expensive that they are a luxury to be enjoyed only by those well to do. Of course you can buy a reef sponge cheap, a small one costing only a few cents; but if you want a Turkey cup sponge large enough for bathing purposes you will have to pay $4 or $5. Sponges come all sizes; the largest one I ever saw measured twenty inches across. These very large sponges are likely not to be perfect, and they do not bring as good prices as smaller and better ones. The largest of the perfect kind measures about fourteen inches across the top and nine inches through, such a sponge being worth about $20. It is too large for bathing purposes, and too expensive to be used in washing carriages, and is kept by dealers for a chance customer. A good size bathing sponge is about eight inches across the top and five through and is worth $8.—Boston Globe.

Misnamed Children.

It would be a good thing if the naming of children could be postponed long enough to give those who are to name them the opportunity of learning something of their character and talents. But, alas! this can never be, as children would then have to grow up nameless. So Cecilia detests music, Lily is a brunette of the darkest type, Helen is not beautiful, Sophia is not wise, and often Mabel is not lovable. And Cecil is not dimsighted, Clarence is not illustrious, and Edwin is not a gainer of property, Felix is not happy, nor is Goddard pious, Rufus has not red hair, nor is Solomon wise.—New York Star.

Imprudent Use of Carbolic Acid.

Professor Billroth, of Vienna, has sent out another earnest warning against the imprudent use of carbolic acid, which in many cases causes an insignificant wound to become gangrenous. He says: "The use of carbolic acid is much more limited in surgery than ever before. It may not only cause inflammation and gangrene; it may kill by blood poisoning. I dissuade most emphatically the application of carbolic acid without the prescription of a physician. I recommend as the best bandage for flesh wounds acetate of lead."—New York Telegram.

Why Englishmen Walk.

I have found out why the English are such famous walkers. It is because it costs them money to sit down. I found this out the other day as I sat on a bench in Hyde park. A man in a uniform came along and demanded twopence. "What for?" I asked. "For occupying a seat," said he. "We are authorized to collect tu'pence from everybody who sits down."—Eugene Field.

Power of a Ring.

In the cathedral of Perugia is still shown a ring said to have been the wedding circlet of Mary, the mother of Jesus. The remarkable cures attributed to this wonderful little talisman were the subject of a book printed in the latter part of the Seventeenth century.—St Louis Republic.

Pain and dread attend the use of most catarrh remedies. Liquids and snuffs are unpleasant as well as dangerous. Ely's Cream Balm is safe, pleasant, easily applied into the nostrils, and a sure cure. It cleanses the nasal passages and heals the inflamed membrane, giving relief at once. Price 50c.

The most obstinate cases of catarrh are cured by the use of Ely's Cream Balm, the only agreeable remedy. It is not a liquid or snuff, is easily applied into the nostrils. For cold in the head it is magical. It gives relief at once. Price 50 cents.

GRAVEYARDS FOR INSOMNIA.

A Chicago Man Wanders at Random Through the Avenues of a Cemetery.

I was discussing with a few friends the other night the hold which certain superstitions had upon the human mind, when one of the group, a rather young man, spoke up:

"You'll laugh when I tell you my remedy for insomnia. It's nothing more nor less than a midnight trip through a graveyard.

"I live in Morgan Park, and between the Rock Island and the Grand Trunk roads, just outside the western village limits, lie Mount Greenwood and Mount Olivet cemeteries, side by side.

"So, you see, I have plenty of opportunities for dosing myself with my grewsome remedy for sleeplessness.

"I first tried the scheme one warm night in March, when I had vainly resorted to every other remedy to put myself to sleep. I got up, dressed myself and sauntered down the main thoroughfare of the village, having no particular destination in view.

"After walking half or three-quarters of a mile I neared the two cemeteries, and suddenly the idea of making a trip through one of them flashed across my brain, which was seething and bubbling as only that of a sufferer from insomnia can.

"The night was one when about half the sky was covered with clouds, and the full moon would occasionally disappear and an inky pall would suddenly descend upon everything.

"Well, I managed to effect an entrance into one of the cemeteries, and I began to wander among the gravestones and monuments, deciphering the inscriptions and reading the praises of this or that one deceased.

"I am very far from being superstitious and am not at all a believer in ghosts, and although my visit was made at 'the witching hour of midnight,' when unearthly apparitions are supposed to visit this world, my mind was soon in a wonderfully cool and calm state, and a feeling of drowsiness began to steal over my brain.

"The remedy was beginning to work. I had just made up my mind to return home when I received a momentary shock which came very near upsetting me.

"I had wandered into that portion of the cemetery where the poorer people are allowed to bury their dead, and was standing in front of a tall wooden headboard. The moon was temporarily behind a cloud and everything was dark.

"Suddenly the light came, and there appeared before me the head and shoulders of a man. The figure bore a wonderful resemblance to myself, but that fact didn't occur to me at the time.

"I was startled for the moment, and so, I dare say, would have been any man, no matter how stout his heart. A minute later I saw what it all meant.

"A large mirror had for some peculiar reason been tacked upon the cheap wooden headboard, and the returning light of the moon had suddenly flashed into my eyes the reflection of myself. I went home that night and slept like a top. I have since tried the cemetery cure a number of times and always with good results, but I don't recommend it to weak nerved people."—Chicago News.

Interviewing a Vanderbilt.

The first was Commodore Vanderbilt. I had often interviewed him before, but the most interesting talk was on an occasion when I tried to draw a great Wall street secret from him. I pressed him so hard that he made no reply at all until he had led me from his inner office out into the street. There he advanced to his carriage, and litting one foot to the step turned and at last answered me. This was how he did it:

"Young man, how much do you get a week?"

I told him.

"You are worth more," said he. "Take my advice and leave the newspaper business before you get set in its ways and can't do anything else. Go into mercantile life. This fooling away your time with the paper business is all right while you're young, but you won't make any more when you're gray than you do now. Take my advice; good day."—Julian Ralph in Chatter.

A Poor Boy's Faith.

Another London schoolboy, a child of poverty, showed that he felt the sentiment of poetry. The subject of his composition being "Flowers," the boy described the wonders of the country where flowers "grow wild in the fields and not in skwares and rounds.

"Nobody believes it till they go in the train. You can pull as many as you like and fill your baskets, and carry home to your fathers and mothers. And the teacher said that if we could only go the next day there would be just as many flowers again. Some boys would not believe what the teacher said, but I did, for God can easy do miracles. When I am a man I shall go the next day."—Youth's Companion.

Workmen while excavating in a lot near the McClellan house, Gettysburg, dug up the remains of a Union soldier, several Union buttons establishing the fact. The bones were taken to the National cemetery for reinterment. A number of teeth filled with gold were also found. It is said that the lot in which the body was buried was occupied at the time of the battle by an embalming establishment.

Card of Thanks.

I hereby desire to extend to all of my friends my thanks for the many kindnesses extended to me during my past illness of over three months from rheumatism, and I especially desire to tell them that but for Sulphur Bitters I should have been suffering still. At Bahrin, which is about the hottest part of the earth, no water can be obtained from digging wells to a depth of 500 feet in many cases, but, thanks to copious springs which break forth in the waters of the Persian Gulf, over a mile from shore fresh water is obtained by divers, who fill goatskin bags with the cooling liquid and sell it to the inhabitants.

A GIGANTIC HORSE.

A Queer Monster That Has Existed in England for Over 1,000 Years.

About two miles to the north of Lambourne, in Berkshire, England, is White Horse hill, on the summit of which there is a large Roman entrenchment called Uffington castle. A little below the castle on the steep side of the hill facing the northwest is the figure of a gigantic white horse, the dimensions of which extend over about an acre of ground. Its head, neck, body and tail consist of one white line, as does also each of its four legs. The outlines of this monstrous specimen of the genus equu are formed by cutting trenches in the chalk, of which the hill is mainly composed, the ditches being 2 or 3 feet in depth and about 10 feet wide. The chalk of the trench being of a beautiful white color, and the surrounding turf the greenest of green, the figure of the horse can be plainly seen at a distance of twelve miles, and even farther, it is said, if the sun is shining brightly.

A white horse is known to have been the standard of the Saxons, and some have supposed that this monster emblematic figure was made by Hengist, one of the Saxon kings. Mr. Wise, an author who has written much of the celebrated white horse of Berkshire, brings several arguments to prove that this figure was made under order of Alfred during the reign of Ethelred, his brother, and that the figure is a monument to a victory over the Danes in the year 871. Other well known writers are of the opinion that the wonderful white horse is a natural freak, one of nature's oddest oddities. Ashmead-Burton thinks that the early tribes noted the outlines of a horse on the hillside and gradually worked it into its present graceful symmetry.

However this may be, it has been a custom since time out of memory for the neighboring peasants to assemble on a certain day of each year, usually about midsummer, to clear away the weeds from the White Horse and trim the edges of the trench so as to preserve the color and shape. This task is known for miles around as "Scouring the Horse."

A large mound at the foot of White Horse Hill and almost directly under the "Horse" is called Dragon Hill. Here, according to tradition, St. George killed the dragon. On the top of this mound, or "barrow," there is a space about fifty yards square upon which not a spear of grass has grown during the last thousand years. The peasants say that the grass cannot grow on account of the ground having been poisoned with the dragon's blood at the time St. George gave him the fatal wound.—St. Louis Republic.

"Down on the Nail."

This is a well known half slang phrase used for a cash payment. Of its history I cannot speak, but I confess to feeling startled when I found it, as it seems to me, in a parliamentary deed of King Robert the Bruce. By indenture dated July 15, 1326 (Scots Acts I, 476), a tenth penny was covenanted for, payable to the king. On his part he agreed not to exact certain prises and carriages unless he was passing through the realm, after the custom of his predecessor, Alexander III, "for which prises and carriages full payment should be made super unguem." (The words are, "Pro quibus prisis et cariagiis plena flat solucio super unguem.")

I am aware of the classical use of the phrase "in unguem," or "ad unguem," signifying "to a nicety," but it does not seem to apply here. At the same time the corresponding French phrase "payer rubis sur l'ongle" may make this doubtful. Just below the passage cited occurs another, in which payment is to be made "in manu." Both in my opinion refer to ready money, and I do not hesitate to translate "super unguem" "down on the nail." Hitherto I have supposed the nail to be a figure of speech for the counter on which the coin was told. Apparently this is erroneous, as it is clearly the finger nail which is referred to.—Notes and Queries.

Old Fashioned Parsons.

The old fashioned country parsons of the English church lived more on the social level of the farmers and yeomen than of the squires, though in many cases they were men of culture. The Rev. S. Baring-Gould tells an anecdote of a parson of this class who was invited to spend two days with a great squire some miles from the parsonage.

He went, stayed his allotted time and disappeared. Two days later the lady of the house, happening to go into the servants' hall in the evening, was amazed to find her late guest there. After he had finished his visit upstairs he had accepted the invitation of the butler to spend another two days below.

"Like Persephone, madam," he said apologetically, "half my time above, half in the nether world."—Youth's Companion.

A Bootblack's Secret.

It has been noticed for some time that a certain Washington bootblack was more prosperous than his fellows. He loafed less on the street corners. He seemed always to be going somewhere; he was always busy.

"Dat's a secret," the little Afro-American would remark when his competitors asked him how he got so much work.

It was useless for them to follow him. They could not get his formula out of him by kicks or cuffs. Spies had their trouble for their reward. Nothing short of dollars and cents and a business transaction could worm from him his golden sesame to prosperity.

At last twenty ragamuffins as a joke each dropped a nickel in the hat and told the young Napoleon of the street it would be his if he would tell, and he agreed to if he could have his nickels in his fist.

"Co'se yo' kin," said a big boy. "'Cause we'll lick ye if yo' lie and ketch ye if yo' run."

"Snuthin' 'tall," said Napoleon, when all the arrangements were completed, "than puttin' scent in my blackin'. I buys five cents worth of ile of cloves an' mixes it with the black, an' gemmen like it better'n they does the smell of m'lasses black. A lady up on Connecticut avenoo tole me how when she called me in t' black her little boy's shoes"——

The recital was ended with a whoop from twenty throats and forty legs were scrambling toward the nearest drug store where oil of cloves might be had, while the Napoleon stood contemplating the twenty nickels for which he had parted with the secret of his undue prosperity.—Washington Letter.

In a Boston Street Car.

In a crowded Columbus avenue car Saturday evening. A stout woman, radiant in silks and diamonds, and with a florid complexion, denoting health or rouge, enters. Directly in front of where she stands sits a slim, pale youth with "consumption" written in every line of his careworn face.

The car sways to and fro and the woman sways with it. Each time she approaches his side of the car she almost smothers the young man in her furbelows. She looks down upon him from her stately height with a scornful air which says plainly, "Why are you not gentleman enough to give up your seat to me?"

He finally succumbs, evidently thinking it preferable to stand than have his life crushed out, and resigns his seat. A grayheaded old gentleman, with "solid man of Boston" stamped upon him has been watching the proceedings. As alert as a boy he springs to his feet. "Take my seat, my boy," he says, half kindly, half irascibly. "I'm far better able to stand than you are. As for that woman she looks strong enough to carry the car."—Boston Record.

The Indians of San Blas.

The San Blas Indian is not such a bad specimen of the human race as might be supposed, when it is remembered that his ancestors were wont to rub themselves well with cocoanut oil and roll in the sand to complete their attire before attending a state dinner or an inauguration ball on the elevation of a brave to a chieftainship. They have become somewhat civilized since then. They appear to be a cross between the North American Indian and the negro. They are large and well formed men, for the most part, possessing splendid teeth and fairly intelligent faces. Their chief industry is gathering cocoanuts. While they are not fond of work, traders who visit them say they are far more energetic than the North American Indians, and can always be relied upon to carry out any task which they agree to perform.—Cor. New York Commercial Advertiser.

Bidding for a Lost Pocketbook.

Not long ago I went to the business place of an auctioneer to see the sights, and while there I lost my pocketbook, containing $230. I told the auctioneer about it, and requested him to announce that I would give $100 for its return. The auctioneer stated my proposition. Then I heard a drawling voice from away over in the corner say, "I'll give $125." They were still bidding on it when I left.—Interview in Louisville Times.

An experiment with electricity for tanning purposes was lately made in England. The process was accomplished in a revolving drum twelve feet in diameter and eight feet long, rotating at eight revolutions a minute. Turpentine and tannic acid were used to saturate the hides, and a strong current of electricity was caused to flow from a metal band which runs around the interior of one end of the drum to a corresponding band on the other end. The drum, after revolving five days, was opened, and the leather appeared to be of excellent quality.

When Feeling "Out of Sorts"

Is a common expression, indicating a slight derangement, usually of the nerves, though it is difficult, sometimes, to locate the exact seat of the complaint. It may be taken for granted, however, that the blood needs to be invigorated, and that a bottle or two of Ayer's Sarsaparilla would soon restore the system to its normal condition.

"I have lately been a sufferer from nervousness and dyspepsia. After taking two bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, I feel as well and strong as ever."—Wm. C. Rose, North Dighton, Mass.

"My wife has been in poor health for a long time. After having tried almost all the medicines prominently advertised, I bought Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has proved its superiority to all others by producing a marvelous improvement in her health."—Lorenzo S. Huggles, Auburn, Me.

"Last winter, in consequence of overwork, my system became very much disordered. I suffered from debility, loss of appetite, and indigestion; was nervous, troubled with lost flesh rapidly, and, before the winter was over, manifested every symptom of a decline. Early in May I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and seemed to improve from the first dose. I continued using this medicine, regularly, for nearly two months, at the end of which time my weight had increased over twenty pounds, and I was in perfect health."—William N. Bowker, Erie, Pa.

Sleeplessness,

"Through the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla by the younger members of my family, I believe, and so do they, that their health has been improved. It has also made their complexions clearer through its effects on the blood. This is the simple truth, and it may gratify you to hear it. I have no hesitation in recommending Ayer's Sarsaparilla either in public or private."—Morris Phillips, Editor The Home Journal, New York City.

"About two years ago I was prostrated with nervous debility, so that I was hardly able to do anything. No doctoring did me any good. Finally, I tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and was soon restored to health."—J. B. Mohn, Shiloh, Ohio.

Art More Than Appearance.

A very good story is told of a prominent musician. A young lady went to him for a course of "finishing off" lessons.

"Let's see what you can do," said the teacher, and placed before her a simple air of Mozart's.

She played a few bars and was interrupted.

"Take off your rings," said the great man.

A few more bars and another interruption.

"Take off your bracelets."

A little further on she was stopped again.

"Your sleeves are too long. I want to see your wrists."

The pupil pinned up her sleeves with a face on fire. At last she succeeded in finishing the selection.

"Do you want me to teach you?" the instructor asked, as she took her hands from the keys.

"Yes, sir."

"Very well. Come to me to-morrow at this time, without jewelry and in some sort of a dress that you can breathe in. I don't know at all how you have played this aria, because of the rattling of gewgaws and the distressing noise you have made in getting your breath. A musician thinks first of his art and last of appearances."

The Newest Thing in Thievery.

The newest thing in Inspector Byrnes's line was developed when Detective Wolf brought in Antonio Frosnello, a lad young in years, but evidently precocious in crime.

Antonio is an Italian, fourteen years old. He lives at 102 Mott street, and for a living blacks passengers' boots on the South Ferry line of boats.

Sunday afternoon young Antonio sauntered into T. Goldesman's photographic gallery, 381 Canal street, and told the artist that he wanted to sit for his picture. The lad was attired in his best Sunday clothes, but his appearance was not in keeping with the importance of the event. He said that the picture was to be a present to his sweetheart, a Neapolitan beauty, and he wanted to appear at his very best. He asked the photographer to loan him his watch and chain for the occasion.

All unsuspecting, the photographer did so. The picture was taken, and the operator went into the dark room, leaving Antonio alone. When he came out the boy had gone, and with him the gold watch chain and medals attached, worth $200.—New York Sun.

A Grand Jury in New Jersey recently tried to subpœna a Judge who had sharply criticised the conduct of the jurors, but he would not go. He wrote to them that he deemed it improper for a Judge to be a witness in a case before a Grand Jury which he may afterward be called to try. The Grand Jury will now endeavor to present him for contempt to a Judge of the Supreme Court.

According to the statements filed with the Bureau of Industrial Statistics at Harrisburg, it is shown that 261,600 members of building and loan associations in Pennsylvania have laid aside for a rainy day over $26,000,000. As a large amount of this sum goes into the purchase of permanent homes for the people, Pennsylvania might be considered one of the first States of property owners.

The people of Harlow Cove, Newfoundland, were reduced to the extremity of eating the bodies of old seals to save their lives. The fisheries failed last season, and a vessel with supplies sent to their relief found the coast blockaded with ice and had to return to St. John's. They were cut off from the outer world for seven months and were reduced to the verge of starvation.

SULPHUR BITTERS

THE BEST AND GREATEST MEDICINE

It will drive the Humor from your system, and make your skin clean and smooth. Those Pimples and Blotches which mar your beauty are caused by impure blood, and can be removed in a short time, if you are wise and use the great blood purifier,

SULPHUR BITTERS.

Why suffer with Headache? Why have that terrible Backache? Why let your nerves get all run down? Your nerves are all right when you take Sulphur Bitters. What makes you tremble so? Your nerves are all starved for want of nourishment, and need a gentle soothing tonic to assist nature to repair the damage which your excesses have caused. Sulphur Bitters is not a cheap rum or poor whiskey drink, to be sold by the glass like other nerve drinks, but is composed of the choicest roots, barks and herbs, combined with the active principle of Sulphur, in such proportions as to make it Nature's Great Nerve Restorative.

SULPHUR Bitters

The Dose is small—only a Teaspoonful. It is the best and cheapest medicine. Try it, and you will be satisfied. Get it of your druggist. DON'T WAIT, GET IT AT ONCE.

WHO HAS NOT HAD POOR HOSE?

Do not waste your money on inferior hose, but get the "SPIRAL"

300 lbs. PRESSURE

The Spiral Hose is the only reliable Cotton Hose which is proven by there being so many imitations. The genuine has FOUR distinguishing mark:

I. A black line running through it.
II. The patent mark "SPIRAL," patented March 30, 1880.
III. The Corrugated band fastening hose to coupling.
IV. Corrugated coupling as shown in cut.

The "Spiral" Cotton Hose, having no outside covering to hold moisture as rubber hose does, dries like a towel. Insist on getting this Hose, as some dealers will try to sell an inferior one.

Sample free if you mention this paper.

Pianos-Organs.

The improved methods of fastening strings of Pianos, invented by us, is one of the most important improvements ever made, making the instrument more richly musical in tone, more durable, and less liable to get out of tune.

Both the Mason & Hamlin Organs and Pianos excel chiefly in that which is the chief excellence in any musical instrument, quality of tone. Other things, though important, are much less so than this. An instrument with unmusical tones cannot be good. Illustrated catalogues of new styles, introduced this season, sent free.

MRS. WINTERS' TRIUMPH.

Poor little Mrs. Winters! She had committed an act which had placed her name in the mouths of her country neighbors for miles around. She might have seen the result had she stopped to consider that phase of the matter, but her mind had been so absorbed in another feature of the outcome as to cause her to overlook all minor points. Besides she had intended to keep her secret to herself for the time. But secrets are slippery things at the best. And it had been said of the neighborhood in question that if a choice bit of gossip should be whispered to some tiny pebble on the most distant mountain top and left there for safe keeping, the depositor would find it the common topic on his return.

No wonder then that Mrs. Winters' secret had leaked out. At first it had been cautiously whispered from mouth to mouth with the strictest injunction that it go no further until complete evidence in the matter could be obtained.

"It can't be possible!"

"Mrs. Winters is a woman of too much good sense to do such a thing!"

"I'll never believe it till I hear it from her own lips!"

Such had been the charitable expressions with which the news had been received. But the matter had, at length, been taken to the lady herself, and she, with some reluctance, had acknowledged the truth of the charge. Unlike the usual tale of the gossiper, the facts were up to the strongest reports. No one had had the heart to indulge in the least exageration. Now Mrs. Winters had numerous calls from her quizzical neighbors, who freely criticised what they regarded as her folly.

The pleasant character of Mrs. Winters made her universally esteemed, yet she could hardly claim to be "one" with the people of Rutville, on account of the short time she had lived among them. Four years previous she had moved there with her husband and three children. The husband dying soon after, the management of the farm had fallen into the hands of the widow, and the support of the family depended wholly on whatever income she could make it yield.

The neighbors proved themselves kind and sympathetic in her affliction, and advice poured in torrents on the lone woman concerning the management of the place. But this counsel, coming from so many different sources, was so conflicting it had a tendency to confuse rather than assist her.

It was quite a universal idea in the neighborhood that a woman was incapable of such an undertaking as the management of a farm, and many urged her to sell and engage in a more womanly pursuit. But Mrs. Winters had a different opinion from this, and by the employment of much earnest thought she kept the farm running at a moderate degree of prosperity. The home was neatly kept, the children comfortably clothed, and when two years had passed the manager was free from debt. This was a source of much surprise to her neighbors, who had made grave predictions as to the outcome of her farming.

But Mrs. Winters was not satisfied with this. She had plans for her children's future that would need money in carrying them out; hence her mind was constantly on the alert for something with which she could start an extra fund for such a purpose.

The country neighborhood in which she lived was well back among the mountains of New England. Each generation followed in the footsteps of its predecessor, regardless of new ways and improvements introduced by the world outside. The people, their flocks and herds, their hogs and poultry could all be traced back for many generations without crossing the town line in the locating of an ancestor. Few, indeed, were innovations among them; fewer still were those invited or even tolerated without passing through the crucial test of their severe criticism. The movements of the Winters had been suspiciously watched when they first came, but the favorable impression had continued so long that the people had almost accepted this family in full fellowship. But the recent act of the young widow had reawakened the feeling that she was not by birth a Rutvillite, and could not be relied upon to act as one of their own.

But what had this lady done to call forth such severe condemnation from her neighbors? There are slumbering laws laid away in dust—covered books in those regions whose resurrection is as rare as the century plant. Had she violated or treated with disrespect some one of those? Or was it some rigid moral or religious code that her busy foot had turned aside to trample upon? No her sin was found in none of these.

The grave misdemeanor of the unfortunate woman was just this. She had made an investment wholly outside of the usual range of Rutville purchases. She had paid six dollars, including express charges, for only fifteen eggs. True, it was claimed for them that they had been laid by a fine strain of fowls of the Plymouth Rock variety. But what of that? They were nothing but hen's eggs; and not a dweller in Rutville would have paid more than twenty cents for the lot. Long before the thirteen original states had formed a glorious Union and nestled beneath the protecting wing of a motherly administrator it was an established rule of that place that thirteen was the number of eggs to place under a sitting hen, and never since that early period had a Rutville hen been insulted with either more or less.

It has already been stated that Mrs. Winters had frequent condoling criticisms from her well meaning neighbors on this investment, which they regarded as an extremely foolish, extravagant whim. A few samples of these remarks will give an idea what an up hill road it was to progression in Rutville.

"I'd a gin you a settin' of aigs an' welcome," were the words of kind hearted old Mrs. Brown. "I'd a gin you two or three settin's for that matter if I'd a knowed you wanted ter go to raisin' poultry. It's too awful bad ter send so fer and pay so much, and after all mebbe won't none of 'em hatch."

"When I make an investment," pompously remarked Farmer Doolittle, "I wanter know what I'm gittin' of. When a man has had a flock of fowls all his life, an' his father and gran'father before him, he knows purty well what they be."

"Durin' the first year of Washington's administration," began Mrs. Pettigree, "there was jest an even dozen hens on our place. Grandpa Pettigree kep' an account of the aigs laid, and I wanter tell you what them hens done that year." And then for the one hundredth time she related the remarkable story, and ended by saying that the fowls now on the place came in unbroken descent from that same ancient, remarkable flock. Like many people who boast of their family lineage, she had nothing to say of the present.

To willfully select some new fangled kind of fowl in preference to their choice, ancient birds was an insult to every true Rutvillite. Having been committed, however, by an unprotected, well meaning woman, the majority were inclined to look upon it as a mistake, and to pity rather than censure the offender.

Meanwhile, the old hen that sat with such patience on the eggs little dreamed of the commotion she had caused, or of the deep interest her mistress felt in the result of her task. But one thing she did which might have been a lesson to many of her owner's neighbors—she attended strictly to her own business. The result was that she came off her nest at the proper time with eleven chicks, active little fellows, all alike. They had the best of care and grew both in stature and points of beauty in a manner that made the mistress proud of her venture. Even the neighbors, for they were honest at heart, could not help admiring the handsome young brood.

It was a disappointment to the owner, as time passed on, to find that but four of the number were pullets. She was at a loss what to do with so many male birds. They were too valuable to be sacrificed for food, and she well knew there would be no sale for them in her locality. One of her neighbors at length became sufficiently friendly to these intruding fowls as to offer to exchange a hen for one of the young roosters; Mrs. Winters courteously declined this generous proposition.

Toward fall, when the young fowls were several months old, they were as handsome a brood as the most critical fancier need care to possess. It was Mrs. Winters' plan to keep a superior grade of fowls, and for both birds and eggs obtain a correspondingly high price. Just how to most advantageously reach an appreciative market was the question which puzzled her. Her limited means would not permit of much advertising and there was no prospect of a local trade.

She was reading the county paper one evening, which contained an account of the fair with premium list, to be shortly held in a distant part of the county, where the people were of more progressive mind. Among the premiums offered was one of five dollars for the best coop of fine fowls. Instantly Mrs. Winters thought of her own fine birds and of the good opportunity this would be to display them. But there was the difficulty she would encounter in getting her birds to the fair. It was a day's journey from her home; if she should go, there was the impediment of leaving her home and children. However, the idea would not forsake her that this was an opportunity that she would improve, and she determined to make the effort. She engaged a near neighbor to attend to her place; left her two younger children with a friend, and, accompanied by her eldest child, a boy of 12, she undertook the long journey.

With the aid of her son she had constructed two neat coops. One was for her exhibition fowls, in the other she put her surplus roosters which she intended to offer for sale, hoping to dispose of them at a better price than she could obtain in her neighborhood.

There would be too much injustice in the fate that directs our lives, if such hope, determination and industry as characterized Mrs. Winters should go unrewarded. Yes, though criticised and laughed at by her neighbors, success was at last to be hers. Her fowls were by far the finest at the fair, taking the premiums offered; and the five surplus roosters found appreciative buyers at the handsome sum of $2 each; giving the happy widow $15 as a result of her trip to the fair.

It is useless to describe the feelings of victory that Mrs. Winters enjoyed on her return home. The neighbors were astounded. Mrs. Winters' success was the sole topic of conversation for a fortnight, and rapidity with which her fowls grew in popularity was something surprising. The prejudice of her neighbors so far subsided that in less than three years every flock of fowls in the neighborhood had this new blood. Mrs. Winters commenced her poultry business as an offshoot to the farm operations. At present it is her main business, and a thriving one, too. But few farmers of Rutville are more prosperous than the slender little woman who dared to have a mind of her own and step outside of the rut, even though living in the depths of Rutville.—Nellie Burns in Springfield Homestead.

How to Cure Social Ills.

Rev. S. J. Barrows, editor of the Christian Register, said in a recent address:

We have several kinds of cures for political and social ills. We have a salt cure. Salt keeps things from spoiling; it is the type of the respectable conservative. Lot's wife was of this type. Salt is a good thing, but when you have about ninety-eight per cent of it in your composition, you are apt to become a little fixed. I believe in a certain amount of salt; but the trouble with a good deal of the salt in our politics is that it has lost its savor, and is fit only to be trodden under foot of men. Another cure is the smoke cure. A good deal of our legislation begins with smoke and ends in smoke. It begins in tobacco smoke and ends in legislative smoke. If you put in a proposition for woman suffrage, it is very apt to end in smoke. I have noticed that if you take a ham and smoke it through and through, it loses its power of locomotion; and that is the trouble with our Legislature; it has been smoked through and through. Another cure is the spirit cure. Go to the Agassiz Museum, and there you will find a great many bottles filled with alcohol, and in them are all sorts of creatures, disagreeable looking specimens with long names. It reminds me of my experiences in New York when I used to attend the ward caucus. You would find there a great array of bottles, for it was nearly always held in a saloon; and you would also find a great many disagreeable-looking specimens; but the difference between the museum and the caucus was that in the museum most of the alcohol was outside of the specimens, and in the ward caucus most of the specimens were outside of the alcohol. Now, I believe in the sugar cure. Woman suffrage is simply the formation of a sugar trust, only it is a trust without any monopoly. We want the sweetness of woman,—her moral sweetness and purity—to sweeten not only the home, but society and government as well.

Miss Kate Marsden has been awarded the insignia of the Russian Red Cross, by the Empress, at Gatchina. She is one of five English sisters who went to nurse the Russian sick and wounded in Bulgaria.

The Woman's Liberal Federation of England will present a memorial to Mr. Gladstone asking him to include the granting of the franchise to women in the programme of issues to be settled at the next general election for members of Parliament.

The Boston Globe comments approvingly upon the recent meeting of the Association of Women Ministers, and says it is time that the women should do a little more of the preaching and the men a little more of the practising. That is the situation in a nutshell.

Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant has given 159 speeches and sermons since her arrival in this country on Feb. 8, 1890. During anniversary week she made eighteen addresses in Boston and vicinity, and she is about to sail for home, still in good health and spirits.

Mlle. Bibesco, a young Roumanian lady, is soon to deliver a thesis before the Faculty of Law in Paris, in order to obtain the diploma of Doctor of Law. Her subject will be "The Condition of the Married Woman and Widow, according to the Code Civil and the Code Napoleon."

Mrs. H. S. Lane, a sister of Mrs. Lew Wallace, is contributing an interesting series of papers to The Home Magazine, entitled "A Trip to Hebron." They are notes of travel in the Holy Land, which she visited with her sister and General Wallace while he was minister to Turkey. Owing to special courtesy, shown to the American Minister, they enjoyed privileges never before extended to Christian travellers by Mohammedan authorities.

Miss Nordhoff, a daughter of Mr. Charles Nordhoff, of Washington, D. C., having a strong taste for bookbinding, lately went to England to apprentice herself to a well-known binder there, only to find that, not belonging to a trades-union, she could nowhere learn the secrets of the craft. Returning to America, the same difficulty confronted her. But by dint of dogged perseverance she has at last conquered a place, and is studying her art from its beginnings to its finest results.

Literary Notices.

Raising the Schoolhouse Flag is the title of a full page illustrated poem by Hezekiah Butterworth in the 4th of July Double Number of THE YOUTH'S COMPANION. This noble poem expresses the sentiments of the many thousands of schoolboys and girls who have been working for a Flag to be raised over their own schoolhouses. The name of the school in each State, and that of the successful writer of the essay which won the Flag recently offered by THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, are given in this number.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY for July is brimful of good things. It contains a great mass of valuable reading on various sciences "made easy" by treating them in a popular manner, among which are an illustrated account of Greenland and the Greenlanders; a very interesting paper by President Jordan of the University of Indiana on the Evolution and Distribution of Animals; a valuable contribution by Miss M. W. Brooks on Insect Pests of the House and a score or more of others of equal importance. POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY is published by D. Appleton & Co., N. Y.

The numbers of LITTELL'S LIVING AGE for June 28th and July 5th contain Greater Britain, Quarterly; The Great Equatorial Forest of Africa, and A Glance at Contemporary Greece, The Law in 1847 and the Law in 1889, and Brought Back from Elysium, Great and Big, Life in Damascus, Characteristics of Russian Literature, and The Romance of History, William Lithgow, Across the Cordillera, from Chili to Buenos Ayres, On the Character of Nero, A Nordfjord Wedding, The Horses of the Pampas, and Kaffir Humor, Court Functions, Notes of a Pilgrimage; with instalments of Marcia and Without Benefit of Clergy, and poetry. For fifty-two numbers of sixty-four large pages each the subscription price ($8) is low. Littell & Co., Boston, are the publishers.

The July ST. NICHOLAS has several reminders of Revolutionary days and the glorious Fourth. The Baby a Prisoner-of-War relates the capture and return of a grandniece of Washington. Julia C. R. Dorr tells in verse of The Armorer's Errand, Laura E. Richards and Jane Ellis Joy contribute amusing verse about the Fourth. Mrs. Pennell writes of Cycling, F. W. Pangborn tells How to Sail a Boat, and Edward Burgess has made for ST. NICHOLAS readers complete working-drawings of a boy's sail-boat. H. W. Henshaw contributes a study of the commoner American hawks. A most natural and amusing little story is How Hugh Went to the Party. There are illustrated poems by Anna M. Pratt, Harriet Prescott Spofford, Oliver Herford, Margaret Johnson, Katherine Pyle, and Mrs. Richards; continued stories and sketches; and the departments.

To be known as constantly doing good, as a rich man who holds his riches in trust for the benefit of others, as the friend of every humane enterprise, as the proprietor of one of the great and most prosperous newspapers in the country, and as the friend of the most distinguished persons of his time, is the happy fortune of Mr. George W. Childs, of Philadelphia. The recollections of such a life are necessarily full of interest. His little volume of Recollections, just published by the Lippincott Company, is rich with reminiscences of famous persons and accounts of exceedingly interesting possessions, and of public gifts and delightful occasions, all pervaded with the spirit of the generous giver who is sure to double his generosity by giving quickly. Artists always paint themselves in their pictures, and Mr. Childs has unconsciously given us himself in his book.—George W. Curtiss.

Among the contributors to THE ARENA for July are Senator Wade Hampton of South Carolina, O. B. Frothingham, Rabbi Solomon Schindler, Rev. Carlos Martyn, D. D., Junius Henri Browne, Hamlin Garland, H. O. Penticost, Rev. Minot J. Savage, Hon. A. B. Richmond, Frances E. Willard, and Gen. Marcus J. Wright. The No-Name paper in the July ARENA is a poem entitled Progress and Pain. It is said to be written by one of the most accomplished essayist of America. In the number is a complete drama entitled Under the Wheel, written by the talented young Boston artist, Hamlin Garland. It is something more than an entertaining social drama—a strong moral purpose lies behind it, or rather may be said to have inspired it. Bismarck and his time, is the subject of a very able and entertaining sketch by Rabbi Schindler in THE ARENA. The learned Rabbi having spent the greater part of his life under the German sky, brings to the subject an actual knowledge of the condition of German affairs since the iron chancellor came in power.

Perhaps the most striking feature of the July CENTURY is the long-expected debate on the The Single Tax, by Edward Atkinson and Henry George. Mr. Atkinson opens the discussion in a paper on A Single Tax upon Land; Mr. George replies in A Single Tax on Land Values, and there is a rejoiner by Mr. Atkinson. Another article that marks this number of THE CENTURY is the beginning of THE CENTURY'S Prison Series, the first paper being a thrilling account of the life of A Yankee in Andersonville, by Dr. T. H. Mann, accompanied by a plan, and pictures made from rare photographs. Dr. Edward Eggleston in an illustrated article tells the story of Nathaniel Bacon, the Patriot of 1676. Joseph Jefferson, in his charming Autobiography, describes his early experiences in Peru and Panama; he also tells how he revived the play of Rip Van Winkle, in London, with the literary assistance of Dion Boucicault. Mrs. Amelia Gere Mason describes the Women of the French Salons of the 18th Century; and the engraver Cole presents us with one of his most exquisitely engraved blocks—the frontispiece of the number. The Editorial Topics are: On Lack of Conscience as a Means of Success, New-York's Reformed Electoral System, A Recent Sermon, and Tom-Toms in Politics. There is an Open Letter on The Inside Facts of Lincoln's Nomination.

Forced To Leave Home.

Over 60 people were forced to leave their homes yesterday to call at their druggists for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicines. The ladies praise it. Everyone likes it. Large size packages 50 cents.

A Wonder Worker.

Mr. Frank Huffman, a young man of Burlington, Ohio, states that he had been under the care of two prominent physicians, and used their treatment until he was not able to get around. They pronounced his case to be Consumption and incurable. He was persuaded to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds and at that time was not able to walk across the street without resting. He found, before he had used half a dollar bottle, that he was much better; he continued to use it and is to day enjoying good health. If you have any Throat, Lung or Chest Trouble try try it. We guarantee satisfaction. Trial bottle free at H. L. Flanders & Co. Drug-store.

The Great Benefit

Which people in run down state of health derive from Hood's Sarsaparilla, conclusively proves that this medicine "makes the weak strong." It does not act like a stimulant, imparting fictitious strength, but Hood's Sarsaparilla builds up in a perfectly natural way all the weakened parts, purifies the blood, and assists to healthy action those important organs, the kidneys and liver.

For the first time in its history, the Boston Dental College graduated a woman. This year's graduate who has that honor is said to lead her class and to be the recipient of several prizes.

The inestimable value of Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a blood-purifier should be known to every wife and mother. It corrects irregularities, gives tone and strength to the vital organs, and cleanses the system of all impurities. The best family medicine.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

All Advertisements, to insure insertion in this paper, must be handed in as early as 10 o'clock on Thursday forenoon.

THE LEGISLATURE.

At the close of a six months session the Massachusetts General Court adjourned for good at half past 11 o'clock, p. m., on July 1. The unusual length of the term ought to teach the people that biennial sessions of the Legislature of this State can't come a minute too soon. Not only are biennial sessions demanded by the best interests of the Commonwealth, but sessions should be limited in duration to 90 days. The appearance of questionable methods, if not actual corruption, among our law-makers is due almost entirely to frequent and long sessions and the sooner the constitutional change is made the better it will be for the people.

This Legislature was in session 183 days, exceeding in that respect all other Legislatures excepting that of 1883, which was prolonged until July 27, covering 206 days. There have been passed this year 456 acts and 79 resolves, and but one veto has been received from the Governor.

BOSTON'S POPULATION.

The good people of the "Hub" are crowing lustily over the increase which the city has made in population since 1880, and well they may. Chief Wadlin estimates the number of people in Boston at 437,200, and some of the Assessors place it at 40,000 or 50,000 above that.

The gain from 1880 is 75,000, or very close to it. When the fact is taken into account that the suburbs have been growing rapidly, especially in the last five years, at Boston's expense her growth in the last decade is a matter over which her citizens have a right to crow.

☞ Last Wednesday this office received a copy of "The Cambridge Tribune Souvenir" which on examination we found to be something well worth preserving. It is the product of a piece of enterprise on the part of Mr. F. Stanhope Hill, publisher of the Cambridge Tribune, well deserving of imitation and much praise. The "Souvenir" is a 34-page paper, or book, with an artistically designed cover, containing local sketches, historical and descriptive, written by several of the most eminent of the literati of the University City, the same being illustrated with more than 100 finely executed pictures, including portraits of distinguished citizens, the new Harvard Bridge, Harvard College buildings, Longfellow's house, scenes at Mount Auburn, churches and other public edifices. The publication is a valuable as well as handsome one and deserves to be carefully preserved for future use.

☞ Last Monday morning the Boston Herald announced the result of the Herald scholarship competion for prizes worth $1000 offered by the enterprising managers of that sterling Boston daily for the best pieces of English composition furnished within a certain time. The contest has excited a keen interest all over New England and the result has been eargerly watched for by innumerable people. The first prize, $600, was won by Miss Silvia Clark of Pinkerton Academy at Derry, N. H., and the second, $400, was taken by Albert E. Thomas of 174 West Bartlett street in Brockton, Mass. The prize essays were fine pieces of writing, and it is possible that among the mass of manuscripts which the judges had to go over there were many others almost equally meritorious. It was a praiseworthy scheme on the part of the Herald. What next?

☞ The last number of the Stoneham Independent contained a growl at the E. M'x st. R'y Co. headed "The Railroad Rebuked," based on an item which the editor says was clipped from the JOURNAL. The JOURNAL never published the item or anything resembling it, and if the Independent will exercise a little more care in crediting its clippings it will greatly oblige the people of the JOURNAL office, all of whom are friends of the East Middlesex road.

☞ The Sunday Critic of Lowell has been bought by Mr. John S. Chandler who will hereafter manage its business. Mr. Henry J. Moulton, who retires from the Editor's chair, has made a successful paper of it ever since it was founded by him in 1887.

— Mrs. Holden, who has been living at Mr. Gould Converse's with her sister for several years past left here last Tuesday by steamer for Nova Scotia wick to visit and pass a vacation of a couple of months at her home there.

— The children's temperance society, "Loyal Legion," will hold a picnic, weather permitting, at Baldwin's Grove, No. Woburn, on Thursday, July 17. Horse cars leave the Centre at 8.55. All invited to attend.

— Mr. John I. Munroe advertises to sell a very desirable city residence in this paper to-day. The place is nearly new and one of the pleasantest there is. Mr. Munroe will give somebody a big bargain in this property.

— If the local Globe man succeeds in getting the Woburn City Government to build those long-talked-of seats around the Common we shall be in favor of raising a monument to his memory. It beats all how slow they are about it!

— Yesterday morning the Congregational and Baptist Sunday Schools of this city united in a picnic at Haggett's Pond in Andover. There was a big party of them and filled quite a number of cars. It was a delightful day for a picnic.

— Mr. Edward L. Shea left here last Saturday afternoon for the home of his parents at Ellsworth, Maine. He went to Bar Harbor by steamer and thence by railroad to the place of his destination. He expected to be away a fortnight or so.

— Rev. Hugh Montgomery has been very active and efficient in procuring a new church edifice for the M. E. Church in this city. Without him it is very doubtful if the church would have got out of their old quarters into new ones for a good while to come.

— Brewster Colony, No. 19, U. O. P. F., will celebrate its tenth anniversary on the evening of July 17, at which time the officers will be installed by Dist. Dept. Governor Alice J. Durgin of Stoneham. Delegations from various Colonies will be present.

— Last Saturday Chief McIntosh and Officer McDermott made a successful raid on the store of John F. Scally on Fowle street, John McGovern on Conn street and. John F. Nason at Montvale. A large quantity of "stuff" was seized and hauled off.

— The rapidity with which dogs have been muzzled lately by their owners is a caution. They don't seem to take to muzzles very kindly but the safety of community demands that they should endure the unpleasantness for a few months through the hottest of the weather.

— At the last regular meeting of Nahmeokee Council, D. of P., held Thursday evening, the 3d instant, a pleasing event took place in the presentation of a silver cup to Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Page in commemoration of Sadie A., the first papoose of the Council.

— C. E. Smith, the popular plain and ornamental painter, has put out a new cart for jobbing purposes that just naturally takes the cake. It is handsomely painted vehicle and so conspicuous that if seen a mile and a half away anybody would know that it was Smith, the painter.

— Messrs. B. F. Kimball and Frank L. Perry and their families have been enjoying the mountain breezes of New Hampshire. Whether they enjoyed any of the "Country Board" so numerously advertised in that fair Commonwealth deponent does not say.

— Samuel W. Mendum, the submaster of the High school, has been chosen drill master for the High School Battalion and the choice will be heartily approved by the community, as it would have been had either Capt. Conn or Lieut. Brown, Mr. Mendum's competitors, been elected.

— The JOURNAL's German Street Orchestra was on deck last Wednesday morning bright and early. Its repertorie includes several new and popular airs and operas. "McGinty" is still a standard piece with the Orchestra, whose fine weekly performances give great satisfaction in this city.

— The following are the newly elected officers of Division 3, A. O. H.; President, John J. Short; Vice-President, Terrence J. Maguire: Recording Secretary, Peter Benney; Financial Secretary, Francis J. McPartlin; Treasurer, Thomas Quinn; Sergant-at-arms, Thomas H. Manley.

— Dr. George S. Dodge has sold his apothecary business to a purchaser from Brooklyn, N. Y. It was done suddenly and was about as big a surprise to the Doctor as to his neighbors. He hasn't quite made up his mind as to what next, but the JOURNAL hopes he will conclude to stay in Woburn.

— Any of our citizens contemplating making purchases in furniture will make a mistake if they do not see the latest styles at Paine's Furniture Co., 48 Canal street, Boston, before selecting. A stroll through their warerooms is very educating to the taste even of those who consider themselves well posted in art.

— Mr. Joseph P. Shields decides on the JOURNAL as the vehicle through which to acquaint the public of the fact that he has opened a drugstore on Main street opposite the postoffice where the prescription and a general business will be carefully and promptly attended to. He has had a thorough schooling in the profession and understands the whole of it completely. He has a nice store, good stock, and will no doubt make a success of it.

— The article published in the JOURNAL last week under the head, "Woburn's All Right," should have been credited to The Shoe and Leather Review instead of The Shoe and Leather Reporter. It was a good article on Woburn's principal manufacturing industry and deserved to have its source properly acknowledged.

— The JOURNAL Book and Job office is complete in all its appointments and has the reputation of turning out as fine work and as much of it as any printing establishment in Middlesex county. It is fully supplied with presses, all the latest styles of type, stock and men to use them, and gentlemen, your work is respectfully solicited. —tf.

— The Salvation Army show signs of a good deal of life and activity these summer evenings. The day of public scoffing at them is past and gone and nobody now dreams of disturbing their processions, music or street devotions. They may not be intellectually great, but no doubt can exist of their piety, and their work and worship tend towards good.

— Albert Thompson, the landscape and cattle painter, is sketching in this neighborhood where he finds better employment for his pencil than he could almost anywhere else. He don't want any fairer scenes to paint than are found here at home, and he is preparing to transfer some of them to canvass when he returns to his Boston studio this next fall.

— The Woburn Brass Band will give four concerts on the Common in this city during the season, the first to be given on Wednesday evening, July 23. This series, coupled with that of the National Band on alternate nights, will afford the citizens of Woburn and vicinity as fine a course of open-air concerts as can be scared up in the vicinity of Boston.

— Mr. Elmer F. Blank, who is Dr. Dodge's successor in the drug business, comes with high recommendations as to moral character, business energy, financial ability, and thorough practical knowledge of pharmacy, holding certificates of registration as a pharmacist in both New York and Massachusetts. We doubt not he will fully maintain the high reputation of the old stand for reliability.

— The following are the new officers of the Carpenters and Joiners Union, No. 421 of this city: President, Amos Bryenton; Vice President, George McLoud; Recording Secretary, William Stewart; Treasurer, Stephen J. Bezanson; Financial Secretary, Amos Langill; Conductor, Timothy Ring; Warden, Donald Robertson; Preceptor, Donald W. Stewart.

— Mr. Amos Cummings has knocked the bottom out of prices of millinery this season at a great rate. He has "rattled" the market and kept things humming. Buying for cash down he has been able to get goods at hardpan figures, and marking them at the merest advance on cost he has just naturally slaughtered prices and raked in heaps of "wealth." Mr. Cummings is a lively trader.

— People interested in insurance should read a card in this paper signed by Mr. Thomas S. Spurr of Winchester. Mr. Nourse, to whom the business is transferred, is one of the best known real estate and insurance agents in Boston. He resides in Winchester and also has an office there, at which a large share of the insurance and real estate transactions of the town and neighborhood are done.

— Rev. Earnest C. Richardson, Librarian of Hartford Theological Seminary, has been chosen to succeed the late Dr. Frederic Tinton as the head of the Library at Princeton University. Mr. Richardson is a graduate of Amherst College and Hartford Seminary. He will enter upon his duties at Princeton at the opening of the college year this fall. He is a son of Mr. James C. Richardson of this city.

— Mr. William E. Jenks has a business card on the first page of this paper to which particular attention is called. Mr. Jenks needs no introduction to the people of Woburn and vicinity for he is well and favorably known here as a bright and successful business man and one in whom clients can safely put their trust. He deals in "gilt edge" securities only, and his judgment as to investments is entirely reliable.

— If Tabor, the prince of fish dealers, hadn't given the JOURNAL folks a fine large cut from one of the handsomest Penobscot salmons that ever struck Woburn they might have run uncomfortably short for a 4th of July dinner. But he came gallantly and seasonably to their rescue and nothing could have been lovlier. People who are fond of the best fish that swim should always go to Tabor's market for their fish dinner.

— The corner-stone of the new Methodist Church is to be laid at 3 o'clock next Monday afternoon, July 14. The clergy of the city have accepted invitations to attend and it is expected that brief addresses will be made by Rev. Daniel March, D. D., pastor of the First Congregational Church of Woburn, and Bishops Foster and Mallalieu on the occasion. The ceremonies will be interesting and will, no doubt, attract a large crowd of witnesses.

— Mrs. McDermott, wife of Police Officer Charles F. McDermott, died at her home on Scott street early last Wednesday morning of consumption. She left a husband, two small children, a brother, several sisters and numerous other relatives and friends to mourn her early death—for she was a young woman and not many years married. Mrs. McDermott was the daughter of Mr. Michael Murphy, and a lady highly esteemed by all who knew her.

— Col. Edward Simonds has a record. He has served as policeman in this place every night before the 4th of July for just 40 years without a single break. His watch has always been from midnight on the 3-4 to 12 noon the next day, and he has never been prevented by illness or any other cause from performing this service every Independence Day without exception for the lost 40 years. We do not think there is another man in Massachusetts who can show such a record.

— The National Band will give a concert on the Common Wednesday evening, July 16, 1890, with the following

PROGRAMME:

1.	March. Capt. Folsom.	Reeves
2.	Overture. Poet and Peasant.	Suppe
3.	Cornet Duett. Divestments. J. E. and T. H. Marrinan.	Demare
4.	Medley. On the Plantation.	Puerner
5.	Waltz. Trinity College.	Missud
6.	Schottische. McGinty's First Love.	Thorne
7.	Spanish Bolero. A Fete in Madrid.	Abbate
8.	Selection. Olden Times.	Braham
9.	Gavott. First Heart Throbs.	Eilenberg
10.	Galop. Orpheus.	Offenbach

— A branch of the Friendly Aid Society was organized here last week Wednesday evening in Concert Hall. There were forty-one charter members. The following named officers were chosen: Past President, Charles E. Tripp; President, Charles M. Strout; Vice President, Edward E. Foss; Secretary, William J. Brown; Treasurer, Frederic A. Flint; Chaplain, Hiram Whitford; Marshal, Edward Caldwell; Warden, John O'Donnell; Sentinel, Charles W. Dorr.

— The Winchester Star (always enterprising) just more than outdid itself last week. Besides its regular edition printed on the 3d, it got out a 4th of July edition on Saturday which contained a full and complete account of the great celebration and other matters of interest. When he lays himself out for it Editor Wilson is a "rusher from Rushville." And, by the way, his amiable spouse, sister W., isn't any of your slow coaches with reporter's pencil or composing stick. The people of Winchester owe the proprietor of the Star something a good deal more substantial than thanks (unless they have already drawn their calf-skins) for the splendid work he and Mrs. W. did towards making the 4th of July celebration the grand success it was.

— Mrs. Cumston (nee Jennette Schouler), wife of the late well-known Boston piano manufacturer, is at her summer home at Reade's Mills in Burlington, a couple of miles this side of Lexington Common. She was the daughter of Mr. James Schouler, an intelligent Scotch gentleman who accumulated large wealth for those days at calico printing in West Cambridge away back in the '40s; a sister of Adjt. Gen. William Schouler; and an aunt of James Schouler, the historian, and John, his brother, Commander in the U. S. Navy. Reade's Mills is a pretty rural retreat, with a bright stream of water running through it, and pleasant woods, pastures and fields surrounding the hamlet on all sides. Mrs. Cumston always spends the summer there.

— General Secretary Bailey has been passing his vacation at the home of his parents at Bradford on the Merrimac. He expects to return to his post of duty this week. The Y. M. C. A. of this city never realy flourished until Mr. Bailey was employed by it for General Secretary a year ago last April, but since then its progress has been onward and upward. He is indefatigable in efforts to build up, strengthen and increase the members and influence of the Association; he is prolific in plans to that end; he is industrious; a sincere Christian entirely devoted to the work; popular with young men and respected by old; earnest, honest, intelligent—why shouldn't the organization flourish and thrive under his administration as General Secretary? It does and as it never has before.

City Government.

ALDERMEN.

A regular meeting of the Board was held on the evening of July 1, with Goddard, Golden and Place absent.

Constable James Mack resigned, and the Mayor nominated, and the board confirmed William Blaisdell to fill the vacancy.

Petitions, Rufus Pickering and 20 others for electric lights on Border street, William Ellard and 20 others for an arc light on Burlington street. Referred to street light committee. E. G. Clough President of the Trustees of the Methodist church, applied to have the grade of the sidewalk in front of their new church established. Referred to highway committee. Patrick Connolly applied for State aid. Sent to State aid committee. W. E. Kelley, for pool and billiard license at 300 Montvale Avenue; J. P. Shields, for sign over sidewalk, at 321 Main street, referred to Police Committee. Concurred with Common Council in order to replace seats on the Common.

Reports of committees—Water, R. A. Gladdy, water pipe on Hill street. Leave to withdraw. J. L. Towle and others, 2-inch water main, Cedar street. Adopted. W. W. Bennett and others, 2-inch watermain on West and Pearl streets. Adopted. Police, W. H. Curtis, E. Prior, E. F. Stevens and S. E. Wyman, license to sell fireworks, granted; Police, A. J. Drew, Innholder's license, Central House, granted. John Galvin, Thomas Mahern, Thomas McCormick and M. D. Newmyer, junk licenses, adopted. L. Sephie, musie permit; Rufus Smith remove ashes; S. B. Cooley, peddle tinware, permits granted. Hugh Rafferty, Peter Murray and J. Dunnigan, billiard and pool licenses, leave to withdraw.

The petition of J. W. Johnson and others for the grading and curbing of piece of land at the junction of Johnson, Plympton and Main streets, referred to Park Commissioners. The petition of J. W. Hammond and others for readjustment of lines of Main street, between Church and New Boston streets, leave to withdraw. Highways, J. W. Butler and others, laying out of Tremont street, leave to withdraw. Alderman Linscott asked about certain streets in Ward 6, where action was taken last year. Alderman Ramsdell, for the committee, said that action was taken last year, but the Clerk of that period had not reported them. The present Clerk had them. The Mayor suggested that they be called up as unfinished business of last year and the Clerk read the reports on laying out Dexter Avenue, Longwood Avenue and Dartmouth street. Accepted, and left in charge of the City Clerk for the required seven days. The City Treasurer was authorized to hire $7000 to pay for the new conduit to the reservoir and the extension of certain water mains. Referred to Joint Finance Committee.

Alderman Linscott offered an order, which was adopted, requiring all dogs in the city to be muzzled or restrained from going at large during the months of July and August.

B. S. Devlin & Co. applied for a druggist's sixth class license.

The petition of Charles H. Smith and other fish dealers, asking that all outside fish dealers peddling in Woburn be required to pay a license of $50 per annum, was called up and referred to committee of the whole with Alderman Kenney in the chair. Voted to report leave to withdraw on whole matter, and the committee arose, so reported, and the Board adopted it.

Trusts and Mistrusts.

We are often asked to put our trust in things above; sometimes customers ask for "trust," and the pleasant grocery clerk "trusts" all your family are well. Then there are sugar trusts, pork and grain trusts, including mistrust. But we trust you will at once try Brussels soap for household use, for you can safely trust to its efficacy. Then it is so lasting, you know, and economical.

Speech of Mayor Johnson

OF WOBURN AT THE WINCHESTER 4TH OF JULY CELEBRATION.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:

I am perplexed and embarrassed. This is a family gathering at which I represent either the mother or the daughter of the host, but, in spite of what I have heard here today, I am almost at a loss to know which. On a former occasion when I had the honor of addressing a Winchester audience, I assumed that, as the town of Woburn was created by an act of the General Court in 1642, and as the town of Winchester was taken from the body of Woburn, "bone of her bone and flesh of her flesh," and created a separate being, in 1850, I might, with historical truth, and in a figurative sense, speak of Woburn as the mother town. I learn, however, from the Winchester Star, and from other semi-official sources, that Woburn's relationship to Winchester is now that of a daughter. If this be true, Mr. President, then I am assigned the rather delicate task of responding for a member of the family who was born and christened 208 years before her mother was even heard of. [Laughter.]

Do you wonder, Sir, that under these circumstances I am somewhat embarrassed and disconcerted? Your newspaper's theory of history not only sets at naught all previous conceptions of the genesis of local history, but upsets the previously accepted history of the creation itself; for be it understood hereafter that when the Almighty took a rib from Adam's body and created Eve, then Adam ceased to be and Eve became the first created being, and the anniversary celebration of Eve's settlement in the Garden of Eden should precede that of Adam's birth. [Laughter.] I am sorry to learn from this celebration, Mr. President, that Edward Converse and his fellow pioneers were such ignorant men as not to have known in what town they settled. Those brave but historically misguided ancestors of yours lived and died in the firm belief that they had helped to found the town of Woburn,—a name of their own choosing and endeared to them by old associations. Ignorant men! not to have known that they really located in a place which for a pecuniary consideration their remote descendants have called Winchester, and that they henceforth would go down in history as the settlers of a municipality which was created and named 200 years after some of them were dead and buried. [Laughter.]

I am sorry, too, that my ancestor, the first town clerk of Woburn, cannot be brought to life long enough to correct the errors and misstatements of the early Woburn records. It is indeed too bad that Edward Converse, the original proprietor of the present Whitney Mill property, should appear on those records as a Selectman of Woburn and a Deputy to the General Court from Woburn, when of course the record should be amended to read Winchester. In spite of the fact that an eminent authority has said that Edward Johnson "wrote the most important work on the Massachusetts Colony that was printed during the first one hundred years after the settlement," he was clearly incompetent, in the light of subsequent events, to have served as the first town clerk of Woburn. The position demanded a prophet; one who could have looked into the future and who, instead of writing about the settlement of Woburn, would have known enough to have given the credit to the present town of Winchester!

I hope that the voters of this town when they come to choose a new town clerk will see to it that he possesses the necessary prophetic vision; otherwise a similar injustice may be done to the present unknown town of Symmes Corner, or to the future municipality of Whitneyboro; for on your theory of anniversary celebrations, we may hear, twenty five years hence, of the 275th anniversary of the first white settlement in the historic town of Whitneyboro, on which occasion Winchester will doubtless be invited as a daughter to attend. [Applause.] When that great event comes off the Historical Society of Whitneyboro will strenuously object to find my esteemed friend, Mr. Whitney, referred to on your records as a selectman and a prominent citizen of the town of Winchester, when he actually lived on the soil of Whitneyboro!

In view of what may occur in the future you do well to celebrate today; for you may experience the same difficulty in observing the 300th anniversary of the first white settlement in Winchester which would have been experienced had you attempted fifty years ago to celebrate the 200th anniversary.

Now, Mr. President, I would not have it inferred from these half satirical remarks that Woburn is really displeased with this celebration, or envious of the people of Winchester simply because tradition has located within the limits of your present town the first house built in the territory formerly known as Charlestown Village. Mr. Whitney told me when I came here not to be afraid to stand up for Woburn. I have tried not to be afraid. [Laughter and applause.] I would be doing an injustice to my own feelings, however, and would certainly misrepresent the real sentiments of the citizens of Woburn were I to close my remarks without an honest word of commendation and of praise for the men who have made this celebration a success. Not only does the event itself speak volumes for the enterprise, the intelligence and the public spirit of this town; but in awakening a public interest in the early history of the land and the people in whose traditions and glories we possess a joint heritage, its promoters have done a noble work for the common good. And while we of Woburn may throw out facetious remarks anent the true historical significance of this occasion, we are willing to acknowledge that up to the present time no such celebration as this has taken place on the soil of the territory formerly comprised in the old township of Woburn. After a family existence of nearly 250 years the youngest child has assumed the responsibility and the honor of being the first to celebrate the deeds of our ancestors on a scale proportionate to their importance. The events of this day will teach the great mass of your citizens and of our citizens that we have a past as well as a present, something to live over as well as to live in. There are people who affect to despise ancestry; to belittle the importance of local history; and to regard the genealogist and antiquarian as drones in the hive of human industry. Daniel Webster has answered these scoffers by saying: "Those who are regardless of their ancestors do not perform their duty to the world. It is a noble faculty of our nature which enables us to connect our thoughts, our sympathies and our happiness with what is distant in place or time; and looking before and after to hold communion at once with our ancestors and our posterity." These words of the great orator have been aptly quoted by a late citizen of Winchester, that indefatigable author of the "Richardson Memorial," and a gentleman who considered it a laudable ambition for the people of today, "to seek to know from whence they sprung, what their ancestors did, under what embarrassments they labored and what results they reached."

In stamping the seal of public approval on work which aims to accomplish these ends, an anniversary event of this character confers a substantial and a permanent benefit. It furnishes a reward for past labor; it inspires enthusiasm and zeal for future effort; and it gives to us all a broader view and a clearer vision of

"The eternal Landscape of the Past."

A Nonagenarian.

Very few people are permitted to see their ninetieth birthday, and when a person does reach such a day it is well to celebrate it.

Saturday, June 28, completed 90 years of Mrs. Gilbert Richardson's life and her friends and relatives wished to see her and congratulate her on that day. She was permitted to see three sons and two daughters, two grandchildren, and one great-granddaughter, and quite a number of friends from Woburn.

Mrs. Richardson was born in Concord, in 1800; was married in 1824, in Woburn (now Winchester); and has lived in the same house for 66 years. Although her memory fails her in regard to many every day matters, yet she can relate with great vividness events that took place many years ago going into details with minute accuracy. And even in things of to-day whenever anything connected with the Scriptures is mentioned she responds with the utmost promptness.—X.

Independence Day at Home.

Almost everybody in Woburn went to the great Winchester celebration—some say over 6000—and nearly all the rest went somewhere else to observe the day. The customary National salutes were fired at sunrise, noon and sunset; the bells rang out their patriotic peals; and American flags floated lazily in what little breeze there was going all day long. The Postoffice was handsomely decorated with flags and streamers which was the only one in town.

There was about the usual amount of Chinese cracker-firing, powder-burning and noise-producing inventions indulged in by Young America on the night before the 4th and through the day, and about the usual number of headaches were the products of it all.

But oh, my! Wasn't it dull though? The streets were very nearly deserted from morning to night—nobody was at home. A ball game in the forenoon afforded some amusement to those who are baseballward inclined; the National Band Association held a picnic in Baldwin's Grove, and the St. Charles Church Sunday school held one at Hudson's Grove, and these were the extent of Independence Day amusements here. As usual, Young America "raised Cain" the night before and many of their pranks were without precedent—a statement which would, at first blush, seem to be as groundless as the baseless fabric of a dream. True, though.

FROM THE REPORTER'S NOTEBOOK, JULY 5.

The Phalanx and Clan MacKinnon of the Scottish Clans of this city were a prominent feature of the celebration in Winchester.

The alarm from box 62, at 12 30 Friday morning, was for a fire in an outbuilding on the Leathe estate.

The steam and street cars were taxed to their utmost capacity to care for the people who attended the Winchester celebration.

Thomas C. Boyce, the driver of Hose 1, was seriously injured last Friday evening while firing the National salute. The gun was on Rag Rock Avenue and about half the charges had been fired when just as he was about to withdraw the rammer the charge exploded forcing the rammer through his hands and burning him fearfully about the arms, face and body. Drs. Kelley and Bartlett responded to a summons for medical aid and did all they could for the sufferer. The rammer landed on the rear lawn of the Public Library and required the united efforts of two men to remove it. Mr. Boyce is considered out of danger.

List of Teachers for 1890-1.

Last Tuesday evening the Woburn School Board held a meeting for the purpose of choosing a corps of teachers for the coming school year. The following were selected:

High, Herbert B. Daw, Samuel W. Mendum, Ida A. C. Jacobs, Sarah F. Clarke, Elizabeth M. Brown; Cummings school, Edward H. Lounsbury, Susan A. Russell, Miss Emerson, Julia T. Byrne, Alice M. Grammer, Edia Davis, Helen L. Winn, Alice L. Bond; Plympton school, Emma F. Hovey, Jennie E. Skinner, Mary E. Briggs, Kate A. McElheny, Nellie L. Sheehan, M. Lillie Leslie; Union school, Dora T. Fuller, Josephine A. Randall, Florence E. Barrett, Hattie Bosworth; Rumford school, Andrew R. Linscott, Amanda Sevrens, Lucretia K. Tidd; Montvale school, Augusta M. Fellows, Annie M. Henshaw, Mary J. Wakeford, Mary E. Naven; Johnson school, Mary E. Hevey, Etta Larkin, Mary A. McElroy, Annie L. Caulfield; Lawrence school, Emma F. Fowle, Lizzie P. Ingalls, Edith L. Flagg, Alice S. Hartshorn; Highland school, Jessie A. Day, Abbie L. Blake; Morse school, Arabella Menard, Annie A. J. Larkin; Main street school, Marietta H. Bowers, Fanny S. Jones; Cedar street school, Ina V. Austin, Lizzie F. Clark; Cambridge street school, Susan M. Frye; Hudson primary, Annie B. Atwood; Musical Director, Emory P. Russell; Drawing Teacher, Willis S. Carter. Miss Millie Gilcreast and Lucinda W. Whorf resigned.

Regular preaching services were commenced in the Town Hall about the 11th of August, 1850. In February 1851, a church was organized with 10 members in full connection. During the year 1852 two brethren, J. Holman and Daniel Came, leased a piece of land where Lyceum Hall now stands and erected a chapel on their own responsibility.

The first conference preacher was Rev. J. C. Cary, stationed here in 1853. In 1854 the society purchased the chapel and removed it to the corner of Main and Mann streets.

In 1864 the society bought the Unitarian church on the corner of Main and Walnut streets, which was dedicated as a Methodist church on the 17th of May, 1865.

In 1868 the church was raised and vestries put beneath at the expense of $4,000.

In 1872 a parsonage was built in the rear of the church. In the spring of 1873 the church was destroyed by fire. The church was rebuilt in the fall of the next year, incurring a heavy debt which has been a great embarrassment to the society ever since. The present property was sold in April 1890, for $26,000. After all debts were paid $10,000 were left towards the new church. The society is now building a church on Main street at the cost of $20,000.

The following is a list of preachers:—Rev. S. M. Vail, D.D.; John W. Merrill, D.D.; L. P. Frost, H. Kendall, J. G. Cary, H. R. Parmenter, George Sutherland, —— Treadwell, J. A. Ames, M. P. Webster, Bartholomew Otherman, Kinsman Atkinson, M. R. Barney, N. D. George, M. M. Parkhurst, J. A. Lansing, C. L. Eastman, W. J. Hambleton, C. Merrill, C. H. Hanaford, W. J. Pomfret, V. M. Simmons, N. B. Fisk, M. E. Wright, L. D. Bragg, Hugh Montgomery.

The present membership is 261 in full connection, with 37 probationers. The Sabbath school number 380.

The youth of Ward 6, taking advantage of the fact that there was no celebration in this city, concluded to make the day, or rather the night before, a memorable one in the history of that Ward, and succeeded beyond the expectations of the most sanguine.

The arrangements were made when they were executed, and when most of the good people were in deep slumber. Everybody was up earlier than usual, and it did not take long to discover what the night had brought.

Everything portable in the Ward, which had been left out of doors found a new home. Piazza chairs, gates, hammocks were loaded upon a wagon which was drawn to a swamp and there deposited. Signs from the Land Company's estate were placed upon houses all over the Ward; a carryall was put in the yard of the Rumford School house, and so difficult was the task it must have required the assistance of at least twenty persons. Effigies were hung in many prominent places, but having no particular "personal point."

Hundreds of blinds were removed; horses were taken from their stalls and hitched upon lawns, and in one case a cow was led to the front door of the residence of one of the prominent citizens, and a stout cord secured one of her horns to the door bell. The officers were kept wide awake by complaints which drew them away from the scenes of these little Fourth of July pleasantries.

BY THE GENERAL SECRETARY.

Gen. Sec. Robbins of Stoneham paid us a visit last Monday.

Next Sunday's 4 o'clock meeting will led by Mr. Harry Carter of No. Woburn.

The Boys meeting at 3 o'clock last Sunday was led by Dr. Dodge, who gave an interesting talk on "From Darkness to Light, or A Boy's Possibilities."

On account of the warmth of the season and the absence of so many boys during the vacation months, there will be no more Boy's meetings until the second Sunday in September.

Our last Sunday 4 o'clock meeting was well attended. Mr. Frank Johnson of Amherst College and Prof. Scott Ward of Cushing Academy conducted the meeting. Prof. Ward was Secretary of the Woburn Association for the first year of its existence.

The Summer Encampment of the Young Men's Christain Associations of New England, at North Lubec, Maine, commences August 9. Anyone desiring to attend the Encampment can obtain further particulars by calling at the General Secretary's office at the Rooms.

Overshooting the Mark.

The natural effect of the indecent attacks made by baking powder venders upon a Baking Powder of high reputation, well known and largely used in this community, will be to disgust people generally with both the peddlers and their goods they are trying to introduce.

The Royal Baking Powder and its manufacturers are well known in this state. Both are held in the highest esteem and need no word of defense. The great excellence of their article has brought it into general use, so that its sales now equal those of all other baking powders combined. Self-interest, if nothing else, would deter the manufacturers of such an article from reducing it either in strength or purity below the standard of the highest quality.

It is well understood that these indecent attacks are made for the purpose of breaking the force of the recent official reports which show the great superiority of the Royal and expose the large adulteration of other powders. It is also quite natural that they should be supplemented by the fraudulent tricks which these agents are resorting to for the purpose of advertising their goods. These agents are going from house to house with a pretended test which from an examination by the chemists proves to be a most unblushing fraud, as the samples of baking powder used in making such alleged test are prepared especially to make the exhibit they do.

These unbusinesslike practices cannot do otherwise than react against their authors here, as they have in other places where tried.

To Nervous Debilitated Men.

If you will send your address, we will mail you our illustrated pamphlet explaining all about Dr. Dye's Celebrated Electro-Voltaic Belt and Appliances, and their charming effects upon the nervous debilitated system, and how they will quickly restore you to vigor and manhood. If you are thus afflicted, we will send you a Belt and Appliances on a trial. Pamphlet free.

Woburn Post, No. 161, G. A. R.

The Veterans of Post 161 had a particularly happy time of it last Monday evening. It was in the nature of a jubilee to celebrate in addition to the Post of 25 good, true and loyal members —22 by confession of faith (as one gentleman put it) and 3 by letter. A genuine revival has been working its leven inside the organization for some weeks which has been promoted and encouraged by everyone having its good at heart. Great pains were taken to impress it on the JOURNAL reporter's notebook that Dr. Frank W. Graves was entitled to a good share of the credit for said revival and for securing so many proselytes. They claimed that he had been doing effective missionary work among the non-affiliated Veterans in this vicinity and the harvest was 25 as good men as there are in Woburn. The Doctor denies the allegations and defies the allegators.

Post 161 has a fine hall in the Savings Bank building and in it frequent good times are indulged in. Seldom however has a better one been had there than that of last Monday evening. The hall is large and yet it was filled with Comrades from home and abroad who were there to witness the ceremonies of mustering in the new recruits, to partake of the collation, to enjoy the musical and literary entertainment, and to congratulate the Post on the handsome addition to its numbers. It is needless to say the meeting was a jolly one.

The muster-in service devolved on the regular officers under the direction of Commander James L. Pinkham, and, being impressively performed, was very interesting. When this service was ended an address welcoming the new comers to the Post was made. Their names are as follows: Charles H. Foss, Charles H. Johnson, Luke Esterbrook, Charles Flagg, Salem T. Brigham, Frank A. Winn, Moses B. Davis, Edmund C. Colman, Joseph H. Parker, Cyrus H. Mentzer, Charles E. Richardson, Cyrus Fay, Jacob Ames, George H. Mann, William H. Pound, Joseph Linnell, George S. Holt, John Gilcreast, Joseph J. Knox, Edmund C. Cottle, Fort Staples, George E. Fowle.

After a very nice collation furnished by Caterer McConnell in Concert Hall and served in handsome style by him and his aids there was an excellent musical and literary entertainment which everyone enjoyed for all there was out. Comrade John L. Parker, Editor of the Lynn Item, sang an original song and read an original poem called "The Old Army Overcoat," both of which gave much pleasure and brought out much applause from the audience; a Quartet consisting of Messrs. Colby, Rogers, Cutler and Kimball, rendered several songs in excellent style and were warmly cheered.

After feasting the material appetite with Caterer McConnell's good things the intellectual appetite was duly regaled with brief spicy speeches by Comrade Parker above named, Commander James L. Pinkham, Capt. Ed. F. Wyer, Lawyer M. T. Allen, Elmore A. Pierce (he nominated Dr. Frank W. Graves for next Commander of Post 161) Major H. C. Hall, J. H. Symonds, J. Howard Nason, Ex-Com. J. Fred Leslie, Dr. Frank Graves and several others. When it came to Dr. Graves's turn to respond to a sentiment he said he had been entirely unable to fix up a speech to suit his taste so he had sent away and got a substitute and he hoped he would be lenient with him for doing such an unheard-of and out-of-the-way thing. In a few minutes, to the blank surprise of everybody and while the company at the festive boards were waiting for the Doctor's substitute, an old duffer was seen to mount the rostrum who, to the amazement of everybody, soon began to deliver a lecture on "Fish." It proved to be Prof. Emerson of Boston, one of the most noted humorists in America (the Doctor had got him there unbeknown to everybody) and such another entertainment of rollicking, button-busting fun as he gave the party it would be hard to find anywhere.

With this and some more singing the evening's exercises and entertainments closed.

WHEN FOUND THE BOSTON GLOBE WILL GIVE HIM A $1000 SWORD.

BOSTON, July .—The Grand Army encampment in Boston next month has received a startling impetus from the announcement of the Boston Globe that it will give a handsome sword, made by Tiffany and costing $1000, to the most popular Grand Army comrade in the country.

The encampment committees are full of surprise and delight over the Globe's proposition, and they agree in declaring that no other single feature of the programme will excite as great an interest as this, or tend as much to increase the attendance, which already promises to beat the record.

The contest for the sword is now fully open. Coupons cut from the Globe and filled out with the names of hundreds of favorites are coming in by the thousands every day.

Orders also are pouring in from distant places where there is no supply of Globes, and in response papers are being expressed by the tens of hundreds to enthusiastic people who intend to cut out the votes, write in the names of their friends and return them by mail.

This rivalry will continue daily until the close of the encampment next month. The Globe publishing each morning the record of the votes received the day before.

The excitement caused by this contest is fast spreading beyond New England, judging by the rapidly increasing demands that flow in from the Western States, as well as from the Middle.

The 4th In Winchester: 1640—1890.

The celebration of Independence Day and the 250th anniversary of the settlement of the first white man on the soil of the present beautiful town of Winchester was a magnificent success. In plan and detail of execution it was the most brilliant affair ever witnessed on a 4th of July or any other anniversary day in the Mystic valley, and not only the liberal-handed authorities of the town but everyone who took part in getting it up and carrying it out had a right to indulge in feelings of pride. No expense of money, time, work or trouble was spared to make it a grand celebration and the excellent taste and good judgment displayed in all the arrangements, from the minutest feature to its most important ones, were in the highest degree creditable to the committees and managers of the very elaborate affair. There was absolutely nothing left open to criticism from even the most exacting and difficult to please.

The weather was all that could have been desired. The ardent rays of a July sun were most of the time veiled by fleecy clouds; cool breezes fanned the town and the thousands of people gathered from miles around and kept them comfortable and amiable; and it seemed as though a kind providence conspired with the citizens to make a jubilee day that will not soon be forgotten by the masses who were present and so highly enjoyed it.

The representatives of the JOURNAL embrace this opportunity to acknowledge with thanks the rare courtesy with which they were treated by the authorities and committees. As "guests of the town" they were enabled to view the splendid procession from the balconies and spacious grounds of the Town Hall which were reserved for invited guests; to listen with ease and pleasure to Mr. McCall's fine oration and other exercises in the Hall; to enjoy the grand banquet; for seats on the stand from which to look at the magnificent display of fireworks and listen to the music of the bands; and for many other personal favors and courtesies. Naturally, the JOURNAL holds its Winchester neighbors in high esteem, and its good will towards them was in no whit abated by the generous favors its representatives received at their hands on the 4th.

The great parade in the morning was three miles long and a real triumph in design and execution. The procession was composed of military companies, brass bands, Scotch pipers, cavalcades, civic societies, fife and drum corps, trades displays, and many other organizations, not a feature of which could have been better conceived, carried out, or have given more pleasure to the vast crowds of men, women and children who lined the roads and streets over which it marched. There was no failure in any one of the many representations, but each was a complete and praiseworthy creation, and a credit to all concerned. Many pieces were unique, and all were excellent—altogether superior to the usual 4th of July procession. Very wisely, "fantastics" had no place in the programme, but in their stead were the "Landing of the Pilgrims," "Aberjona Tribe of Indians," a company of the "Original Settlers of Charlestown," "Minute Men" of the Revolutionary War, "Uncle Sam," a representation of the 42 States by 42 young girls all bedecked in red, white and blue with the Goddess of Liberty resplendent in glittering stars and shining shield, magnificent floral displays, a fine exhibition by the market-gardeners, many floats containing the best products of nature and art—the whole under the command and direction of several Marshals each with a numerous corps of Aids and all gay in handsome uniforms and bright blades, a finely mounted and dressed Police force doing duty as guards on the march.

The sentiment was everywhere expressed that it was the finest 4th of July parade ever seen in this part of the country outside of Boston, and it carried out its part of the celebration without a break or hitch. Not a word of anything but commendation was heard concerning it, and the music of the brass bands, the Scotch pipers, and the lively rattle of the fife and drum companies enhanced the pleasure of the wayside witnesses of it.

Winchester was gaily robed in holiday dress. The decorations were numerous, appropriate and beautiful. General Seal, the veteran Boston decorator, was the author and finisher of this work, which is equal to saying that it was beautiful and artistic. Town Hall, the handsomest and best in the suburbs of Boston, was splendidly adorned inside and out with plants, flowers and bunting, and numerous mottoes wrought in flowers graced its exterior walls. Private houses, stores, public buildings were all elaborately decorated with flags, streamers, flowers and evergreens, and presented a beautiful appearance. The whole town were in holiday temper and spirits as well as dress, and the freest of welcomes, the warmest of receptions, and the best of cheers, were extended by the citizens to the thousands of strangers within their gates. We never saw a town more abundantly or beautifully decked out, or a people more cordial and hearty in their greetings.

The judges of the street exhibitions found much difficulty in deciding as to who were entitled to the prizes offered. They were: Lewis Parkhurst, C. F. Rice, William F. Davis, D. A. Newton, and Charles S. Parker of the Arlington Advocate. Their award was as follows: The 1st Prize $25 was awarded to the Float—the 42 States, represented by 42 school children and the Goddess of Liberty, attended by four sailors. 2d Prize $15, Aberjona Tribe of Indians, represented by W. C. T. A. Society, W. E. Holland, Commander. 3d Prize, $10. Scotch Clan McKinnon, No. 43, of Woburn, Chief McDonald. Honorable mention to the Winchester Fire Department and Charlestown Cadets, Co. A 5th Regiment and also to the entire Third Division.

At noon as many as could do so filed into the spacious Town Hall to hear the oration. Notwithstanding the intense heat and the many outside attractions the seats in the Hall were filled with an attentive audience composed of both sexes and nearly all ages who were evidently well pleased with Mr. McCall's fine contribution to the patriotic celebration. After appropriate music, Abijah Thompson, Esq., a county gentleman of the town, one of the old Woburn family of Thompsons, of which Rev. Leander Thompson of No. Woburn is the accomplished historian, introduced Samuel W. McCall, Esq., of Winchester as Orator of the Day, the choice for whom for that post of honor was a very felicitous one. Gracefully presenting Mr. McCall to his listeners, Mr. Thompson said:

"Ladies and Gentleman, Fellow Citizens:

The Board, the Honorable Selectmen, who officially represent the town of Winchester, have delegated me to preside at this time on this exceedingly interesting occasion. Representing the Winchester Historical or Genealogical Society, allow me in its behalf to acknowledge the honor conferred. We are today celebrating the 250th anniversary of the first white settlement within the limits of the present town of Winchester. We have gathered within the walls of this municipal building erected upon land once owned by Edward Converse. Today we commemorate the events of 1640."

Mr. McCall's oration was a model one for such an occasion. It was evidently the fruit of sincere, strong thinking, and industrious research. It was appropriate too, which cannot truthfully be said of all 4th of July orations, and it satisfied the wants and expectations of the very large number of intelligent people who heard it. The average 4th of July oration is almost always a stale and unprofitable affair; but such was not the case with Mr. McCall's—his was fresh, original, admirably written, and well delivered.

It was nearly half past one o'clock when the exercises closed in the hall, immediately after which the great Yale tent pitched on the lovely grounds of Mr. D. N. Skillings across the way from the Town House was filled with those who held tickets for the grand banquet, with after-dinner speakers, musicians, etc., and but brief time was allowed to elapse ere an attack in force was made on the long tables of viands, which Dill, the famous Boston caterer, had provided in great abundance and variety for the occasion. It was an elegant dinner. Dill had carte blanche, and that meant a feast of fat meats for the people at the tables, for no caterer in the country knows how to do these things better than Dill or takes more pains to please his patrons.

After the fine feast at the table came the speech-making. Rev. Mr. Suter opened these exercises with a prayer, after which, in a brief speech but a very loyal one to his town, Mr. Dorsey, the toastmaster, introduced Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge, Member of Congress from the Winchester District, who treated the 400 or 500 people under the canvass to a very interesting address. Mr. Lodge is capable of it. Being Independence Day, naturally his speech would be tinctured with history, in which department of literature he is always at home. For several years he was lecturer on Colonial History in Harvard University, and afterwards wrote and published several volumes on the settlement and progress of the American colonies. He has the annals of Massachusetts Bay and other early settlements at his tongue's end, so that when a speech of his is of an historical hue it always entertains as well as instructs. His effort was honored with profound attention from beginning to end and elicited warm applause.

Mayor Edward F. Johnson of this city responded to a call of his name in a speech, the first part of which was replete with irony of the keenest sort, but as it is published in another column of this issue of the JOURNAL we forbear further remarks concerning it. It was listened to with marked interest.

Mayor Johnson was followed by sundry postprandial orators among whom were Mr. Metcalf of Boston, a former highly esteemed resident of Winchester; Mr. H. H. Edes of Charlestown, who represented the mother church of which Woburn became a daughter; Rev. J. W. Suter; Hon. D. A. Gleason of Medford; Rev. E. G. Porter of Lexington, one of the very happiest of after-dinner speakers, and Col. Nat. A. Richardson, the historian of Winchester. All of these were interspersed with fine music which added materially to the pleasures of the occasion.

With the exercises under the tent the afternoon closed.

EVENING.

The fireworks on Bacon field, which opened at 8.15, were in keeping with all the other features of the brilliant celebration. Masten & Wells, the widely known and very popular Boston manufacturers of fireworks, and skilled pyrotechnists, gave the thousands of people who witnessed it a splendid exhibition, with which they appeared to be delighted. Many of the features were entirely new, and the final piece, "Winchester, 1640—1890," was simply superb. The Woburn and Winchester bands regaled the great crowd on the grounds with a fine concert before the fireworks. The streets and residences in the neighborhood of Bacon field were magnificently illuminated with the largest collection and greatest variety of Chinese lanterns ever before seen in the Mystic Valley. It showed up like a fairy scene, and down in the centre of the village and over on the East Side the exhibition was almost as brilliant. It was apparent that Winchester planned big on illuminations and made a complete success of it.

With the last rocket ended the Winchester 4th of July and 250th anniversary celebration, the largest, most brilliant and complete success ever achieved in this part of the country.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

Considering the tough knocks which business in this city has been obliged to stand up and take from labor troubles during the last year an increase in that period of 241 in the number of depositors, and an increase of $90,804.80 in the volume of deposits, tell a story in Woburn's favor that can't be otherwise than in the highest degree gratifying. It shows indisputably that the city is growing in population and wealth, and the assurance of this which the above figures prove must be very encouraging to every well-wisher of its prosperity.

Well, how do you like free delivery? The storekeepers in the centre do not like it, as they say it will injure their business.—Star. Well, didn't I tell you so?

Didn't Col. Nat. give 'em a rattler at the 4th of July dinner? What he don't known about Winchester biographies away back in pre-historic times isn't worth knowing.

Mr. S. C. Small has received votes for the Boston Globe's magnificant Veteran's sword. Mr. Small was a gallant Maine soldier. We Winchester people hope he will get the sword.

The fireworks were a great success. Masten & Wells, the famous Boston fireworks manufacturers and pyrotechnists, are simply unapproachable in their line. They are very popular people about July 4 every year.

People generally down here think Mr. Wilson, Editor of the Star, deserves a good big purse of money for what he did to promote the great celebration. If it had not been for his efforts it would not have been the brilliant success it was. The Star folks ought to be handsomely paid.

PARABLE OF THE SUPPER

LESSON II, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 13.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xiv, 15-24. Commit Verses, 22-24—Golden Text, Luke xiv, 15—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

In our last lesson we saw the religious leaders of the people contending with Him because He healed a woman on the Sabbath day; but He put them to shame and caused his followers to rejoice. So shall it be again when those who cast out others for his sake say, Let the Lord be glorified; but He shall appear to the joy of his people and his enemies shall be ashamed (Isa. lxvi, 5). He then repeated the parables of the mustard seed and the leaven, both of which had a fulfillment in Israel at that time, and are having a fulfillment in the church today. He added a prophecy concerning the coming desolation of Jerusalem because of her rejection of Him, indicating its continuance until He should come again. After this we find Him in the house of a Pharisee on the Sabbath day, where He had evidently been invited to dine. He here heals a man who had the dropsy, and speaks a parable to the invited guests to teach them humility, after which He tells his host that if, when he makes a feast, he would invite those who were unable to return the compliment, he would have a recompense at the resurrection of the just; and this leads one of the guests to give utterance to the first words of our lesson.

15. "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God." According to the first part of this verse, that which caused the guest to utter these words was the Saviour's remark concerning the resurrection of the just.

16. "Then said He unto him, A certain man made a great supper, and bade many." This parable is somewhat similar to that in Matt. xxii, but that was spoken during Passion week in Jerusalem, and this while on His way to Jerusalem (Luke xiii, 22; xviii, 31). In both he covers Israel's rejection, and the present dispensation of gathering out the church, reaching forward to the marriage of the Lamb at the time of the resurrection of the just and of the restoration of the Kingdom to Israel.

17. "Come; for all things are now ready." This was the message which the servants were to carry John the Baptist, and the twelve were some of the servants as they went forth, saying: "Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." The salvation of Jehovah, whether it be the Kingdom offered to Israel, or the higher position offered to the church, is a prepared salvation even as Simeon said: "Thy salvation which Thou hast prepared" (Luke ii, 30, 31); and it is all, from first to last, summed up in Jesus Christ.

18. "And they all with one consent began to make excuse." Nothing to do but to take it; simply to accept the invitation and be there; yet they prefer not to. How anxious many are to get an invitation to anything great in this world, and how disappointed if left out. Here is the God of Heaven inviting freely to the riches of His grace and glory, and it is not considered worth accepting. His feast is despised, His invitation spurned.

"I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it: I pray thee have me excused." His little piece of ground for which he has paid a few shekels is of more importance than that which has cost so much.

19. "I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them: I pray thee have me excused." Lands must be seen to, and oxen must be proved, but the great feast provided by infinite love may go a begging. It is nothing to them. The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof; the cattle on a thousand hills are His (Ps. xxiv, 1; l, 10); yet there are fools (and plenty of them today) who prefer a little which they can purchase to the great riches which the Lord of all offers so freely to "whosoever will." Any one of these ten oxen was a rebuke to their owner, for it is written "The ox knoweth its owner, * * * but my people do not know" (Isa. i, 3). Was it not rather late to prove oxen after buying them?

20. "I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come." This is no better than the others, yet the refusal is even more decided "I cannot come." If the invitation did not include his wife, he might have had some excuse; but God's invitations include all who are willing; and while the others might have to leave their lands and oxen, he could bring his wife with him.

21. "So that servant came, and showed his lord these things." A servant has only to deliver his master's message, and take the answer back, if there is any; he has no power to excuse people. Our responsibility ceases when we have lovingly and faithfully given the invitation, proclaimed the glad tidings. Then it becomes us, like the disciples, to tell Jesus all we have done and taught (Mark vi, 30), leaving results with Him. His command to Ezekiel was, "Speak my words unto them whether they will hear or whether they will forbear" (Ezek. ii, 7).

"Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind." These have no earthly possessions or pleasures to entangle them; they will be more likely to accept the invitation. It was just these four classes which Jesus advised the Pharisee, in whose house He was, to invite to his feast in order that he might be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.

22. "And the servant said, Lord, it is done as Thou hast commanded, and yet there is room." The servant has only to obey, lovingly to deliver his message, and report for further orders. It is not said whether any among these classes excused themselves or not, but it is said "Yet there is room." What abundant provision! What riches of His grace! What plenteous redemption!

23. "And the lord said unto the servant, Go out into the highways and hedges." Again it is "Go!" The word for the outsider is "Come!" And the encouragement is: "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out." "Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden." "Come now and let us reason together, saith the Lord. Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow, though they be red like crimson they shall be as wool."

"Compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." We are not simply to invite but to urge and lovingly constrain them to come. Our indifference to the salvation of others is a strange sight. We believe that we are joint heirs with Christ to an inheritance which is incorruptible and everlasting, and that all who are not in Christ are on the way to everlasting punishment; yet we can meet them, do business with them, have fellowship with them, and never even invite them to share our inheritance, much less compel them to come to the feast. We would do well to ponder these words: "If thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thine hand" (Ezek. xxxiii, 8). It is true that we, of ourselves, are powerless to either convince or compel; but He who says "Go!" says also "Lo, I am with you" (Matt. xxviii, 20).

24. "For I say unto you, That none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper." Refusing to accept His gracious invitation they doom themselves to hear the fearful words "Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."

It is said that no worm or insect is ever found in the eucalyptus tree or its roots, and that a row of trees planted through an orchard or vineyard will cause insects and worms of all kinds to vacate the region. House vermin may also be exterminated by use of the leaves.

AN OLD MAID.

I remember when that narrer face o' hern
Hed pink cheeks an' eyes so bright they 'peared to burn;
An' her smiles was sweet an' sassy 'stidder stern.

That was when my bones was somethin' limberer
'An they are of late!—'twas when I called on her
Kind-uh steady—what ye might call regaler.

Always meant some time to bid her name the day;
Yit somehow I didn't do it—jest my way
To keep puttin' off—I'm given to delay.

Now the years crep' off an' the wrinkles they crep' in,
Love's a mighty 'ily crittur—slick as sin
Fer to slide out at a loophole small an' thin!

Seems I give the whole thing up, an' think says I—
Bein's I've lived alone till fohty, reckon my Life kin hobble on alone till time to die.

But today some women gassin' in the shade
Of the peach tree yander spoke of Nancy Slade—
Said they reckoned she was born for an old maid!

Well, sirs! all my blood went b'lin' at her name!
All thet old love, hot with pity as a flame,
Hared up till I went an' told her how it came

Thet I hedn't ast her sooner. An' somehow
When I saw her list'nin', blushin' chin to brow—
Why, I felt like life was unly startin' now!

Unhealthy Occupations.

The ancient man or woman who pounded wheat between two stones knew nothing of the trouble that was in store for the miller of today. Man's breathing apparatus was made to utilize pure air, charged with a minimum of dust. When a man lives in an atmosphere in which flour dust floats about in large quantities there is bound to be some part of his organization get clogged up. While workers in acid works are liable to have their teeth soften, and they wear away in a year or two if not protected, artisans in mills where metallic dust is in the air are very apt to engender diseases that will be chronic, if not speedily fatal.

The miller is generally an unhealthy individual, unless he be of the old time sort, who used to ride about the country during three parts of his working hours and spend only a little time within reach of the dust from his mill stones. It is not to be supposed that man will ever be able to get along without the miller. Such being the case, it is to be hoped that something more will be done in the near future to protect his lungs while at his work than has been accomplished hitherto.—Hall's Journal of Health.

The Book Agent's New Way.

Book agents follow the motto, "When everything else fails try curiosity," and it usually wins. An old farmer south of this city, who has thrown book agents over the fence, allowed his curiosity to lead him down to the gate to see a bicycle go by. Just as the young gentleman came up to the gate something went wrong with the wheel and he stopped to fix it. The old farmer kindly offered his aid, and the wily agent slipped a book into the victim's hand to hold until the wheel was fixed. The conversation turned from the bicycle to the book, and the former was repaired about the time the old farmer was ready to subscribe for two of the latter. When the name was well inscribed and the bicyclist out of hearing the old farmer scratched his head in a rather dazed way and said: "I'll be dinged if that ain't a book agent."—Indianapolis News.

Cameras in New York.

It is astonishing to consider the number of snap cameras now in use in New York. Turn where you will you are likely to run against a man mooning around with one of these machines. He is relentless and terrible. He will take you so that you will appear in the worst possible light to your friends if only he can get you in a good position to snap his weapon. No cowboy in the wilds of Texas takes greater pleasure in punching an ugly steer than does this gentleman of the gelatine film when suddenly there bursts upon his vision a group of boys playing "craps," toughs discussing politics, Chinamen paddling about, or a pretty girl posed on a curbstone waiting for a horse car.—New York Evening Sun.

Italian Funerals in New York.

About the gayest thing in this town is an Italian funeral. One may be seen almost any day creeping northward along Second avenue. With the outdoor instinct of their race the occupants of the coaches have all the windows down and all the curtains up. There are no black garments to be seen anywhere. On the contrary, the women wear their gayest headkerchiefs and the children are clad in the cast off finery of their elders. Nobody behind the first coach pretends to be cast down, and there is throughout the whole procession a frank enjoyment of the ride. Smiles wreathe the dark faces and all chatter as if out for a holiday.—New York Sun.

Sub-Divided Affections.

Helen—Here, Jack, is a red rose for you. That means my best love, you know.

Jack—You darling! Do I get that flower in your other hand, too?

Helen—No. That's for Tom, my other adorer. It is myrtle, and means constancy and fidelity.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

Throughout the most elegant periods of the "age of chivalry" handkerchiefs, or any substitute for them other than such as nature provided, were utterly unknown. Elaborate books of etiquette and treatises upon manners were written long before either handkerchiefs or table forks were thought of.

An Australian musician has invented a trombone that is played by steam. Its "God Save the Queen" can be heard at a distance of four miles. He had hard luck with it, however, for the people of his own town drove him out as a nuisance.

"Hunger is the Best Sauce."

As a rule, a person who has a good appetite has good health. But how many there are who enjoy nothing they eat, and sit down to meals only as an unpleasant duty. Nature's antidotes for this condition are so happily combined in Hood's Sarsaparilla that it soon restores good digestion, creates an appetite, and renovates and vitalizes the blood so that the beneficial effect of good food is imparted to the whole body. Truly hunger is the best sauce, and Hood's Sarsaparilla induces hunger.

Cricket is becoming a popular pastime among the English women, who defend themselves from any charge of oddity by referring to women cricketers in English literature and history. Miss Austen, for instance, played cricket and made the heroine of Northanger Abby play it.

Many a woman who resolves when she is married to make over her husband, ends by being content to make over her bonnets.

MEERCATS AS PETS.

They Are Very Cunning, but Are Terribly Liable to Consumption.

Old travelers are often asked to suggest an outlandish pet, as we can testify, but the demand is not easily answered. Doubtless meercats are the best all round, but they have their faults, and besides they are terribly liable to consumption. Our damp winters, and, above all, our draughty floors are very trying to animals that live underground in South African veldt. We ourselves kept one for nearly three years, having caught it when a baby. The scenes of its illness and death from inflammation of the lungs are pathetic to the degree which only those who have kept meercats could credit. At the first sign of indisposition we sent its successors to the Regent's park, and the authorities were overjoyed to receive them, sixteen years ago—the first male they ever had and the third female. It may comfort some of those who cherish these pets to learn that the former must have been 9 years old when it died and the latter 12; they may have been much older.

It is not worth while to describe animals so easily observed at this day. In brief, the meercat resembles a chubby weasel, nine or ten inches in length, the tail included, with gray, broken fur, muzzle, and ears of black velvet, the loveliest of eyes and the silkiest of lashes, a small, unceasing, cooing cry most restful to hear, and endless pretty ways. To behold one of them sitting upright by the hearth, with pendant paws, as its manner is, watching every movement in the room—or even outside the window—changing its note continually, as fancies pass through its shrewd little brain, delights the dullest soul. It has an extraordinary range of voice, mounting from the soft coo to a bark of passion—by no means so agreeable to hear. One could hardly exaggerate the charm of this pet. Upon the other hand, we must not conceal that the meercat has disadvantages. Though loving, it never yields its independence, and if one be resolved to forbid any diversion on which its little heart is set, our experience strongly advises that it be thrust into a cage with the utmost promptitude.

Those pretty teeth are sharp as needles and keen as razors. It cannot be induced to respect the carpet, scratching it up like a terrier at a rabbit hole, chattering the while in an eager, bustling tone, most musical, which warns the housewife, fortunately. Special care is needed, however, when you interrupt your "cat" at this work. And those we have known would not endure a dog. We have known an exception to this rule, but it is taken for granted in South Africa. The dauntless rage of the tiny creature as it springs to attack a mastiff or Newfoundland, with a kind of choking scream, appears to terrify the fiercest dog. We never saw one stand its ground, and they say on the veldt that the meercat is always victorious, leaping to his enemy's throat at a bound and severing the jugular.—London Saturday Review.

Beg Your Pardon!

What talismanic virtue there is in the three brief words, "Beg your pardon!" You dig your elbow into a gentleman's ribs in making your way through a crowd, and as he turns, irate, to administer the "upper cut" you utter the magic phrase in deprecating tones. Down drops his arm, his honor is satisfied, and notwithstanding the blue mark on his intercostal region he grins horribly a ghastly smile and bows his head as if in acknowledgment of an act of courtesy.

Passing along the avenue of knees in a street car, in obedience to the "move up" of the packing agent of one of those social Black Marias, you come down with maddening emphasis on an unpruned corn. The furious exclamation which follows the deed as naturally as foam from the drawn cork of a bottle of champagne is arrested in the middle with an obsequious "Beg your pardon!" and the expletive never reaches Heaven's chancery to trouble the eyes of the Recording Angel.

You tread on the "trail" of a lady and "r-r-r-ip" go the gathers. In tremulous semitones, plaintive as the "last sigh of the Moor," you solicit forgiveness, and she—no, beg pardon, she does not forgive you, but with a scowl that reminds you of the most vindictive of the Don's tormentors she passes on, thinking daggers but saying nothing.—New York Ledger.

A Trifler.

Mother—Lucy, hasn't Mr. Jinks proposed yet?

Lucy—No, not yet, mamma.

Mother—He helped you to put on your gloves last night.

Lucy (shaking her head)—I know he did, but there are six buttons on the gloves, and when he buttoned the fourth button he asked me if that wasn't enough. It only took him a minute. If he had any serious intentions it would have taken him half an hour at least. I see he is only trifling with my young affections.—Chatter.

A Macon, Ga., salesman while traveling on a southern road was greatly surprised when a woman occupying an adjoining seat whispered in his ear that his personal beauty had captured her susceptible heart. She was a woman of 45 and by no means beautiful. He took another seat, but she followed him and continued to pour into his ear her tale of passion until every person in the car was laughing. Finally it transpired that the woman was crazy and was then on her way to an asylum.

The best medical writers claim that the successful remedy for nasal catarrh must be non-irritating, easy of application, and one that will reach all the remote sores and ulcerated surfaces. The history of the efforts to treat catarrh during the past obliges us to admit that only one remedy has met these conditions, and that is Ely's Cream Balm. This pleasant remedy has mastered catarrh as nothing else has ever done, and both physicians and patients freely concede this fact. The more distressing symptoms yield to it.

A colored woman at Milledgeville, Ga., claims to be 121 years old. Her memory of things far in the past shows that she is very aged.

All Broken Down.

Is it not sad to see so many young men every day of whom this can be said? Young man, take my advice. Stop all indiscretions which you have practised, keep good hours, retire early, and build up your shattered system by using Sulphur Bitters, which will cure you.—OLD PHYSICIAN.

JUST BEFORE THE BATTLE.

A Song, Interrupted by Musketry, Is Finished Several Months Later.

Rev. Dr. Henry M. Field, editor of The New York Evangelist and the author of a recent volume entitled "Bright Skies and Dark Shadows," a compilation of war reminiscences, in a letter suggested that the hero of one of his best chapters was now residing in Kansas City. The story was that just before the battle of Franklin (Tenn.) a Federal officer was being entertained by the family of Col. McEwen, then, as now, a prominent citizen of that place. One of Col. McEwen's daughters was singing to the officer the at that time popular melody, "Just Before the Battle, Mother." The song was interrupted at the conclusion of the first verse by the roll of musketry. The officer hurried to the battlefield, was there desperately wounded, and for a long time wavered between life and death. On his return through Franklin, nearly seven months after that desperate battle, he called at the mansion of Col. McEwen and asked the young lady to complete the song left unfinished when the battle began.

Col. I. H. Waters, of this city, was the Federal officer mentioned, and the terrible wound he received at the battle of Franklin was not completely healed until 1884, when the last piece of bone was taken out.

"The battle of Franklin has not occupied my thoughts for at least twenty-five years," said Col. Waters, "but as I look back upon that day in November, and remember the hospitality accorded me by the family of Col. McEwen, I can see the events of that time as in a mirror. I was colonel of the Eighty-fourth Illinois under Kimball, and on the day in question, Nov. 30, we had been busy all day perfecting our intrenchments. We had but five divisions to oppose Hood's entire army and we were rushing to get our defenses completed. Our lines took in the town of Franklin, our right and left flanks resting on Harper's Ferry.

"In the afternoon of that day Gen. Kimball and I went out prospecting for something to eat. We had had no breakfast or dinner and were consequently very hungry. Col. McEwen's residence was a fine old property, situated on a slight elevation. We asked a native who lived there. He told us, at the same time informing us that he was a lawyer by profession, and that he was at that time at home. Arriving at the house we were greeted pleasantly by Col. McEwen, and on our informing him that we had eaten nothing that day, not because of want of appetite, but lack of viands, he gave us a substantial cold lunch. He also introduced us to his daughters, of whom he had three, all of whom I believe were single at that time. Gen. Kimball suggested that the young ladies entertain us with some music and the request was complied with.

"'As you are hourly expecting to meet with Hood,' said one of the young ladies, 'perhaps the most appropriate song we could sing would be this,' and she began: 'Just Before the Battle, Mother,' which, though old to them, was new to us.

"She had finished the first verse when we were startled by the rattle of musketry, the enemy attacking Waggoner's right. We darted out of the house leaving the young lady sitting at the piano. The battle was on when we reached the field. About 9:30 that night I was shot through the shoulder and was left for dead. It was the following April when we were returning through Franklin that Gen. Kimball and I again called upon Col. McEwen to thank him for his hospitality and to apologize for our abrupt departure on the day of the battle of Franklin. I still had my arm in a sling. While we were enjoying the colonel's hospitality I told the young ladies that now would be an excellent time to complete the song which had been so suddenly broken on the date of the battle, six months before."—Kansas City Times.

Spices and Pills.

A correspondent of The Christian, being in a country store in Tennessee, noticed a woman who brought butter and eggs to sell, and took the worth of them in pepper, nutmeg, allspice, tea and coffee—and pills. She had sixpence left after buying all the rest, and that just paid for a box of pills. The woman doubtless had her reasons, but naturally such a purchase, including nothing to eat, but only "seasonings," seemed curious and suggestive to a stranger—particularly so the medicine at the foot of the list.

It is calculated that a range of mountains consisting of 176 cubic miles of solid rock falling into the sun would only maintain the heat for a single second; a mass equal to that of the earth would maintain the heat for only ninety-three years, and a mass equal to that of the sun itself falling into the sun would afford 33,000,000 years of sun heat.

A man once advertised that for five shillings he would give any author an idea for his book that would enable him to dispose of his first edition in a week. He received several sums of five shillings each, and none of the authors ever denied that he had fulfilled his promise. He advised that the word "gratis" should be stamped on every cover.

Hold It To The Light.

The man who tells you confidentially just what will cure your cold is prescribing Kemp's Balsam this year. In the preparation of this remarkable medicine for coughs and colds no expense is spared to combine only the best and purest ingredients. Hold a bottle of Kemp's Balsam to the light and look through it; notice the bright, clear look; then compare with other remedies. Price 50c. and $1.

Haunted Hotel Rooms.

"Yes, a man who commits suicide in a hotel causes a vast deal of trouble," said an old hotel clerk. "If the number of the room in which the deed was committed gets out we always have to renumber the room before we can get anybody to occupy it. I recall an incident of a few years ago that is interesting. A well known Richmond man had committed suicide in one of the Indianapolis hotels. About the time the corpse was removed some of the electric wires in the building got crossed.

"That afternoon a traveling man was occupying a room several doors from the one in which the suicide had occurred. Every time he would call for a boy the register on the clerk's desk would point to the number of the room in which the suicide had occurred and from which the corpse had been removed only a few hours before. A bell boy answered the first call and came back white as a sheet, with the announcement that no one was in the room. 'Ting-a-ling-a-ling' went the call bell again, and once more the register pointed to the room in which the suicide had occurred. A second bell boy was sent to the room, and he came back as badly scared as the first, with the statement that no one was in the room.

"'It is the dead man's ghost,' said a guest who had become interested in the proceedings.

"Again the bell rang, and for the third time the register pointed to the suicide's room. I ordered a third bell boy to go up and make sure that there was no one in the room. Not much; he wouldn't go. Said I wasn't going to steer him in among spooks. I screwed up my own courage and started upstairs to make an investigation myself. My breath was beginning to come short when I met the traveling man on his way downstairs, fuming because his calls had not been answered. It occurred to me in a moment that the wires had become crossed."—Indianapolis News.

Why Boys Leave the Farm.

Farmers have themselves often to blame for the dislike their sons take to a business in which they find only the rough and hard side of life. Farm work is not so hard and disagreeable as it used to be before the introduction of much labor saving machinery that now lightens it. Still, though less disagreeable, the boys do not like to have its roughest and worst features put on them. Nor will it make it any better for the father, who now shirks whatever he dislikes, to tell his sons how much harder he had to work than they when he was a boy. Farm work is easier than it used to be, and the boys should be the first ones on the farm to find this out practically. Then fewer of them would be led from the farm by the attractions of city life.

So far as possible boys ought to have a personal and pecuniary interest in everything they do, and the girls also for that matter. Their labor legally belongs to the parent until they become of age, but he is indeed a strange father who keeps his sons or daughters at work without pay merely to save the wages of hired help. This working without pecuniary interest in what one is doing is too much like slavery. Just as soon as the pressure is removed, and the child becomes legally its own master, all restraint is thrown aside. Every young person should have some chance to work for himself on some corner of the farm, and whatever he thus earns should be his, to be saved or spent under parental supervision.

In this way the habit of earning money, and the knowledge of what it costs to procure it, as well as the best means of using it, may be learned. The farm has undoubtedly greater opportunities for teaching both boys and girls this practical knowledge of money and its value than any other business in the city can possibly enjoy. A great part of the advantage of living in the country for bringing up a family of children will be lost unless this opportunity is utilized as much as possible.—American Cultivator.

According to Size.

"Now, I'll show you over the house," said a friend to me the other day. She had moved into a south side residence whose numerous bay windows give one the impression of a roomy interior, when in fact the reverse is true. She had made many improvements and was anxious that I should see what a good housekeeper she was.

On the third floor she threw open a door disclosing an apartment about the size of a bathroom in the average flat, and in which she stored her trunks, valises, etc.

"This," said she, "was the room occupied by the former tenant's maid-of-all-work."

"Was there a hole sawed in the partition through which to extend her feet?" I inquired, as the story related by Frank Stockton flashed through my mind.

"Oh, no. Emergencies are met in better fashion in Chicago. Instead of making the room fit the girl, as Stockton did, the girl is selected to fit the room. The lady who formerly resided here told me that she had a small mark on the parlor door, and in choosing her help if the applicant came up to the mark she got the position, but if beyond it she had to go, no matter how superior her qualifications were."—Chicago News.

Letters from Victoria.

It takes one large volume to contain the court letters of Great Britain, and there are many autographs of Queen Victoria scattered through the pages. The first letter she wrote was penned when at sweet eighteen she stepped out of private life into the throne of the greatest government on the face of the globe. Her letter announcing her ascent is written on blue foolscap paper, with a narrow black border in honor of the death of William IV. The signature is boldly penned in a school girl hand, and she evidently wrote it very carefully. The ink is as black today as it was when it reached the state department during the administration of President Van Buren, and the indorsement of the great Minister Palmerston appears in the same ink below it.—*Washington Cor. Every Lady

SHOULD give Ayer's Hair Vigor a trial, before using any other hair-dressing. Applied according to directions, it keeps the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, and promotes the growth, beauty, and vitality of the hair.

"To restore the original color of my hair, which had turned prematurely gray, I used Ayer's Hair Vigor with entire success. I cheerfully testify to the efficacy of this preparation."—Mrs. P. H. Davidson, Alexandria, La.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past four or five years and find it a

Made by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Gentlemen

Who would avoid looking prematurely old, will find in Ayer's Hair Vigor a preparation that preserves both the fullness and color of their hair and causes it to retain much of its youthful richness to an advanced age. For diseases of the scalp, it has no equal.

"I once suffered the entire loss of my hair from typhoid malarial fever. Ayer's Hair Vigor restored my hair in a few months, and I have since had as heavy hair as before my sickness. The benefit derived from the use of the Vigor, in my case, is

"I was afflicted some three years with scalp disease. My hair was falling out, and what remained turned gray. I was induced to try Ayer's Hair Vigor, and in a few weeks the disease in my scalp disappeared and my hair resumed its original color. I shall be pleased to give further particulars in reference to this case to any one desiring them."—(Rev.) S. S. Sims, St. Bernice, Ind.

"For nearly three years I was covered with scrofulous sores, which were very offensive and painful. I was so reduced in strength as to be unable to attend to my business. I tried many remedies, and was treated by a number of physicians, but received no relief until I began to take Ayer's Sar-

Joseph Jefferson's Fortune.

The richest actor in this country today is undoubtedly Joseph Jefferson. Edwin Booth is supposed to have more money, but this is an error. Mr. Booth has earned large sums, but while modest enough in his own life, he has expended them generously, and besides has disbursed a fortune to liquidate the indebtedness incurred during his disastrous managerial career in this city. Mr. Jefferson on the other hand, has been a steady accumulator. From the time he began to make more than a living as an actor he has saved some of the surplus. He has lived well, but not extravagantly. He has provided generously for his family, but not wastefully. Such investments as he has made have been wise ones, and whatever speculating he may have indulged in has averaged a profit.

Nobody but himself knows how much he is worth. He probably knows it to a cent, for, while not penurious, he is exact and business like. One of the men closest to him, and certainly most conversant with his business, remarked the other day that Jefferson must be a millionaire, if not doubly so. Probably the single million is nearest to it. Considering how easily he takes life, how little trouble he goes to to create sensational popularity for himself, and the brevity of his working seasons (for he never plays more than forty weeks in a year, and as little more than thirty as he can manage in his engagements), this financial result is as worthy of note as he himself is worthy of the money.—Epoch.

The Woburn Journal

INSIDE OF FIVE MINUTES.

"Bother that speech! I wish to goodness the Fourth of July was over!" Mr. Jeffrey groaned as if all the sins of Chicago were loaded on his conscience. Presently he remarked, in a calm voice, to his pretty, young wife, behind the teakettle:—

"Mrs. Jeffrey, those biscuits are a success." And when Mr. Jeffrey had said so the last half of the seventh hot biscuit, with its thick coat of butter, reached the place where the groan had come from. But while stirring his fifth cup of tea he said, with another groan: "That speech makes me lose my appetite. You don't know how a fellow can be worried about his maiden speech, Molly! You need not fret about such things. That's a comfort, anyway."

"You need not worry either, Jeff. Ask to be excused, if it bothers you. They will invite somebody else to take your place."

"Won't do, Molly! I was rather pleased when the committee asked me, and so I promised right away. It would look bad to back out now."

"Look here Will; suppose I write that speech for you, and you deliver it?"

"Oh, Moll, I would not think of such a thing!"

"Why not? Why can't we help each other in this as in everything else? The one of us that finds a thing easier ought to do it."

"It's a great deal harder than you think."

"I remember the time when I was Molly Ross. I thought it a great deal easier then to dash off an oration than to bake a decent loaf of bread. Well, shall I write it for you?"

"No, thank you, Molly! It would never do, I am afraid. A fellow ought to stand on his own ground. I am bound to do it all by myself." He looked the picture of proud independence.

"All right, Will. Do just as you think best." She seemed a little humiliated.

"Never mind, Molly! I believe in your biscuits and coffee and butter, and lots of other things. You are about as nice and good a little wife as any fellow could wish for; but I would not have you dabble in political speeches. St. Paul don't approve of it either," he added, jocularly.

"I don't think St. Paul would object if he could come back. So broad-minded a man as he would be sure to alter some of his opinions for the use of our time. Besides, I offered to write in order to relieve you, sir. A woman can write, and still hold her tongue, and keep below the rostrum."

"All right; but you see, Molly, there is another hitch. You can't argue that away, if you tried ever so hard. I don't believe a woman can say all she has to say in five minutes. No speaker will be allowed more than five minutes at the celebration. Now a woman never knows when to stop. She can't do it to save her life. Her tongue will wag about things in general for half an hour, and by that time she generally is so excited you could not stop her any more than you could stop a watch that is wound up for the day. You would have to burst it or throw it in the water; nothing less violent could stop it."

"Do stop, Jeff, you horrid man! There! that's nice? And I, who thought I had trained you well to think highly of me and the rest of us women! You will have to be put through a new and special course of training, sir. And as for that speech, you may sigh for it as much as you please, for all I care. I would not write that speech for you now if you went down on your knees to ask me for it—no, sir, you will have to write it by your own proud self, hubby."

The big, bearded young "hubby" evidently thought her mock anger a good joke.

"No, I won't waste a drop of ink on it," he said. "We are just going to think it over on the stoop, my pipe and I. I guess I can see through it before tomorrow morning."

When the roosters awoke Mr. Jeffrey next morning before sunrise he said:—

"Molly, you ought to have heard my speech! It went off like a rocket; the people clapped like fury, and the fellows yelled themselves hoarse. I dreamed it was fourth of July, and my speech came off first rate in four minutes fifty-five seconds. I do wish it had not been a dream!"

Molly Ross had been a village school teacher. She was a small, airy creature, and still she understood how to wind the biggest boys around her little fingers. They were tame enough in her presence, but behind her back they were ready to fight for the honor of carrying coal to her stove, and the bliss of drawing water for her at the well. There never had been so popular a school-marm in that village. But at the very height of her popularity Miss Ross handed in her resignation to the trustees, and disappeared from this world at the end of the month. At that period she was last seen entering a village church, where a simple marriage ceremony changed her into Mrs. Jeffrey, the wife of a young, struggling farmer from the neighborhood. Miss Molly Ross had worked five hours a day, and rested on Saturdays, Sundays, legal holidays and all summer; Mrs. Jeffrey worked sixteen hours a day, and knew no Saturday holidays, no Sunday rest, no summer vacation. Miss Molly Ross had cashed forty dollars a month; Mrs. Jeffrey cashed just forty dollars less. Still Mrs. Jeffrey was supremely happy, even after a year of married life, and could not understand how in the world she could have gotten along as Molly Ross. What a difference love makes anyway! The young couple were doing well, but they had to work very hard. He toiled in the fields and stable from sunrise till sunset, certain parts of the year; she worked in the kitchen and dairy all day long, all the year round, and had breath enough left to sing merrily at her work. And she had the loveliest color in her cheeks, not due to cosmetics, but manufactured by the old reliable firm, Youth, Health and Kitchen Fire.

It was haymaking time on the farm—a busy, warm time. The Fourth of July, the village celebration, and Mr. Jeffrey's maiden speech was drawing close. Dinner was over, dish washing, too—and Mrs. Molly now proceeded to churn butter. A buggy stopped at the gate; an elderly gentleman, with gray whiskers and gold spectacles, came walking up to the house, and shook Mrs. Jeffrey's outstretched hand on the doorstep, where the little lady in her neat print dress and white apron, had come to meet her unexpected visitor, one of her former school trustees.

"I am so glad to see you, Judge Burns!" said her lips with a smile, and she meant it. "How are you and your people? Take this rocking chair."

"I am sorry I cannot stay, Mrs. Jeffrey; I am on my way to Pinelake on business. Very warm day—the dust nearly choked me—so I thought I would come and ask you for a drink out of your well, if you will allow me Mrs. Jeffrey."

They were both standing by "the old oaken bucket" at the well, where the judge had enjoyed a cool drink.

"I am sorry Mr. Jeffrey missed your visit," said Mrs. Jeffrey. "I know he would be delighted to have a talk with you. Could you not come in to tea on your way back from Pinelake? Mr. Jeffrey will be in then. We shall be happy to have you—and there will be fresh buttermilk by that time. I remember you were fond of it."

"I saw Mr. Jeffrey in the fields a little way off," the judge remarked with a smile. "I do believe he was talking to the haystacks. I am nearly sure I caught some scraps of an oration. He stood there, pitchfork in hand, before a row of stacks, and harranged them: 'Ladies and gentlemen! On this memorable day'. I knew he was practising his Fourth of July speech, and sympathized with him, for I am in the same box. For Mr. Jeffrey it has at least the charm of novelty; but wait until he has served the same dish some fifteen or twenty years; he will be pretty tired of patriotic speeches by that time." He smiled and she smiled.

"He complains now already. I offered to write that little speech for him, but he declined."

"Declined! Did he really? Well, well. Look here, Mrs. Jeffrey, let somebody else have it. Ask me for instance."

"Oh, Mr. Burns! you are joking."

"Not at all, not at all, my dear madam; I never was more in earnest. Do let me have that speech, please! I am willing to stoop down to pick up the crumbs that fall from the rich man's board—in this case. But remember it must be short—five minutes and no more."

"Would it not be a capital joke on Mr. Jeffrey?" the lady said, half musingly. "Well judge, I don't care if I write it for the fun of the thing. You must not tell him though before the Fourth of July is over. After the celebration you may tell him whenever you like."

"I can keep my peace if you can, Mrs. Jeffrey. Will you write it while I go to Pinelake? I might stop here on my return in a couple of hours and get the manuscript."

"I could not possibly do that. Business goes before pleasure, you know. I have my butter to churn."

"Look here; suppose you let me churn your butter while you write the speech?"

The old gentleman was by this time fairly interested in this novel transaction. He went to tie the horse and buggy under a shade tree, while thinking by himself:—

"There is plenty of time, and it will be cooler to drive in an hour or so. Churning is easy enough, I am sure; it's women's work. It won't take me long. It will be quite a change, too—variato delectat. It will be interesting to see what kind of opus that smart little lady turns out."

Mr. Jeffrey practised oratory before an audience of haystacks in the sweat of his honest brow. Puck, the judge's horse, made frantic efforts to keep off the flies. Mrs. Molly sat in the parlor where her marriage certificate and teacher's diploma looked down upon her out of her frames. Her pen was busily rasping over the note paper, and the writer looked pretty, cool and happy. Judge Burns looked neither cool nor happy in the cellar, sitting on a stool before an old-fashioned churn. The old gentleman was fast losing his temper, and making but slow progress with the butter. He did not find it as easy as he had thought—no woman's work by any means. He felt like shaking Jeffrey, too, if he had been on hand to be shaken.

"He was a brute, that's what he was!" Judge Burns muttered. "That big, burly, young fellow, to let that delicate young wife of his make a slave of herself, and break her back over that abominable churn! He would give Jeffrey a talking to. Thank heaven, Mrs. Burns had never been asked to do such work. Why, it was outrageous to let a woman handle that churn."

Bang, splash, bang, splash, up and down went the stick of the churn! The work grew heavier and heavier, the judge hotter and hotter. Down flew the gold spectacles; the hat followed suit; soon the coat lay on the floor alongside of the hat. Bang, splash, said the churn. With a final bang the judge jumped up from his stool in sheer despair, growling between his teeth, "Goodness sakes! Millenium will be on hand before that butter is done!"

"Well, Judge, how are getting on! said a cheery voice, and Mrs. Jeffrey's light print dress lit up the cellar door.

He picked up his hat and coat with a dazed haggard look, and said: "This is not a lady's work, Mrs. Jeffrey. I found out as much as that. You ought not to work that churn; You will hurt yourself."

"I churn three times a week. I don't mind it much now; I am used to it." Seeing how tired he looked, she suddenly changed the subject, and said: "Do come with me out of this gloomy place to the veranda. There is quite a breeze." She picked up his glasses and wiped them on her apron, while he preceded her up stairs. "This is the nicest corner in the afternoon, and this is the easiest rocking-chair. Sit down, sir. There is a palm leaf. Now get cool and comfortable while I come back with fresh buttermilk for you. Won't you enjoy buttermilk of your own making? Here are your glasses, and here is—the speech." She pulled it out of her apron pocket, and handed it reluctantly and timidly. "Now please don't make fun of my work, and I will praise yours so much more." She courtisied and disappeared.

Mr. Burns put on his glasses with out delay, unfolded the few leaflets and read. And when he was through reading he looked as though he had been listening to the first bluebird's song in early spring. He was in the best humor by the time that Mrs. Jeffrey appeared with a pitcher full of buttermilk. "What do you think of the buttermilk?" he called out.

"It's a great success, and I congratulate you, and I am ever so much obliged to you, Mr. Burns." Then she nodded, in an undertone, "And the speech?"

"It could not be improved upon, my dear Mrs. Jeffrey. You are an orator to the manor born, upon my word. Allow me to express my thanks to you."

They shook hands over the pitcher of buttermilk, and laughed like a couple of happy children. A moment after Judge Burns with the Fourth of July oration in his breast pocket, drove Puck on toward Pinelake.

The Fourth of July had come, and proved to be a regular scorcher. There was a noisy crowd at the village celebration, and the market-place was thickly strewn with burnt out fire-crackers, peanut shells, banana and orange peels. The speakers' platform was ablaze with bunting and every window around the square seemed a frame for pretty faces and gorgeous millinery.

Mr. Jeffrey's speech was one of the first on the programme, but it was by no means ode of the best. He began solemnly in a voice as loud as a fog horn: "Ladies and gentlemen, this memorable day," etc. For one minute there was a flow of pompous phrases, carefully committed to memory—then came a sudden stop—another stop. The tall speaker pulled up his shirt collar as if he was choking, started anew, got more and more entangled, wished himself a mile underground, flushed, stammered, and was at last gently reminded by the president that his time was up.

The last speaker was Judge Burns. And what a wonderful speech he made! There was no end of cheering and clapping. The girls waved their handkerchiefs, after having wiped off their tears. "Wasn't it perfectly lovely? Just too lovely for anything!" The women smiled, and the men nodded approval. "It was a daisy and no mistake." Hurrah for Judge Burns!" "Three cheers for Hezekiah Burns!" At an open window opposite the platform sat the postmaster's wife, and beside her a little lady in a white dress, with a pretty flushed face, and a pair of very bright eyes fixed on the speaker and turning to the village clock the moment Judge Burns closed his oration.

Mr. and Mrs. Jeffrey drove home early after the celebration. He had nothing to say, and was as cross as a bear after a failure. His wife did not show him any sympathy either—so unlike her, too! She seemed to have enjoyed herself thoroughly. Everything seemed funny to her on the way home where he would see no fun at all. Her very laugh grated on his ear for the first time. "Catch me making a fool of myself again in public;" he thought, but did not say so.

While he put the horse in the stable Mrs. Molly got the tea ready, an unusually good tea, and just the kind of jelly he liked best. In the evening she actually struck a match to light his pipe on the stoop, and laughingly pulled his curly hair.

"What's the matter with you tonight Molly?" I don't see what tickles you."

"I suppose it's the celebration that has gone to my head. It is Fourth of July but once a year."

"Yes, thank goodness!" he muttered puffing away at his pipe.

Next morning's mail brought a couple of letters and the local paper. This once the Guide seemed the centre of attraction to both Mr. and Mrs. J.

"Let's see about the celebration," she said eagerly; "do read aloud Will!"

"Haven't time. It would take me all the afternoon. Here are columns and columns but not about me. Oh, yes, sure enough. They are 'in hopes Mr. Jeffrey's corn crop will turn out a greater success than his oration.' Well, I don't care what they say." He laughed good naturedly, for he had gotten over his mortification. "Here is Judge Burns' speech, nearly all of it it seems, and half a column of eulogy on it. Just listen what they say:" 'A perfect swell of poetic expression—a chaste pearl of oratory—dewy freshness—a lightning flash of patriotic eloquence.' Are you choking, Molly!" She was as red as a berry, coughed and laughed alternately. Well, I must say it was a first rate speech, but no more than might be expected of a lawyer who has the gift of gab. He is an old hand at that sort of thing. Why, he has spoken in public these last thirty years. It's his business to talk, just as it is mine to raise corn and wheat. How did you like his speech, Molly?"

"I can't say I thought it so very wonderful," she said. "It was nice enough and short. He was through before his time was up. I noticed that more than anything else."

You don't mean to say so! Why I thought of you while he spoke—how you would appreciate him. They were all wild about that speech, both men and women. It was full of fun and fire and enthusiasm. Choking again, Molly? Shall I slap your back?" She shook her head. "Yes, he understands his business, that's certain. What's that? Looks very much like Burns' handwriting. What can he have to write about?"

Mrs. Molly flushed to the roots of her hair, while Mr. Jeffrey cut the envelope with a table knife, and fell in a brown study over his letter. His wife watched him with a roguish twinkle in her eyes. He looked as if he were reading the will of a maiden aunt whose inheritance he had been sure of and who had died suddenly after changing her will in favor of the Hottentot mission.

The letter really was from Judge Burns and ran as follows:

My Dear Mr. Jeffrey: Excuse an old friend who gladly took what you had declined. The oration I delivered yesterday, literally after the manuscript was the work of Mrs. Jeffrey. While she wrote that very excellent speech, which I accepted as a Godsend, I took her place at the churn, and spent one of the most laborious hours of my life making butter. The transaction being altogether in my favor, I feel very much indebted to Mrs. Jeffrey, and hope she will accept a token of my sincere regard in the shape of a new patented churn, which, as the manufacturers claim, will make churning a mere child's play. My dear Mr. Jeffrey, your partner in marriage has more brains, heart and energy than you and I taken together.

Sincerely your friend,
HEZEKIAH E. BURNS.

"Molly, did—did you really write that speech?"

"Yes sir," said Mrs. Molly. "And it came off inside of five minutes sir. Your coffee is cold. Let me give you another cup—Willie dear."—Harper's Bazaar.

Dreams.

The subject of dreams seems to demand more thorough study than it has yet received from science. Dr. Julius Nelson, of New York, has lately published the results of an examination he made of some 4000 of his dreams. He finds that the dreams of evening generally follow great physical or mental fatigue, and are associated with the events of the day. The same are applied to night dreams, which, however, have more of a terrifying element in them. The most remarkable and pleasant are the morning dreams, occurring after complete rest of the brain. Fancy then appears to have its widest range and activity, working marvelous transformations, and giving clear vision of the past and the future. Dr. Nelson further finds that the vividness of his dreams is subject to regular fluctuations of twenty-eight days, and that they also vary with the seasons, so that they are very vivid in December, and least vivid in March and April. An old popular superstition attaches special importance to dreams in the twelve nights from Christmas to January 6, and it is suggested that this is, perhaps, because dreams at that time have been found very vivid and distinct.

100 Ladies Wanted

And 100 men to call on any druggist for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicine, the great root and herb remedy, discovered by Dr. Silas Lane while in the Rocky Mountains. For diseases of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys it is a positive cure. For constipation and clearing up the complection it does wonders. It is the best spring medicine known. Large size package, 50 cents. At all druggists'.

Next to fishermen, hunters like to tell a good story. A party of fox hunters at Walnut Grove, Ga., relate that they spied a fox running at breakneck speed. The dogs gave it about two hours' chase, when the fox returned to a large log lying in the woods, and was seen to go right on, making the "chase" three different times. One of the party decided to station himself at the log in order to determine what the peculiar actions of the fox meant. Shortly after he had taken his stand he saw the fox coming. The fox leaped into the large end of the log. Just as he jumped into the log another fox was seen to come out at the other end. On examination the log was found to be entirely full of foxes, sixteen in number. And when one would jump in at one end he would punch out another, and thus force him to make the race.

THE PATHFINDER DEAD.

Last Sunday, July 13, General John C. Fremont died at his home in New York City after a short sickness aged 77 years. One son and a few other members of his family were present and saw him die, his wife and a daughter being in California, and another son, an officer in the U. S. Army, being at his post in some Western State or Territory.

General Fremont gained his title of Pathfinder for daring deeds and heroic achievments in the Rocky Mountains many years ago, and for being the first of white men to make explorations in the Western wilds and opening them up for settlement by pioneers from the East. As far back as 1843 General Fremont with a handful of brave and hardy men explored the region of Salt Lake and published the first account of it that the world ever heard of. Later his perilous passages through the Rocky Mountains and opening up of routes of travel through them were achievements the records of which will not very soon fade out of the pages of history.

General Fremont saved California to the United States when the Mexican war was on in 1847, for which he was duly honored. He was the first Republican candidate for President in 1856, but was defeated by Buchanan. He did noble service in the War of the Rebellion for which he never received from the Government the reward he deserved.

The life of General Fremont was an eventful one, and his name will occupy fair pages in this country's history after that of many others about whom a great deal more noise was made will have entirely faded out of the memory of the Nation.

THE ORIGINAL PACKAGE BILL.

Amid the pressure of other matters, the House should not neglect to assign an early day for the consideration of the "Original Package Bill." That is a subject which does not admit of delay, and with raference to which there is a growing impatience in the public mind.—Boston Journal.

The decision of the Supreme Court has caused a great change to come over Topeka. The town is now full of "Original Package" houses; the old saloon-keepers that had squatted just beyond the State line, are all back with their packages, large and small, and are exulting over their victory. What a shame it is that Congress does not do something to relieve the people from such disgraceful proceedings! It is too bad that people who try to be decent have to submit to such things. —Topeka (Kan), Union Signal.

There is no measure now before Congress that calls for prompt action more imperatively than the one above mentioned. It is of vastly more importance to the nation at large than the Silver, Tariff or Federal Election bill, and ought to be the first thing attended to that the gates may be shut down before the whole country is flooded with rum in "original packages."

There should be no divided opinion in Congress on this subject and no time ought to be lost in passing the bill now pending before the House.

THE FEDERAL ELECTION BILL.

On Monday last the Republican members of the U. S. Senate voted in caucus to pass Mr. Lodge's Federal Election bill which means that it will soon become law.

Congress has inaugurated no measure for a long time that has met with such frenzied opposition from the Democratic side of the house as this. They seem to think that it is an uncommonly heavy blow aimed directly at their most vital parts. It looks a little that way certain, and it is not surprising that they howl.

With Mr. Lodge's Election law in full and unobstructed operation in all the States south of Mason and Dixon's line the "solid South" would nevermore be heard of and Republicans would get some votes and a fair share of the Presidential Electors and Congressman from that region.

No honest people will object to the Federal Election bill which the House has passed and the Senate has agreed to. The Democrats are the only ones who object to it because "no rogue e're felt the halter draw with good opinion of the law."

The Democracy, especially the Southern Democracy, are bitter against Congressman Lodge and his bill, but the latter is sure to go through all right, and the former don't care a sue markee whether the Democracy love him or not.

THE NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT.

The National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, which is to be held in Boston during the second week in August, promises to be the largest one that ever met. Information from all parts of the Union makes it certain that it is to be an immense affair, for which the people of Boston have already begun preparations on a large scale.

The Veterans everywhere are anticipating the occasion with great interest. It will collect together many distinguished military men as well as thousands of the rank and file. They will receive a cordial welcome and the the very best of treatment from the citizens of Boston and soldiery of the State.

THE SILVER BILL.

Late last week the Silver Bill, over which Congress labored for some time in order to perfect, was passed and sent to the President for his approval. It is claimed to be a compromise between the free coinage people and the radicals of the other wing and will on the whole prove to be a very harmless measure.

What its effect will be on business can only be told after it has been tried. There are all manner of theories about it—in fact, the operation of the law is only a matter of theory at the best. Its actual influence on money, either gold or silver, no man can tell, although everybody who cares enough about it to give it any thought has a theory as to how it is going to work.

But it is likely the bill will prove of more benefit to the country than a good many people think for.

☞ A copy of "Vivisection in America" by Frances Power Cobbe and Benjamin Ryan, with a Preface (the best part of the pamphlet) by Philip G. Peabody, a lawyer of eminence in Boston, and a staunch friend of the Mass. S. P. C. A., has found its way to this office and will recieve proper attention in due time. The publication contains also papers from Col. R. G. ("Bob") Ingersoll, Rev. Phillips Brooks, Senator Dawes, and other distinguished people, all in remonstrance of the cruel and idiotic practice of vivisection of dumb animals. It, with the abundance of good reading issued by Mr. George T. Angell the devoted and efficient President of the above Society, ought to be sown broadcast all over the land.

— We feel justified in advising a careful perusal of "Library Notes" in this paper because the writer of them possess good literary judgment and taste and hence her recommendations as to what books deserve first to be read are safer to follow than those who are of inferior culture and literary gifts.

— The National Band gave one of the finest concerts on the public bandstand last Wednesday evening that has ever been given there. The selections were nearly all new and there was not a poor one among them. The "Medley", or string of old plantation and other airs, was the best we ever heard.

— A Wood Mantel which costs $30 often adds $100 to the beauty and value of a house. At one establishment in Boston over sixty styles of mantels are erected and on permanent exhibition. No one should fail to see this Mantel Exhibition which is at Paine's Furniture Warerooms, 48 Canal street, Boston.

— Auctioneer Gregory advertises an important sale of real estate in the JOURNAL to day to which attention is called. There is a chance there for somebody to "make a dollar" by attending the sale, for the property is going to the highest bidder, come what may. Gregory is pretty busy these days.

— Among the courtesies tendered the New England delegations to the annual meeting of the National Pedagogue Association at St. Paul, Minn., were two firstclass cyclones, one of which, above Minneapolis, destroyed 5 lives, and the other, on Lake Pepin, 100 lives. Perhaps our people did not relish such a demonstrative reception.

— The JOURNAL Book and Job office is complete in all its appointments and has the reputation of turning out as fine work and as much of it as any printing establishment in Middlesex county. It is fully supplied with presses, all the latest styles of type, stock and men to use them, and gentlemen, your work is respectfully solicited. —tf.

— The members of Post 33 and Relief Corps 84 went to Chelsea last Saturday evening and spent a few hours at the Soldiers Home there. They filled three street cars and Supt. Wentworth made everything as comfortable and pleasant as could be for them. They enjoyed the visit at the Home and the ride to this city which they reached about midnight.

— Last Tuesday Dennis Hurley, who lives near Sherman Place, was overcome by the heat so severely that his condition necessitated the attendance of watchers all night. He was better Wednesday morning and went to work, but about noon attempted suicide by cutting his throat. The wounds were not dangerous and the doctors say he will be well again in a few days.

— Driver Thomas C. Boyce of Fire Engine No. 1, who was injured by the premature discharge of a cannon while firing the sunset salute on July 4, and so wonderfully escaped great mutilation and perhaps death, made his first appearance on the street last Tuesday. He came down to Roulo's barber shop for a shave, but did not stay down long. He looks bad but is improving very rapidly.

— Tuesday evening, July 15, D. D. G. D., N. W. Snow and suit installed the Officers of Rumford Lodge, 618, K. of H.: P. D., George Parker; D., C. W. Nute; Asst. D., Alex Grant; R., O. M. Brooks; Fin. R., A. H. Holland; Treas., A. S. Wood; Chap., F. W. Bosworth; Guide, Josiah Parker; Rep., A. S. Wood; Alternate, A. H. Holland; Trustees, F. A. Flint, O. M. Brooks, F. W. Bosworth.

— The mid-summer convention of the Middlesex Central Christian Endeavor Union and picnic will be held at Highland Lake Grove, Norfolk, next Saturday, July 26, for which great preparations are in progress in the way of speakers, music, games, boating, etc. A special train of cars will leave the N. Y. & N. E. Railroad station at the foot of Summer street, Boston, at 9 A. M. sharp. Tickets for the round trip from Boston 50 cents.

— Mr. Jacob M. Ellis has a good many large jobs on hand, and employs a good many men. He has a contract at White River Junction, Vt., that takes a large force; the demolishing of the old and building of a new railroad bridge at Somerville is a big job; he has contracts for concreting at Andover; the foundation of the Woburn M. E. Church and the foundation of many other buildings keep him, his men, and his horses very busy all the time.

— "The Fall of Babylon" now running at Oakland Garden, Boston, is a big thing. Thousands of people go to see and are delighted with it every day. It would take a good deal more room than we have to spare to describe it, so the reader must accept our word for it that it is a magnificent show—spectacular play, or whatever else it may be named. It is richly worth going over to Oakland Garden and the price of admission to see.

— Mr. E. Prior will hereafter carry on the auctioneer business on his own hook, to which end the partnership of William Winn & Co. has been dissolved. Mr. Prior has cried sales in this place and vicinity for quite a number of years and is regarded as one of the best public salesmen anywhere in this part of Middlesex. He has made friends and is popular with everybody on account of his fairness and reliability, on which score he has always been in demand to cry at vendues. He will doubtless continue to do a good business. And success to him, says the JOURNAL.

— Miss Jennie E. Skinner of the Plympton School and Miss Amanda Severns of the Rumford (N. W.) will start next Monday on a trip to the White Mountains where they expect to make quite a tarry. During their stay in that wild and romantic region these ladies will spend a night at the Summit House on Mt. Washington. At the close of their visit up there they intend to come down to Warren, N. H., where they will be met by Miss Emma Fowle, and the three will remain there for several weeks for rest and recreation. If anybody needs a vacation good, faithful school teachers do.

— The Editor of the JOURNAL owes Mr. John Jones of this city a vote of thanks. When he returned from a very pleasant visit to his old home at Carrickmacross, County Monahan, Ireland, some 10 days ago, Mr. Jones brought and presented to said Editor a very fine blackthorn cane which he cut there expressly for the purpose, and which will be prized as a handsome and valuable present by the recipient as long as he has any use for a cane. It is a fine stick, and will be valued all the more highly from having come straight across the waters from the "Old Sod." Mr. Jones will please accept our thanks.

— The following officers of Crystal Fount Lodge, I. O. O. F., were duly installed by B. W. Potts and suite of Putnam Lodge of Roxbury last Monday evening: N. G., Philos S. Goodrich; V. G., William D. Wright; R. S., Alonzo L. Perham; T. Orlando M. Brooks; C. Benjamin L. Trull; W. Ainsley E. Douglas; I. G., William J. Brown; O. G., Somes C. Hilton; R. S. N. G., Thomas L. Loomer; L. S. N. G., George B. Woodside; R. S. V. G., Edwin F. Tibbetts; L. S. V. G., Elmer R. Soper; Chaplain, Herbert S. Dickinson; Organist, T. M. Chute. At the close of the ceremony a collation was served.

— Union 21 of the Union Endowment, a Five Year Benefit Order, was instituted in G. A. R. Hall, Main street, on Monday evening July 7, by Dr. J. Anson Pushee, Supreme Supervisor, and W. Janes. The following is a list of officers: President, Dr. Robert Chalmers; Vice Pres., W. A. Poole; P. Pres., Asa G. Sheldon; Clerk, S. A. Woodside; Treasurer, Geo. H. Sutherland; Financier, Abbie M. Chase; Chap., Catherine Rogers; Marshall, Silas F. Corbett; I. Doorkeeper, Eva Davenport; O. Doorkeeper, Ida Smith. The next meeting will be held in G. A. R. Hall Monday evening, July 21. All wishing to become Charter members can do so by applying to Dr. Chalmers on or before that date.

— Cards announcing the wedding of Miss Mary Reade, daughter of postmaster Lawrence Reade of this city, and Doctor Charles H. Winn of Winchester, and for the wedding reception, have been sent out this week. The ceremonies will be held at St. Charles (R. C.) church in this city on Tuesday evening, August 5, and will be conducted by Rev. Fr. Quealy, assisted by other clergymen. The wedding reception will be held in Music Hall, Post-office Building, from 8 to 9 o'clock on the same evening and rumor says it is going to be on a magnificent scale. The same authority places the number of invitations at 500. Music Hall, rumor goes on to say, will present a brilliant scene on that evening, and that Miss Mary's bridal reception will eclipse anything of the kind ever witnessed in this city.

— Dr. J. M. Harlow and Mrs. Harlow returned last Tuesday evening from their Western trip and visit in good health and spirits, and well pleased with all they saw and experienced while away. After leaving Chicago, where they made a considerable stop (which was chiefly devoted to sight-seeing) the Doctor and wife visited St. Paul (with the beauties of which city they were delighted) and regions thereabout, and then proceeded on to the enterprising, wealthy and rapidly growing New England city of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, where they remained several days, and of the growth and future prospects of which they gave a glowing account. There is nothing "mushroom" about Sioux Falls. It is based on solid New England money and enterprise; it has the elements of great wealth within its own borders; its waterpower, its mills, its vast quarries of jasper, etc., are bound to be the building up of a great and prosperous city there. Its growth, although phenomenal in extent, is healthy, and such it is bound to be in the future. Dr. Harlow has money invested in live industries at Sioux Falls, and if he were only a wealthy man he would put more of it into other enterprises out there. The Doctor and Mrs. Harlow enjoyed their Western trip very much indeed.

— A representative of the JOURNAL attended the installation of the officers of Shawsheen Tribe, I. O. R. M., and Nahmeokee Council of D. of P. last Monday evening in Red Men's Hall, and enjoyed it very much. After the installation a fine treat of cake, ice cream, etc., was provided at G. A. R. Hall which was partaken of by members of the Order and invited guests with pleasure. The following were installed in Shawsheen Tribe: Prophet, O. J. Hart; Sachem, A. U. Dickson; Senior Sagamore, A. T. Webber; Junior Sagamore, John Bates; Sannaps, A. L. Perham, D. K. Colgate; Warriors, C. W. Ames, J. E. Boutwell, Wm. Grant, W. R. Newcomb; Braves, Frank Newcomb, Joseph Larock, J. Whittey, J. E. Givens; Guards, P. M. Warland, W. J. Bryant. In Nahmeokee Council: Prophetess, Mrs. Jennie F. Butters; Pocahontas, Mrs. S. Jessie Crowell; Wenonah, Mrs. Harriet Knights; Powhatan, O. J. Hart; K. of R. Mrs. Olivia Greenleaf; Assistant K. of R. Mrs. Ella G. Richardson; K. of W. Mrs. Mabel Dickson; Scouts, Mrs. Emma F. Webber, Mrs. Emma Bryant; Runners, Mrs. P. M. Warland, Mrs. Sarah F. Duren; Councillors, Austin Crowell, L. W. Brittan; Warriors, Misses Ida Smith, Hattie Whittey, Nellie Smith, Margaret Hall; Braves, A. T. Webber, A. U. Dickson, Wm. Grant, D. K. Colgate; Guards, Mrs. Abbie French, W. J. Bryant.

— Officer Clarence Kean spotted his man about 2 o'clock last Monday morning and because Henry F. LaRock could not furnish $1500 bail for his appearance at the next criminal term of the Superior Court at Cambridge (providing the grand jury find a bill against him), which was Judge Converse's conclusion after investigating LaRock's case in the Woburn District Court last Monday morning, he is confined behind iron bars in the County jail. All because Officer Clarence Kean found his man. LaRock was arrested early on last Monday on a charge of attempting to burn the stable on High street (the Charles Converse place) where he had been keeping the horse that hauled his bread cart round among customers and where William Wood, the machinist, also keeps a horse. LaRock had been talking so strangely lately that Chief McIntosh began to have suspicions concerning him and thereupon set a watch to catch him if he undertook any crooked business. He talked about being afraid of having the stable and his property burned up because it had been found that he was, or had recently been, a liquor spotter. He advised Wood to get his horse insured. LaRock's horse and fixings were well insured, so it is alleged, which with his singular talk set the police on the qui vive. They had been watching him for a week during which one or more attempts had been made to set the barn on fire. The evidence against LaRock was however not considered sufficient by the Chief and the watch went on. But about 2 o'clock on last Monday morning Officer Kean, who had been doing some tall watching, was rewarded with a discovery. The hay had been well saturated with kerosene, an operation which the Officer watched with interest, then the matches were struck and LaRock's alleged face and form shone out in such a way that all doubt as to what was going on and who was doing it was at once removed. Satisfying himself of the authorship of the work Officer Kean went at it and extinguished the fire, which was no fool of a job, saved the property with much effort, reported progress, and secured his man. LaRock was bound over to the Superior Court that same morning in $1500 which he couldn't raise, therefore went to jail.

City Government.

ALDERMEN.

A regular meeting of the Board of Aldermen was held Tuesday evening. Aldermen Ramsdell, Golden and Place absent. Petitions were received as follows: Philip Haggerty, license to clean vaults; E. F. Banks, for sixth-class liquor license, 389 Main street; Burrill Putney, State aid, all referred to committees. C. H. Smith and other fish dealers asked for a hearing in the matter of requiring a license for out-of-town fish dealers. Hearing set for July 22. The Overseers of the Poor reported for June—Families assisted 27, person 105, at an expense of $204.31. The matter of an appropriation for the 39th Massachusetts Infantry Association, recommended to the committee. Ordered that a portion of Montvale Avenue be relocated as asked for by G. F. Bean and others. Under the head of unfinished business the Clerk read the Mayor's communication removing Daniel J. McGiver as a police officer of the city. No one offering a suggestion from the floor, the Mayor said it was proper and necessary for the Board to take some action on his removal of the officer. A hearing had been held, and his action should be confirmed or something done. On motion of Alderman Kenney it was voted to ballot yes or no upon sustaining the Mayor's action and it resulted in a unanimous vote sustaining the Mayor's action. The application of B. S. Devlin & Co. for a liquor license was laid over. Dartmouth street, Longwood and Dexter Avenues, Ward 6, were accepted as public highways. Adjourned to next Tuesday evening.

Housekeepers laugh right out when the groceryman shows them some unknown brand of soap, and tells them that it is the best, the cheapest and finer than ever soap was before. They laugh because well they know perfection cannot be improved upon, and as they know Brussels soap is perfection, both in its cleansing and its lasting qualities, they will have no other.

Y. M. C. A.

The four o'clock meeting last Sunday was led by Mr. Harry Carter of Amherst College.

All men, of all ages and nationality are invited to attend the Gospel meeting at 8 P. M. on Saturday.

Next Sunday's 4 o'clock Men's meeting will be under the charge of the Religious Work Committee.

Tuesday evening the regular meeting of the Board of Directors was well attended. The various committees gave their reports of the work, and plans were made for the work of the coming fall and winter.

The Summer Encampment at North Lubec commences Aug. 9. North Lubec is a delightful spot on the coast of Maine. There are sail and row boats for the sailor. Fish and game for the angler and hunter. And fine roads for the horseman and bicyclist. If you wish to go you can obtain membership tickets of the General Secretary.

Boston Harbor viewed by moonlight with a good natured, well-behaved crowd, the occasion enlivened by firstclass instrumental and vocal music, has been the delightful experience of hundreds of the friends of the Cambridge Association each summer for the past four summers. This year the committee have again secured the staunch steamer, Longfellow. The date selected is Thursday, July 31. The moon is expected to be on its good behavior, and if the calendar is to be depended on, the conditions will be perfect. Steamer leaves Battery Wharf at 7 P. M. Lynn and Woburn will accompany us. Tickets only fifty cents from Boston, 75 cents from Woburn. Young men take notice that this event is not for men only. Tickets on sale now at the Rooms. Party limited to 350.

A Freedom Party.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob M. Ellis gave their son Arthur Clinton Ellis a great party and made him some handsome presents last Monday evening at their elegant home, No. 25 Salem street, in token of his arriving at majority on that date. Neighbors and friends were present in goodly numbers by whom a very pleasant evening was spent. Numerous representatives of Bellevue Club, of which the young gentleman is a member, were also seen among the large company. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis, by the hand of Mr. Elmore A. Pierce, who is glib and eloquent of tongue, gave their son a costly gold watch, chain and charm; and President John F. Carley, for the Bellevue Club, presented him with a solid gold headed umbrella. The presents were handsome and valuable, and were bestowed on as worthy a young man as there is in Woburn.

A choice collation was served which after an earnest and pleasant discussion of the same, and some excellent music, the very agreeable affair came to an end.

Mass. Char. Mech. Ass'n.

This organization has always been purely an unselfish one. Its Managers for nearly a hundred years have given freely of their time with no other compensation than the satisfaction following from the performance of worthy acts. Since its organization it has expended hundreds of thousands of dollars in unostentatious charity: besides expending large sums for the encouragement of the mechanic arts.

Its Managers are now engaged in preparing for another exhibition of Industry, Skill and Art, to be held in October and November of this year. The prospect is most encouraging. Large numbers of applications have been received covering the whole range of New England industries. The WOMANS ART and INDUSTRY SECTION will include specimens of every line of business and commendable occupation in which women are engaged. The Art Galleries will contain a large and valuable collection of rare paintings and other works of Art. Music of the highest order will be heard day and evening, and the exhibition promises to be of great value to visitors and exhibitors alike.

Laying the Corner-stone.

At 3 o'clock last Monday afternoon the corner-stone of the new Methodist Church in this city was laid in due and regular form. The occasion was made one of considerable importance and the ceremonies were impressive. Although the weather was uncomfortably warm and the sun's rays took hold very sharply there were a goodly number of people at the meeting which was held in the easterly part of the building, that being the only portion of it under cover. The exercises consisted principally of prayers; fine singing led by Rev. C. H. Hannaford; addresses by Bishops, local and outside clergymen; a business statement by the pastor Rev. Hugh Montgomery; the ceremonies proper of laying the corner-stone, etc. The pastors of all the Protestant churches in this city participated in the meeting which was directed by Rev. J. W. Lindsey, D. D., Presiding Elder of the North Boston District in which Woburn is included.

The programme was opened with singing by a choir led by Rev. C. H. Hannaford. Then followed the introductory part of the ritual by Rev. N. B. Fiske, prayer by Rev. L. B. Bates, D. D., singing, responsive reading by Rev. W. H. Meredith, Scriptural reading by Rev. H. C. Parker of the Unitarian Church, address by Rev. Daniel March, D. D., of the Woburn Congregational Church, address by Rev. Daniel Winn of the First Baptist Church, Woburn. Bishop W. F. Mallalieu of New Orleans then delivered a stirring address. At the close of which the audience passed to the northwest corner of the edifice, where Rev. Hugh Montgomery, pastor of the church, made an address, in which he stated $16,000 had already been raised for the new church, including the sale of the old church property. There is needed $5,000 more to complete the church and parsonage, and he wanted to have the new edifice dedicated Jan. 1, 1891, free of debt. A number of subscriptions were then made. E. G. Clough, chairman of the building committee, then handed to Jacob M. Ellis, contractor of the stone work, the tin box containing various documents, which was inserted in its place in the corner-stone. The box contained copies of the Christian Advocate, Zion's Herald, WOBURN JOURNAL, Woburn City Press, Methodist Year Book, Discipline, the Bible, a book entitled "Sacred to the Uttermost;" Year Book of the Woburn M. E. Church, containing names of all the church members, probationers and officers of the church; a list of all the subscribers to the church fund and the amounts, a photographic view taken by Mr. G. F. Hartshorn, C. E., of the John Tidd house, which was raised and erected on this church site May 23, 1809; also a photographic view taken by Mr. Hartshorn, of the church foundations as they were July 10, 1890. On the back of this photograph are the names of Contractors Jacob M. Ellis and George W. Kimball and those of the workmen employed on the building.

After the box had been deposited, Rev. J. W. Lindsay, D. D., spread the mortar, and the stone was lowered to its position, while the Reverend gentleman repeated the usual dedicatory formular. Mr. Hubbard Copeland, Superintendent of the Sunday School, then presented to Rev. Mr. Lindsay the silver trowel he had used in the ceremony, and the exercises closed with a prayer, singing of the doxology and benediction by Rev. J. H. Mansfield. Among the prominent clergymen present from abroad were Bishop W. F. Mallalieu of New Orleans, Rev. L. B. Bates of East Boston, Rev. W. H. Meredith of Stoneham, Rev. J. H. Mansfield, Presiding Elder of the Lynn District; Rev. S. E. Breene of Cambridge, Rev. W. J. Pomfret of Medford, Rev. C. H. Hannaford of East Cambridge, Rev. N. B. Fiske of Hudson and Rev. Charles A. Merrill of Maynard, the last having been former pastors over this society.

A Competitive Examination.

City Clerk Moreland has kindly forwarded to the JOURNAL office the following circular which we publish for the benefit of our readers:

The Civil Service Commissioners of Massachusetts announce that there will be held, at an early date, a special competitive examination for the purpose of establishing an eligible list of stenographers and typewriters. All citizens who have resided in Massachusetts during the past year have a right to apply.

Blank applications can be obtained at the Commissioners' Office, No. 5 Pemberton Square, Boston, by any who ask for them, either in person or by letter.

The chief requirement in the examination will be expertness and accuracy in both stenography and typewriting.

"For His Slurring Remarks."

The Waltham Free Press raps Editor Hobbs pretty severely for his slurring remarks about the Suburban Press Association on their recent Southern trip. The Press says: "For pure, unmitigated, unadulterated pig-headedness and conceit our very esteemed Woburn brother appears to take the cake. He loses no opportunity to assail an organization of which he knows absolutely nothing and seems to assume that the world revolves around Woburn and that the centre of the universe is in the JOURNAL office. He may be right, but our impression is that he is bilious."

THE OLD ARMY COAT.

BY JOHN L. PARKER.

I wore this old blue coat, my boy,
Way back in sixty-two;
We marched up the Peninsula
When it was bright and new;
'Twas with me on the picket line,
Kept cold and damp away;
How well I loved this friend of mine,
My comrade night and day.

The buttons represent six States,
Our old New England line;
Connecticut, and Rhody small;
See Massachusetts shine;
New Hampshire here, and there Vermont,
With Maine and her pine tree;
Each one recalls a Yankee friend
Who kindly swapped with me.

Near Yorktown it was soiled with mud
While I used spade and pick;
At Gaines's Mills 'twas stained with blood
Where deadly blows were thick.
This rent was by a rebel made,
His shot just missed the goal,
And though the bullet got away,
You see, I saved the hole.

In Libby Prison this old coat
Served for my only bed;
It carpeted my bit of floor
And pillowed there my head.
It was my friend when friends were few,
My backer through the strife,
And though it is no longer new,
I'll cherish it for life.

So lay the old coat by with care,
Preserve it for the past;
Remember those who used to wear
This loyal color fast,
And should the day ere come again
For patriots to be true,
Stand up, my boy, as they did then
Who wore the loyal blue.

National Encampment.

Chairman Goodale of the Executive Committee of the G. A. R. encampment has sent a letter to Secretary Tracy, asking him, in accordance with a vote of the committee, to detail the navel fleet, now cruising in eastern waters, to be present in Boston harbor on or before Aug. 11, and remain there during the session of the encampment, and that at the time the Grand Army begins its march through the streets of Boston the commanding officer of the fleet be authorized to fire a salute.

Sunday School Picnic.

As the "All er bored" of the Conductor sounded last Thursday morning more than one teacher responded with an internal "and worried too" as they contemplated the introduction that was sure to occur between the youthful picknickers and the smoking Ichthyosaurus of Haggett's Pond.

Three hundred anticipative appetites marched from the station to the grove, and no sooner there than the great feature of the day, the long contemplated Orthodox-Baptist Base Ball game was announced to occur within the hour at the ball grounds, and thither the muscle, and the beauty, and the lungs of the party went.

While pitcher Lounsbury is adjusting his glasses and giving another hitch to his knickerbockers, preparatory to unwinding the ball, let us look a moment at some of the contestants:

Foremost among these was the Umpire, or rather the Umpires. Perhaps we may best describe them as the ordinary Picnic Umpire—they may have seen baseball played before. Who is that young man out in the field assuming the nonchalance of the profession? That is Crosby of Innitou Canoe Club fame. He handles a bat as he would a paddle. That man at the bat is Buss and being a twirler himself he thinks he knows how to do it: fourteen runs by the Orthodox off from his delivery in the first inning did not shatter his belief in himself.

The military man who is alleged to be keeping the score is one Conn.

The game begins; bases on balls follow base hits until five runs are made and yet the scholarly left handed pitcher, with a patience born of much defeat in Tennis, never lost his grip, and the third man was finally put out.

Who did you say these two Baptist outfielders were? Lamb and son. Can they play ball? Just watch 'em. That silent man at short stop is Blodgett.

We don't know just how many hits were made in the first Orthodox inning; sufficient to say they scored fourteen runs therein, and he of the sash pitching good ball thereafter, the score stood at the finish, with 4 innings for Orthodox and five for Baptists, 22 to 11 in favor of the former.

We need not dwell further on the game but can say with Macaulay "The place was worthy of such a trial," the game and the grounds being very rocky.

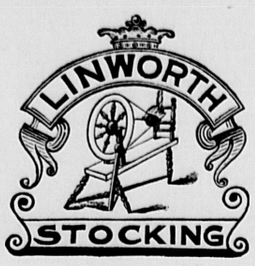
What remained of the muscle and lungs, and all the beauty, went from the ball field to the boats and the groves and all returning on the special train agreed that as picnics go it was a good one, no accidents nor misfortunes attending it.—X.

"Have you washed your feet?" You think this is a queer question to ask, but it is one that many Mammas have got in the habit of asking the boys and girls as "Have you washed your hands?"

And Why? Because it has been almost impossible to get Stockings that would'nt crock and fade.

But alas! for Pearline.

We have got a Line of Stock-



ings Worth much more than many so called "Fast Blacks," which will please the Mammas and the boys and girls as well, and not cost any more. Sizes to fit everybody from baby to grandmamma.

Pearline has its place but it will not have to be used to wash-out the stains left by the "LINWORTH."

THE SCORE, ETC.

About three hundred old and young participated in the picnic at Haggett's Pond, Andover, on Thursday of last week, held under the auspices of the Congregational and the Baptist Sunday Schools. The management was in charge of a committee consisting of Mr. F. J. Brown, W. E. Blodgett and W. W. Crosby, and everyone seemed pleased with the way the affair was managed. The day was all that could be desired and one long to be remembered by those who attended.

An interesting part of the day's sport was the ball game between nines from the Congregational and the Baptist Sunday Schools. The game was marked by light batting and loose fielding on the part of the Baptists and stronger batting with sharp fielding by their opponents. The following is the official score:

Didn't Suit the Democrats.

Mr. Lodge signalized his return to Massachusetts by joining in the celebration at Winchester on Friday and delivered a patriotic speech.—Lynn Item. Lodge never loses an opportunity to wag that pharisaical tongue of his.—Lowell Times.

Of course the Democratic Times did not like the speech made by Mr. Lodge at Winchester. It was too patriotic to suit this defender of the crimes the Elections bill is intended to punish. But Mr. Lodge will keep right on, and the bill will become a law.—Lynn Item.

Mr. Lodge's Winchester 4th of July speech received unstinted praise from all quarters. It was of the very best quality and commanded the undivided attention of all who heard it. But it is not to be expected that a Bourbon newspaper can see anything to commend in the speech of a Republican, particularly in one of Congressman Lodge's.

Kitchen Economy.

Very few articles of human consumption have received such emphatic endorsements from the highest authorities as the Royal Baking Powder. Prof. B. F. Davenport, one of the Massachusetts state analysts, says: "I have found the Royal Baking Powder to be composed of pure and wholesome materials and to be properly combined for the purpose for which it is to be used." Prof. F. L. Bartlett, Maine State Assayer, says he has "examined it and found no injurious substance nor any adulteration, the materials were pure and the proportions quite accurate."

On Foot Through Arlington.

A tour through the charming suburbs of Boston is better enjoyed from a seat on "Shanks Mare" than by any other method of travel. One by carriage, horseback or 'cycle, necessitates too much mounting and dismounting to make either an agreeable mode of locomotion, but a foot tramp through the streets and lanes of fair towns lying adjacent to Boston in "leafy June" is a positive luxury, and a pastime too seldom indulged in by the busy, hustling denizen of the crowded metropolis. Except seaward pedestrian trips in any direction from the "Hub" are well calculated to afford enjoyment which cannot be easily obtained in any other way, and it is a matter of surprise that so few comparatively of city people avail themselves of the pleasure that such trips afford.

Among the suburbs of Boston no one possesses more or stronger attractions for the tramp in search of pleasing sights than Arlington. It offers rewards for a visit such as few other towns have it in their power to give. There is no more beautiful scenery, whether of wood, hillside, fields or water, to be found in all Boston's delightful environs than within the limits of Arlington, and he who, with lunch and pipe and a plenty of leisure, spends the summer day among them is not only well repaid with present happiness, but stores up in memory's vaults things that will be agreeable to recollect and dwell upon in future years.

Arlington has been fickle in her names, but in other respects no town in Middlesex county has been more conservative, staid, or tenacious of ancient landmarks than she. First, Menotomy, then West Cambridge, now Arlington—the first the best of all—all three she has answered to since her evolution from a Cambridge Parish away back in ante-Revolutionary days, but whether to this, that or the other, in her case, as always, it has been found that a rose by any other name smells just as sweet.

It does not matter from which side Arlington is entered by the tourist, he will be sure to like it and soon realize that he has made no mistake in selecting the scene for his holiday outing. It is only five or six miles north of the State House, half that distance from "Fair Harvard," and 20 or 30 minutes drive south from Lexington Common, the spot on which the Revolutionary War began. If the pedestrian enters the lower part of the village, (50 years ago and previously called the "middle o' the town") via North Avenue, the first thing that will be likely to attract his attention and command his admiration will be the beautiful shaft (standing on the site of the old "Fowle store") erected in memory of the brave men who laid down their lives on Southern battlefields in defense of our country. The monument is a noble tribute to the memory of Arlington's heroes in the Great Rebellion. This shaft stands near the old "Whittemore House" which was a flourishing tavern in early times and was noted miles around for the superior quality of its flip and abundance of its larder. If the walls of that old building could speak they might "a tale unfold" of balls, routs, and roysterings that would put to blush things of that sort in these latter days. Nearly a mile farther up towards Lexington, on what used to be called "High street," stands "Tufts' Tavern," a quaint old hostelry, older than the "Whittemore," a great place half a century ago for "prop" playing and "eggnog."

A tramp through the town without a prolonged visit to "Arlington Heights" would be a grave mistake on the part of the tourist. Leaving the main street—as level and smooth as a house floor—near "the foot of the rocks" the ascent to the "Heights" is begun. But perhaps the pedestrian will conclude to sit down under the umbrageous trees near at hand and take a bite from his wallet and a sip of the pure, sweet water he will find there, before essaying the steep rise that lies before him, and in doing so he is wise. A sturdy, leg-wearying pull and the summit of the "Heights" is reached. He instantly forgets the fatigue which the achievement has cost, for spread out before him is a panorama of beauty unequalled by that from any view-point in the vicinity of Boston.

As he stands faced Capitol-ward, turning to the left, he sees many cities and towns—the two Medfords, the many villaged Malden, Everett, and beyond these the ocean; a point to the right and his eye falls on Chelsea, Winthrop, East Boston, Charlestown, Boston Harbor, with its many islands and innumerable sails, the Mystic and the Charles; in front is the "hub" dominated by the Capitol with its golden crown, its church spires, vast blocks of brick and stone, the Common like an emerald gem set in the midst; beyond, old Dorchester Heights, come into view, the Blue Hills of Milton, the gardens, groves and palatial homes of Boston's nabobs in Brookline are all seen. Still further round are Brighton, Watertown, Belmont—and here the panorama ends right at the base of the eminence on which he stands, with Spy Pond, a lovely sheet of water, close at its feet. All these towns and cities included in the wide expanse swept by the eye blend and melt into each other so completely that they seem to be one vast city.

Having feasted his vision on this beautiful picture the traveler descends by a precipitous lane on the other side of the "Heights" to the main street which is lined on both sides with the handsome residences of prosperous citizens, sandwiched with trim cottages, and now and then a square, severely plain "old Continental" in which lived and flourished some of the earlier settlers of the quiet, beautiful town. Side streets at frequent intervals run out into adjacent territory that fifty years ago was fields, pastures and orchards. These too boast of their pleasant homes.

Arlington abounds in history of the Revolutionary period. Swinging slowly along the eye of the pedestrian falls on many white marble tablets by the wayside, and halting to scan their inscriptions he finds they mark the spots where patriotic citizens were slain by British soldiers, and where the soldiers in turn were made to bite the dust by well directed Yankee bullets, on the memorable 19th of April, 1775, when the English army at Boston undertook to seize the powder stored in the Concord meetinghouse and were heroically driven back in a rout to their barracks across the Charles. Thanks to Yankee pluck and good fighting qualities the "red coats" suffered severely on that historic occasion and many of them were killed. These tablets show where patriots who were engaged in that gallant defense of their homes and liberties fell as well as many of King George's soldiery sent on that day to teach the "rebels" submission to his royal will and mandate. Although the thermometers registered "90 in the shade," that 19th of April was a "cold day" for the British army in Boston, or at least for that part of it which was so gallantly met by the Minutemen of Menotomy, Lexington and Concord and driven back to where they came from, leaving many dead and dying along the route of their rapid and ignominious retreat.

A small, neat Common, with the Unitarian meetinghouse on one edge of it, the Whittemore mansion on another, with a very ancient graveyard for a background, is an inviting spot to linger awhile on if the pedestrian when he reaches it is disposed to give himself a bit of rest before finishing his tour of observation. This long disused cemetery contains many tombstones and slabs uniquely phrased and patterned which tell of the virtues of the original settlers whose remains were deposited in its consecrated soil. About 1843 a new one was set apart and dedicated in a lovely vale on the Medford road, pious parson Damon of the Unitarian church being the first to occupy it permanently, as he suggested in his dedicatory sermon might possibly be the case.

Pleasant street is the "swell" thoroughfare of this delightful old town. Located on it are some of the finest mansions in the suburbs of Boston. Many of them are the abode of wealth and refinement and the broad lawns by which they are surrounded are not unfrequently the scenes of great variety of summer evenings past times. Lawn sports are indulged on the velvety greensward by fair maidens and gallant youth, while elderly members of the household are content to sit or recline on the verandahs, stoops and balconies of the handsome homes, sip their cool drinks, ply their fans, and watch the young people at their games.

Conspicuous among these rows of elegant mansions which adorn both sides of Pleasant street, some of them climbing up and occupying airy perches in the abrupt declivities of the "Heights," is that of Governor Brackett of this Commonwealth. It is a large, roomy place facing Spy Pond and the "Gilded Dome" beneath which is the Chief Executive's Chair which Gov. Brackett so admirably fills. It is not a palace that he has built for himself here, but it has a homelike look and substantial qualities which compart well with the true democratic principles and institutions of which Mr. Brackett is such an able and conscientious exponent.

Further along is the home of one of the best known and most popular story writers and poets in the land, Mr. J. T. Trowbridge. His modest cottage near the margin of the Pond was pointed out to the tramp, and another house away up on the other side of the road was declared to be, by the quite communicative and pleasant faced old resident, as the place where Howells, another novelist, poet, and editor, used to live.

A leisurely stroll around Spy Pond, a charming bit of water fringed by green glades and stately elms, and an inspection of the great market gardens, may profitably consume an hour or two of the day's outing, and there are many spots of interest and stretches of natural landscape and some old buildings, that deserve particular mention and would get it had the writer space allowed for this article. The tourist in his rambles will meet with rather an unusual number of specimens of the typical Yankee, including the rasping nasal twang, the twisting of o in cow to a o, thus, caow, et cetera, which specimens seem to have been kept over for seed, and they are worth studying as prehistoric curiosities. One of them, more dried and wrinkled than common, and whose nasal musical performances had something like a metalic ring to them, showed the writer where "Love Lane" used to be and indulged in glowing reminiscences concerning it and the youth and beauty always to be met in it on summer evenings when he was a frisky lad. Frisky lad! Possible that that specimen of a nearly extinct race was ever a light-hearted, gay, frisky lad!

But the sun is sinking to rest in a blaze of gold and purple glory beyond the western hills, and the tramp's propellers are beginning to yield slightly to their load of tired humanity, which means home—home while the day's pleasures remain but half exhausted, and many of the beauties of the fair town of Arlington remain to be enjoyed on some future pedestrian tour.

Library Notes.

On July 21st the Public Library will be closed for two weeks for the annual vacation. Books may be taken out to be retained during that time. Of those recent and popular will be found "Shadow of a Dream" by W. D. Howells. This story is laid in a Western city. The dream is repeated night after night and the shadow of it darkens the innocent lives of two persons long after the dreamer has passed from earth. "Begum's Daughter" by Edwin Bynner is a historical novel of the interesting epoch of old Knickerbocker life in New York and is a vivid presentation of the political conflicts of the period when the great metropolis was a Dutch city.

"Lucie's Mistake" is a picture of German social life, written by a German woman, but is translated by an American into good English. Here we find in its perfection the German conception of the nature, capacity and sphere of woman. "Joost Avelingh" by M. Maartens is a story well worth reading. As Dutch scenes and characters are less known to American readers than French or German, the picture of family life and the glimpses of Dutch politics are entertaining and pleasing. A high moral purpose gives an elevated tone to the work rather uncommon in ordinary novels. "A Daughter of Silence" by Elgar Fawcett, and "Miss Brooks" by Eliza Orne White, where Boston life with its fads and foibles is pleasantly portrayed. Considerable amusement may be gained by the books of Jim K. Jerome, "Three men in a Boat," "Stage Land," and the "Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow."

"Bright Skies and Dark Shadows" by Henry M. Field. A book from Mr. Field is always welcome for he travels with his eyes employed and his thoughts busy. Going to Florida for a winter vacation he finds rest in change of scene and study. Under the beautiful trees, and out of the palms and orange groves he recognizes the race problem, "the greatest that ever touched a nations life." He describes New England in the South, Lookout Mountain, the historic battlefield of Murfreesboro "which tells its story silently on thirty thousand graves."

It was Lord Beaconsfield who said "the two greatest events in history were the Siege of Troy and the French Revolution," and so we are glad to offer to our readers such a work as Justin McCarthy in the French Revolution, written in a style graceful and forcible, clear and concise,—a style of which Mr. McCarthy is an acknowledged master. The causes of the revolution are treated from the time of Louis XIV., and the first volume closes with the destruction of the Bastile. To supplement this we would recommend the Life of Marie Antoinette just published in an attractive form by Scribner's Sons. Marie Antoinette stands before the reader as the only person by the side of King Louis XVI, as the sorrowing mother, and the victim of the necklace conspiracy. All the scenes in which the Queen appeared before her people and her friends are vividly portrayed. "The Wife of the First Consul" and the "Happy days of the Empress Marie Louise," are also books that we would urge upon the attention of our young readers whose minds are active from the study of the year and who recently have become acquainted with many historical facts. We believe that education in the highest sense and for the highest services of the world is not a matter of schools and teachers, text-books and talks. True it is that all these aid in mental development and cannot be dispensed with but still the largest part of a persons culture is left to himself in the right choice of reading and the atmospheres of thought and feeling by which one surrounds himself, as we have seen illustrated the past week in the case of Miss Clark who captured the prize of $600.00 offered by the Boston Herald for the best English prose composition. Her course in English literature had not been unlike the training of the other 220 graduates of the High Schools and Academies who competed for it, but from her childhood she had chosen wisely, through books, intercourse with superior minds, and made their style her style, and their thoughts hers by careful reading and thinking. All these boys and girls might have had a better knowledge of contemporary history and have been spared those fearful mistakes of fact and expression. True it is, knowledge does not "fall upon us like the gentle rain from heaven upon the place beneath" but is acquired only by stern persistant labor.—E. F. P.

Look Out for Conscienceless Daughters.

The smart trick played by the town of Winchester on the mother city of Woburn should warn other ancient municipalities to look out for conscienceless daughters. The old town of Woburn was settled in 1640 but did not arrive at the dignity of incorporation until 1642. Winchester seceded in 1850. Woburn has been preparing for a big demonstration in 1892, but some of the smart Winchesterians conceived the id a of cutting the old lady out, and so they got up a 250th anniversary of the settlement. Considerable bitterness was occasioned by the division of the town in 1850, but it had worn away in the years that have followed. The action of Winchester has revived it, and the relations between the old and the new towns are considerably strained. Woburn must now brace up and show in 1892 what a real municipal anniversary ought to be; one which shall make the preliminary celebration of Friday seem quite insignificant.—Lynn Item

Charlie Lunt did as much towards the success of the 4th of July celebration as anybody. He knows how and isn't afraid to work.

Rev. Dr. Witham of Chicago, formerly pastor of the Park St. church in Boston, was visiting Mr. George Gilbert and family last week.

The bottom of the 4th of July money chest has been reached and scraped bare, and yet dollars and dollars are lacking to pay the 4th of July bills.

Rev. D. Augustine Newton of Winchester, who preached Sunday morning and evening at the Evangelical church, is a favorite in Westboro, the home of his boyhood.—Westboro Corr. of Milford Journal.

It looks as though the town would have to make an appropriation to pay for our fun on the 4th. There isn't money enough to settle the bills, and private purses are not flying open very much to pay them.

Flowers for the North End poor of Boston will be duly forwarded every Tuesday if left at Dr. Geo. P. Brown's drugstore before 9 o'clock on that day. The Congregational church has the charge of the business and Dr. Brown generously offers to let his drugstore be used as a depot for the flowers.

The County Commissioners have estimated the land damages sustained by the widening of Washington street, between Pleasant and Main streets as follows:—Estate of F. Johnson, $85; H. W. York, $70; J. C. Stanton, $150; W. Johnson, $110; Otis Wetherbee, $65; G. P. Brown, $75; G. F. Parker, $35; Mrs. S. Cushing, $65; Mrs. C. A. Joy, $75; Mrs. C. V. Rice, $200; Joel Whitney, $25; L. A. Bruce, $300; Chas. E. Kendall, $200; A. Cutting, $25. Total $1480.

The residence and grounds of Mr. John Maxwell presented a brilliant and beautiful appearance on last Tuesday evening. The scene was quite an enchanting one and the people present enjoyed it very much indeed. Chinese lanterns and other illuminations were not the only contributors to it, for fine music lent its charms to make the affair a perfectly delightful one. The Winchester Band gave an admirable concert on the smoothly shaven lawn adjoining the handsome residence of Mr. Maxwell which was highly appreciated by the family and a number of friends who were their guests. The musical selections were excellent, and the execution of them was worthy of all praise. Hospitable Mistress Maxwell and her fair daughters did the handsome thing by the Band and the guests. An elegant collation was spread on the brilliantly illuminated lawn, and delicious creams, confections, fruits, fragrant bohea, mocha, lemonade and other palatable drinks contributed to the pleasure of the occasion. The Maxwell ladies know just how such things should be done. They have taste in matters of entertaining company, and, not allowing expense to stand in the way of success, their treats of the character above described are always exceedingly delightful affairs. The company there on Tuesday evening enjoyed the concert, the collation, and the illumination very much indeed, and not any less the pleasing company of Madame Maxwell and her bright and lively daughters. To ease up Mr. Maxwell's feelings I would state that in an affair of this kind the "men folks around the house" don't count.

TAKING UP THE CROSS.

LESSON III, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 20.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xiv, 25-35. Commit Verses, 27-30—Golden Text, Luke xiv, 27—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

25. "And there went great multitudes with Him." Such a teacher and worker of miracles would naturally have a great following; some from curiosity, some because of the loaves and fishes, some because of His miracles of healing, some because they really enjoyed His teaching even if they did not put it in practice; but O how few followed Him as true disciples, accepting Him as Israel's Messiah and joining themselves to Him for life or death till the Kingdom come. Even of those who professed to be His disciples we read that after a certain discourse "many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him" (John vi, 66). And of the twelve chosen out of all the rest, one possessed by the devil sold Him for thirty pieces of silver, and in the time of His sore trial all forsook Him and fled (Matt. xxvi, 15, 56). Knowing the hearts of all men, and reading easily the inward purpose of every one of this great multitude, He turned and said unto them:

26. "If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." It was written in the law that if any one hated his neighbor unto death the cities of refuge were to give no refuge to him (Deut. xix, 11-13); and the Spirit through John writes that "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer;" and that "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar" (I John iii, 15; iv, 20). Yet here are the Lord's own words to the effect that we cannot be His disciples unless we hate even father and mother, wife and children. The explanation is found in the fact that the word "hate" is sometimes used to signify "loving less." It is written that Jacob loved Rachel more than Leah (Gen. xxix, 30), and in the very next verse this is called hating Leah.

27. "And whosoever doth not bear his cross and come after me, cannot be my disciple." The cross of Christ was that cruel instrument of death on which He died when he bore our sins and made peace for us (I Pet. ii, 24; Col. i, 20). Paul said that by it the world was crucified to him and he to the world (Gal. vi, 14). And on the four different occasions on which Jesus gave utterance to this saying (Matt. x, 38; xvi, 24; Mark x, 21; Luke xiv, 27), He seems to mean nothing less than death to all that is against Him. "We who live (i. e., true believers) are alway delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh" (II Cor. iv, 11). We are so selfish and unchristlike that we are apt to think every little trial a cross, and too often complain about our crosses.

28-30. "This man began to build, and was not able to finish." Such might be said of one who having laid the foundation was not able to complete the building, and therefore he might be made sport of for not counting the cost beforehand. Christ is not of this world, and His Kingdom is not of this world, therefore those who identify themselves with Him should consider well beforehand what it may possibly mean to be "not of the world" (John xviii, 36; xvii, 14, 16). A Christian is one who is given to Christ "out of the world," and then sent back "into the world" to stand in Christ's name against the world while seeking to rescue as many as possible from it (John xvii, 6, 18). If one confesses Christ before men as his Saviour, and identifies himself with a body of Christians, then continues just as much mixed up with the world and worldly ways as before, such an one has evidently not counted the cost, nor understands what it is to be a disciple of Christ. The Christian life consists of self renunciation, separateness from a world lying in the wicked one, patient endurance of trial, patient continuance in well doing, and a determination to know nothing but Jesus Christ crucified, risen, ascended and returning.

31, 32. "Or what king going to make war against another king, sitteth not down first and consulteth whether he be able," etc. In the previous illustration the disciple was looked at as a builder and his life a building; here he is compared to a warrior and his life a warfare. Jesus Himself is the great builder, He is the true Zerubbabel whose hands both laid the foundation of the house and shall also finish it (Zech. iv, 9). He is also a man of war, captain of the host of the Lord (Ex. xv, 3; Josh. v, 14), and He has considered well the cost and the ability necessary to build His kingdom on this earth and overcome and cast out the enemy. He saw the consummation and the way to it before He ever left the Glory which He had with the Father before the world was; and for the joy set before Him, He endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God (Heb. xii, 2), where He ever liveth to make intercession for us (Heb. vii, 25), while we continue the daily warfare waiting with Him for the time when the kingdom shall be His and ours. We do well to remember that we have a great adversary, and that to contend successfully with him we need to put on the whole armor of God (Eph. vi, 11). If we would receive the crown of righteousness, we must war a good warfare and fight the good fight of faith, and the great inspiration is the joy before us at His appearing (I Tim. i, 18; vi, 12-16; II Tim. iv, 7, 8). It is interesting to notice that the service of the Levites in connection with the Tabernacle, taking it down, setting it up, transferring it from place to place, not when and where they pleased, but only as God pleased and directed, is called "the warfare of the service of the tabernacle" (Num. viii, 24, 25, margin.)

33. "So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." All that one has is summed up in the relations mentioned in verse 26; the nearest and dearest earthly friends, and then our own selves, our very life. How can one possibly forsake, or as in the R. V. renounce, all these so as to hold and love them not as our chief good, but only as minor things in comparison of Him whose disciples we profess to be? How can we learn to say with Paul: "Yeount all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." In Paul's case it was brought about by a sight of the risen and ascended Jesus as his own personal Saviour, and as Israel's true Messiah to sit on David's throne and restore the kingdom to Israel at His Glorious appearing. This made Paul to live on earth as a citizen of Heaven, willing to bear anything in his body of humiliation while he waited for the glorious immortal body like unto Christ's (Phil. iii, 8, 20, 21). Paul was a master builder, and a master warrior; but in reference to his life and service, he says: "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me;" and "I labored more abundantly than they all, yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me" (Gal. ii, 20; I Cor. xv, 10). Truly, he, like his great Master, renounced all that he had that he might glorify God. By the same grace of God we may do likewise if we will. A little light concerning the resurrection of the just, the marriage supper, and the Kingdom of God (vs. 14-19), will wonderfully draw us.

The New Discovery.

You have heard your friends and neighbors talking about it. You may yourself be one of the many who know from personal experience just how good a thing it is. If you have ever tried it, you are one of its staunch friends, because the wonderful thing about it is, that when once given a trial, Dr. King's New Discovery ever after holds a place in the house. If you have never used it and should be afflicted with a cough, cold or any Throat, Lung or Chest trouble, secure a bottle at once and give it a fair trial. It is guaranteed every time, or money refunded. Trial Bottles Free at H. L. Flanders & Co. drugstore.

LOVE IS ALL.

My will is gone to sleep, dear,
And none but you can wake it;
My heart is in your keep, dear,
To hold, or drop, or break it.

The day without your eyes, dear,
To wake my interest in it,
Is dark and cold and drear, dear;
I never can begin it.

One day I hold most dear, sweet,
The day when first I met you;
One thing I see most clear, sweet,
I never can forget you.

My love and faith and trust, sweet,
Are more than I can tell you,
To test me is unjust, sweet,
Of doubt let this dispel you.

Since life is but a span, dear,
And love is all there's in it,
We'll try the simple plan, dear,
Of loving every minute.

Two Methods of Cleaning Pearls.

The susceptibility of pearls, even of the purest quality, to become yellow and smutty in color by absorbing perspiration from continued wearing in the hair, around the neck, on the arms, etc., or through exposure or age is well known, and though the major portion of our readers are familiar with some methods by which pearls so affected may have their original brilliant color restored, the following receipt will prove a useful addition to the workshop knowledge of many.

Boil the pearls for about fifteen minutes in fresh cow's milk, in which soap has been dissolved; then take them out, rinse them in clean water and dry with a clean white cloth. Inspect them to see if the desired results have been obtained; if not repeat the method several times. If they still have not been improved try the following: Have a neighboring baker make for you a small loaf of bread, in which before the loaf is baked lay the pearls, either strung upon a silk thread or closely wrapped in a piece of gauze; then let the bread be baked pretty thoroughly —not to brown, however. When the loaf is withdrawn from the oven let it cool, then break it and take out the pearls, which will generally be found satisfactory and handsomely white.—Jewelers' Circular.

Hester's Grandson.

Little Hester has grown up brothers and sisters and nephews and nieces who are older and bigger than she is herself. It has never occurred to her to be surprised at this; it is part of her world as she found it. She has not yet discovered that this state of things is somewhat unusual.

Not long ago one of her married sisters sent for Hester to come and see a new baby, and accordingly the child was taken by her nurse to visit this new relative. She looked at the baby in mingled astonishment and delight.

"Well, little sister," asked the baby's mother, "how do you like your new nephew?"

"Oh, I like him," the child answered earnestly; "but he can't be a nephew; he is too small. But perhaps," she added, upon second thought, "he is big enough to be a grandson."

A Dog's Intuition.

An Auburn man thinks just twice as much of dog intelligence now as he did a week ago. He owned a dog and had tired of him and had agreed to transfer him to a friend who lives in the south part of the city. He took him in his arms, tied a rubber coat over his head and carried him down and delivered him. It was a long distance and he had no idea that the dog would ever show up again about his own premises. That night on reaching home the dog lay in his accustomed place on the rug, while the Auburn man's wife wore a curious smile of amusement. The conundrum in the family is: How does a dog know the way home? One thing is now quite certain—that the dog can stay where he is as long as he wants to. —Lewiston Journal.

Michael Angelo.

Michael Angelo's seal represented three rings inclosed one within the other, as expressive of the union which he had made in his mind of the three arts of painting, sculpture and architecture. Michael Angelo lived to a very great yet healthy old age. In the beginning of the Eighteenth century the Senator Buonarotti caused the vault to be opened at Florence in which his body was deposited. It was found perfect, and the dress of green veivet and even the cap and slippers in which he was buried were entire. He appeared to have been a small, well set man, with a countenance of great severity.—New York Ledger.

Forgot the Name.

Tommy—Say, Sue, why don't you play that piece you spoke to me about?

Sue—What piece?

Tommy—Why, that one you told me to ask you to play when we had company, 'cause you knew it better'n any of the others. I forget the name.—Yankee Blade.

For'ard.

"I am a great sailor now," wrote the sweet girl graduate, "and it's awfully easy to learn nautical terms. 'Aft' is the stern of the ship, and 'forehead' is the head of it. Isn't it simple?"—Harper's Bazar.

Simple and Safe.

"How to live on a thousand a year?" said Chappie. "That's easy enough. Blow it in the first week and then visit your rich uncle for the other fifty-one." —Epoch.

A TWO SIDED BILL.

It Created a Tremendous Sensation in the Treasury Department.

There was received at the treasury department one of the most peculiar bank notes ever seen among the millions upon millions of currency notes printed by the government. It was a $20 note or a $10 note, just according to which side was up, for by some remarkable mistake the one side was printed with the figures and devices of a $20 bill, while the other had all the figures and devices of a $10 bill.

The note was returned to the treasury by the cashier of the First Washington National bank of Jersey City, who sent it with a rather sarcastic note, intimating that his bank was not going into the freak business, and added that as the treasury had counted that bill for $20 he would trouble them to send him an ordinary $20 note. The affair created a sensation, for no one had ever seen such a wonderful note before. The matter was referred to the department of issue, from which the note had been sent out to the Jersey City bank. The mistake was promptly corrected and an immediate investigation begun.

The investigation was prosecuted with vigor, and Gen. Meredith found the cause of the trouble. It seems that the four notes printed on a sheet are not all of one denomination. There are always three of one kind and the fourth of another; thus, in this case, three tens and a twenty. It was an easy task to learn just when this bundle had been printed, and by which plate printers. They were examined, and it developed that one sheet of four notes, after having been printed on one side, had fallen off the bundle to the floor. The assistant who picked it up by some unfortunate oversight turned the sheet upside down when she placed it on the bundle.

The rest is easily understood. This sheet was printed on the second side with a 20-face on the reverse of a ten, and one of the three 10-face on the reverse of the one 20 of the steel. Hence there were two "10 20s" in the lot. Thus the mistake was corrected. But no good explanation was offered, or can be offered, why these two bills, passing through a score of hands, each one of whom is supposed to examine every bill most carefully, should not have been discovered.

Every person in the bureau who handles a note is held responsible in the strictest way, and it is almost incredible that none of these people should have discovered the mistake. In the department of issue are not less than six counters, whose business it has been for years to count the notes before issuing them to the banks. They are considered the most expert counters in the world, and yet all six of these wonderful experts allowed such a bill to pass through their hands. No trace has been found of the second hybrid, so that it must be wandering around the country. The two notes will be kept in the treasurer's office as curiosities.—Baltimore Sun.

Experiment with Ropes and Wires.

Some interesting experiments have been made by a French engineer to ascertain definitely the strength, extensibility and elasticity of round and flat ropes of hemp and aloe, and of iron and steel wire. In these investigations there were employed a horizontal hydraulic press and weighing apparatus consisting of a steel yard and sliding weight by which tension of 130,000 pounds could be recorded, and for higher pressures a gauge on the body of the press was used. Specimens were fastened by winding each end on a grooved pulley of special construction, the usual length of the specimens being thirteen feet.

The result of all the tests gave for the average tensile strengths of ropes the following: White hemp, 10,500 to 11,200 pounds per square inch; tarred hemp, 7,700 to 8,400; white manila, 9,800 to 10,600; white aloes, 5,600 to 7,000; flat tarred hemp and manila, 7,800 to 8,400. A factor of safety of four, or even three in some cases, is considered a safe rope. A rope of unannealed wire has an ultimate strength of about 55,000 pounds per square inch of section of metal. When annealed the ultimate strength is reduced to about 45,000 pounds; but the elongation is nearly doubled, being nearly 12 to 15 per cent. in annealed wire. The best wire ropes for mining purposes have a much higher tensile strength.—New York Telegram.

Cyclamen Growing Rare.

The prefect of Savoy has recently prohibited the gathering of the cyclamen in the woods of his department. Notwithstanding its abundance in the locality this beautiful plant has been threatened with total extinction from the enormous numbers gathered each year for sale in the markets of Chambery and Aix-les-Bains. It is the old story; collectors are everywhere; and the edelweiss and possibly the primrose will soon become rare, if not extinct.—Exchange.

The best medical writers claim that the successful remedy for nasal cattarrh must be non-irritating, easy of application, and one that will reach all the remote sores and ulcerated sufaces. The history of the efforts to treat catarrh during the past obliges us to admit that only one remedy has met these conditions, and that is Ely's Cream Balm. This pleasant remedy has mastered catarrh as nothing else has ever done, and both physicians and patients freely concede this fact. The more distressing symptoms yield to it.

SANTA ANNA'S COACH.

A Mexican War Veteran Tells How He Assisted in Its Capture.

There are in Washington many interesting characters, some of whom, though they may not have held high positions, still have lived and done service with persons whose names are historic. When once in a talkative mood such persons as this can give very entertaining accounts of incidents that are now almost forgotten. Just such a character as this is Sergt. John Walters, now one of the watchmen at the state, war and navy department building under Capt. Tyson, of Arctic fame. Sergt. Walters served under Capt. (afterward Gen.) Sedgwick in the Mexican war, and was for many years the orderly at the headquarters of the army under Gen. Winfield Scott and was with him in Mexico. Sergt. Walters was born May 5, 1821, or, as he states, upon "the very day that great soldier, Napoleon Bonaparte, left this world I came into it." Sergt. Walters entered the army by enlisting in the Second regiment of artillery, then commanded by Col. Bankhead, Jan. 21, 1845, and with that regiment went to Mexico.

Before the siege of Vera Cruz he was detailed as an orderly at the headquarters of Gen. Scott. When the siege commenced he rejoined his company and was in charge of three mortars planted about a mile from the city. The landing was made in March, from the 9th to the 11th, and the little band of 12,500 men opened trenches, threw up breastworks and planted the mortars. Upon the city's refusal to surrender fire was opened, and on the 29th the garrison surrendered and the American troops entered the walls. According to Sergt. Walters, Gen. Scott seemed disappointed that the force promised him, 25,000 men, had not been sent, but nevertheless on April 11 he started out for the City of Mexico.

At the battle of Cerro Gordo, April 17, Sergt. Walters says that his company—Company H, Second artillery—were on the point of flanking the Mexicans when they spied the coach of Santa Anna in a gulch not far off. The coach had been left behind and the Mexican chief and some half dozen of his suite were seen nearly a mile distant riding rapidly on American horses. Duncan's battery opened fire on them, but the Mexicans made good their escape. The coach was what would now be regarded as an old fashioned hack, and the harness that was still fastened to it showed that the mules or horses had been cut loose in a hurry. In the carriage was found the wooden leg of Santa Anna and a number of boxes of gold and silver coin. This capture, says Sergt. Walters, was the foundation of the Soldiers' home. This money was very considerable, but he does not know just how much there was.

There was some controversy at the time as to whether the capture should be paid into the treasury, but Gen. Scott claimed that it belonged to the army. Consequently he turned it over to the quartermaster's department to be spent in providing a home in which old and wounded soldiers could spend the latter part of their days. To this sum was added the amount levied on the inhabitants of the City of Mexico on its surrender.

Mr. Walters says that when Gen. Scott returned to this city he sent for Gen. Wool and the two went out to the present location of the home and were shown over the place by Mr. Riggs. It was not, however, until they had sampled the iron water in the spring that they concluded that the location was the proper one, although they had already admired the views from the various sections of the grounds. "As far as I know," said the old sergeant, "I am the only man alive who participated in the capture of that coach. There may be others who were in the battle, but of company H, Second artillery, I do not know a single survivor."—Washington Star.

A Mean Kind of Thieving.

A lad named Miner Bender was arrested for stealing lithographs. This arrest was the revelation of a scheme that has been in practice for a long time, and has become extensive in its proportions. It seems there is a firm here which, on the plan of old Fagin, the Jew, in "Oliver Twist," employs lads to steal the lithographs from the shop windows where they have been placed as advertisements. It is only the pictures of the most prominent actors and actresses and those having well known plays that are coveted. When these small purloiners have secured a goodly supply and have undone, perhaps, the entire week's work of a theatre billboard man, they take them to this firm and receive a small compensation for the work they have performed, but nothing for the crime. This firm has a use for these pictures. They sell them at a profit to the managers of barn storming companies, to be used in small country towns. Thus are the people of these towns gulled by being made to believe that they are seeing the popular plays of the times enacted by famous actors. Thus it is that good plays and famous actors become underrated in rural communities.—Chicago Herald.

A Shameful Admission.

"Let fifteen of the best lawyers in this country draft a will," says a New York lawyer, "and if any of the dissatisfied heirs will put up $100,000 I will guarantee to see it broken. If the will itself contains no flaw I can prove undue influence or insanity, or find some other point in the armor. See how the wills of Vanderbilt, Stewart and Tilden went by the board."

How "Idlewild" Was Named.

Idlewild, the home of N. P. Willis, on the Hudson, is almost as celebrated as Mount Vernon, where Washington lived so long. The way it came to receive its rather odd name is interesting. Mr. Willis loved the Hudson river and its beautiful and picturesque environs, and he spent much time searching for the spot he finally selected. It was a rough old farmer who sold him his property. The man tried to impress Mr. Willis with the value of the land for farming purposes, told him what it could be made to yield in a year and how much stone he had taken from it and underbrush he had burned, thinking this the most valuable information he could give him. But Mr. Willis was not at all interested in these matters. What he wanted was a fine view of the river and nature in all its loveliness. The cultivation of the land was precisely what he did not care about.

He wandered about the place with the farmer, undetermined whether to buy it or not, when they came to a splendid gorge, whose magnificent beauty satisfied all the longings of the poet and dreamer. He stopped and gave vent to a burst of enthusiasm and asked the farmer what he would take for that portion of his property. The man stared in amazement and evidently thought his customer was a madman; but eager to dispose of this uncultivated waste of land, as he thought it, he said: "That bit of idlewild! That is not good for much; you may have it for such a price," and he named a low figure. Mr. Willis bought the property on the spot, and decided at once that it should be called "Idlewild."—New York Press.

The Middle Initial.

A Chicago lawyer who makes a good many speeches said:

"I have made it a rule never to mention the middle initial of a man's name, if he has any, in my speeches. There is a hoodoo about the middle initial. I have known some mighty good men who were stranded, temporarily at least, on account of some speaker who in referring to such got the middle initial of the name wrong. The public catches the middle name of a public man very quickly and it soon becomes as familiar as the family name. And the speaker who gets the middle initial wrong in a speech not only gets the laugh on himself, but he makes the man whose name he thus mutilates look less prominent.

"The other day a Kentucky orator—McCord is his name—was making a speech in the Democratic caucus, and he referred to the late James G. Beck. The effort fell flat. A good speech was ruined. McCord will never hear the last of that bad break. For a Kentuckian not to know the middle initial of the name of a man like Beck is an unpardonable sin.

"I need only to refer to a similar incident that occurred in the Republican national convention in this city in 1880, when Mr. James F. Joy in his nomination speech spoke of Mr. James H. Blaine. Of course Mr. Blaine was too prominent to be affected by any break of this sort, but Joy never recovered from it.

"My advice to orators is: 'Steer clear of the middle initial.'"—Chicago Times.

Several Grewsome Inventions.

With a view of robbing the grave of its terrors somebody has patented a lining to conceal the mother earth. This lining consists of evergreen attached to cloth or matting. After the coffin is lowered the decoration can be pulled out and used again until the evergreen wears out or turns brown. The inventor proposes to bring the scenic effects within the reach of poorer people by having an imitation of evergreen painted on canvas for cheaper use.

Another of these funeral minded inventors has patented what he calls a "cab for pall bearers." The vehicle has side doors and will hold eight persons, two of whom, however, must ride backward. The design seems to be to save the expense of an extra carriage, at the same time encouraging sociability on the part of those performing the last sad offices.

And, as if this was not enough, another inventor has obtained letters on what he calls "a funeral carriage." He carries the coffin and the bearers, and if there are not too many mourners he accommodates the whole procession with one vehicle. The funeral carriage is built like an omnibus, with a compartment on top for the coffin. The inventor provides skids, an endless chain and a pulley for running the coffin up into the place intended for it over the heads of the bearers.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

An Incubus from Africa.

A gentleman who has brought an African boy from a place a thousand miles from the coast to London complained to the magistrate that the lad was insubordinate. He knew that he must not flog him or put him in irons, which might have been done in Africa or on board ship, and would have the desired effect, and in default of such a proceeding he wanted the magistrate to have him put in the cells for a few hours. Mr. Vaughan told the applicant that that would be false imprisonment; he could not help him in any way.—Public Opinion.

An instrument has recently been exhibited in London by which a photograph can be taken of drops of water in the course of their formation. It consists of a lantern and lenses, by which a water trough, the source of the drops, can be strongly illuminated, together with a lightning camera having a revolving dish with one perforation.

The coming season bids fair, from all reports, to be the greatest lace curtain season this country has ever known. The manufacturers abroad are making great preparations to meet the demands of the American market.

What Stronger Facts and Figures

RECOMMENDATION can a medicine have than the testimony of those whom it has cured? One such case is worth columns of puffery. We would request all who are afflicted with Blood Diseases to read the following:—

SALT-RHEUM.—Mrs. T. P. Cushing, 37 Suffolk st., Chelsea, Mass., writes: "For a long time I was troubled with salt-rheum. My hands would crack open, bleed, and itch terribly, causing great suffering. I tried almost every remedy I saw advertised, but received no benefit, until I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, four bottles of which cured me."

CANKER.—Mrs. W. Gaige, Poultney, Vt., says: "I have suffered much from canker humors. At times, I was unable to eat or swallow solid food. Last spring I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and quickly found relief. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured."

RHEUMATISM.—E. F. Harris, Buckland, Mass., certifies: "Eight years ago I had so severe an attack of rheumatism that I could not move from the bed, or dress, without help. I tried many remedies, but received no relief until I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which restored me to health."

CATARRH.—Seth Schreiver, Sag Harbor, N. Y., testifies: "My daughter suffered for years from an obstinate and offensive catarrh. Having heard Ayer's Sarsaparilla highly recommended, I resolved to try it. Before my daughter finished ten bottles she was entirely cured."

ERYSIPELAS.—Rev. S. J. Graham, Buckhannon, W. Va., writes: "Having been afflicted with erysipelas for nearly twenty years, I was at last induced by a friend to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I procured a bottle, which gave me relief before I had used half of it. I took three bottles, and have had no indication or symptom of the disease since."

BLEEDING PILES.—My wife has been more or less troubled with bleeding piles for thirty years. She tried many doctors and remedies, but obtained no relief until she began to take

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Show that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has been in greater demand, and made more remarkable cures, during the past twelve months, than any other medicine that can be named. Here are only a few specimen facts:—

"I always recommend Ayer's Sarsaparilla because I believe it to be the best blood-purifier in the market."—Joseph Myer, Jr., Elmira.

West Virginia.—"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is very popular here."—J. H. Purdy, Cameron.

Massachusetts.—"We have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla ever since it was first placed upon the market, and have yet to learn of a case where it has failed to give satisfaction."—F. & E. Bailey & Co., Druggists, Lowell.

New Jersey.—"We keep other kinds, but find Ayer's Sarsaparilla does more good."—Mullens & Son, Gloucester.

Virginia.—"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is very popular here."—Robert Lecky, Druggist, 724 Brook av., Richmond.

North Carolina.—"Ayer's Sarsaparilla sells better than any preparation of the kind, and gives better satisfaction."—R. J. Mitchell & Son, Oxford.

Ohio.—"Ayer's Sarsaparilla sells better than all other blood-purifiers put together."—T. H. Armstrong, M. D. and Druggist, Powhatan.

Wisconsin.—"Ayer's Sarsaparilla gives better satisfaction than any other."—V. Bardouski, Druggist, Milwaukee.

Florida.—"We can safely say that during the past ten years we have sold more of Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

A Vulgar Habit Rebuked.

Why will so many persons commit the unpardonable rudeness of addressing a person by his or her initial letter, as, for instance, "Mr. C." or "Mrs. S.?" It is as vulgar as a fishmonger's style. What can be more abominable than to hear a woman speak of her husband as "Mr. A.," as though he had been whittled down in her estimation until there is nothing left of him but a single letter? It is not very long since that what they call in the press of the far west "a shooting affair" occurred in Helena, Mont., the result of a prominent politician there addressing his hostess as "Mrs. B." A young Russian present resented what he considered an insult to his friend's wife, and promptly settled the matter in true western fashion.—Exchange.

Discoverer of Africa's Diamond Fields.

O'Reilly an old man, who is said to have been the first individual to unearth diamonds at Kimberly, South Africa, is quite poor, and obliged to work for his living. He was for many years a trader with the natives, and doing well, but the rush to the fields, he says, "ruined him." Since diamonds were discovered in South Africa, over $100,000,000 are said to have been exported.—New York Observer.

The Washington Star tells how he was betrayed: "They were trying hard not to look like a bride and groom, but an incident happened that gave them clean away. They stepped out of the Ebbitt House yesterday afternoon for a walk. The young man looked at the threatening sky and then, with the solicitude peculiar to young husbands, concluded that he had better raise his umbrella, and then his beloved would be protected when the rain did come. So he unfastened the band of his natty umbrella, gave it a little flirt and then raised it. About a pint of rice showered down on his head and scattered over the pavement. The spectators roared, the bride giggled nervously, and the young man beat a hasty retreat into the hotel to get the rice out of his hair."

An old Scotch lady who lived at considerable distance from the parish church was in the habit of driving over to the service. Her coachman, when he considered the sermon nearly at an end, would slip out quietly for the purpose of having the carriage ready by the time the service was concluded. One Sunday John returned to the church, and after hanging about the door for a considerable time grew impatient, and popping in his head, discovered the minister haranguing as hard as ever. Creeping down the aisle toward his mistress he whispered in her ear: "Is he no near done yet?" "Dune!" returned the old lady, in a high state of indignation, for her patience had long been exhausted; "he's dune half an hoor since, but he'll no stop."

THE RUSSIAN BLOODHOUND.

In crossing the Strand, London, I dodged the pole of one vehicle just in time to be struck by the shafts of another, and, as the pavement was slippery, I went down, and the vehicle went over me, breaking my left leg below the knee. An hour later I was in my bachelor apartments (the work of the surgeon finished), and feeling that I ought to be thankful to have come off with my life. I was in for a siege of many weeks, and I had some business which must be attended to by an outsider. Therefore, after a day or two I sent for Captain Jack Williams, an old acquaintance. He answered promptly enough and we soon made very satisfactory arrangements. He was a bluff, honest fellow, out of active service, and having nothing to do, and the only unpleasant feature about his friendship was the fact of his owning a monster Russian bloodhound. The brute was his shadow. Where the dog could not go the Captain would not go. He refused all parties and receptions because of the dog. He refrained from excursions by land or sea because he would be temporarily separated from Czar, as he called the animal. The pair were well known in London, and the captain was safe at midnight in the slums as any other man would be in the Strand at noonday. One glance at the dog was enough to show that he was as dangerous as a tiger. He made no friends either among dogs or men, and had miraculously escaped a dozen well laid traps to bring about his death.

I hated Czar, and on two or three occasions I had reason to believe that the feeling was returned. When the Captain called and found me laid up, he had sense enough to know that the presence of the brute might annoy me, and he therefore shut him up in the servant's room for a few minutes. The dog was usually prompt in obedience. On this occasion he obeyed in a grudging, sulky manner, and before leaving the room threatened me so plainly that I became apprehensive. The Captain agreed that Czar should not enter my sick room again, and in a couple of weeks I had forgotten all about the incident.

I had apartments on the second floor, three rooms in a row, with a hall along the front of the last two. The first room was for my servant, a man who had been with me for many years. The next was the reception room, and the third my sleeping room. One coming down the hall could enter at the door of either room. The bedroom and reception room were connected, but the servant's room was entirely shut off. It was a hot day in August, with all doors and windows open. I was feeling pretty smart, although the pain was considerable, and a couple of my friends had just departed, after a brief call, when Henry, my servant came in to see what he could do for me. I was flat on my back, as you know, with no chance to turn over on account of the leg, but I had him prop me up with two or three pillows. I then sent him for ice. He had but a few steps to go, and the doors were left open behind him. He had been gone about five minutes when in walked Capt. Williams's Russian bloodhound. I shouldn't have said walked; on the contrary he came running in, head up, tongue out, and his eyes as red as live coals. I saw him the moment he entered, and it passed through my head that he was mad.

The door leading into the hall was open. Twice as the dog circled around the room he seemed on the point of going out, but each time changed his mind, whined in an uneasy way, and then continued his circling. He did not look for me, nor at me. It was a large room with the bed against the wall, and from the way the brute bumped against the chairs I believe he was nearly blind. He had been with me two or three minutes when the hall door was caught by a draught of wind and slowly pulled to. It did not quite shut. The dog noticed the movement, sprang to get out, and the result was that he pushed the door shut and snapped the spring lock. The door leading into the reception room was still open, but the door from that into the hall was shut. The animal rushed into this room, upset a chair and bumped the table, and then came back whining, his tail down and his courage gone, and slunk under my bed. That the dog was suffering with hydrophobia there could be no doubt. As he returned from the reception room there was foam on his jaws, and he was so weak he staggered.

Had I been a well man and fully armed my situation would have been bad enough. There I was, perfectly helpless, locked in with the brute, and knowing that it might be hours before death came to him. My servant had a key to the door and when he returned he would open it and walk in. There was not the slightest question but that the dog would attack him. I had two or three minutes in which to think, and it was wonderful how clear headed I was. I looked upon my own chances as hopeless, and therefore determined that when Henry returned I would call out to him before he got the door open. I was also concerned for fear the dog would get out of the building. It was a crowded neighborhood, and he might bite a score of people before he was destroyed.

It is said that the presence of a great danger sharpens the sense of hearing. I believe this to be true, for I have had several personal experiences. As I lay there waiting for my servant to return I plainly heard sounds which could not have come to my ears under ordinary circumstances. At the foot of the second flight of stairs, a distance of fully 70 feet from my bed, Henry was stopped by a young man who lodged on that floor. I heard him say:

"I was waiting here to tell you that Capt. William's brute of a dog passed up stairs a short time ago. Is the Captain there?"

"He was not there when I left."

"And he has not come in after the dog. The animal had a scaly look, and you had better be careful how you drive him out."

"Thank you, sir, I'll hurry right up."

I heard my man come up stairs and along the hall. As soon as he saw that my bedroom door was shut he seemed to suspect the worst, and he acted like a hero. He came down the hall on tiptoe, put his face close to the door, and sang out:

"Colonel, I know the big dog is in your room and I am going for help. If he comes near you shut your eyes and pretend to be dead."

The sound of his voice put the dog into a frenzy. He growled and snarled and snapped, and as the man hurried down the hall the beast rushed from under the bed with a dreadful howl and began rushing around the room as before. After making the circle of the bedroom four or five times, he dashed into the reception room. There he quite overturned the centre table, and in his fury he wrenched off a leg with his teeth and destroyed the upholstering of the sofa. I was terribly excited and had I given way to my feelings I should have screamed out like a woman. I shut my eyes tightly, braced my nerves by chiding myself for a coward, and when the climax came I was fairly ready for it. I knew that the dog would sooner or later turn to me, and as he left the reception room he was on the foot of the bed in two bounds. There was an open book lying there, and he seized and worried this for a moment. Then came walking up to my face, bearing his full weight on my broken leg, and giving me intense pain. My arms and hands were on the cover, and the foam from his mouth fell upon my bare flesh. He put both paws on my chest, and ran his nose over my face to snuff at me, and he was all the time snarling and whining in a way to take the nerve away from the stoutest man.

I don't know whether he would have bitten me or not, could I have remained quiet, but such a thing as holding my nerves steady for over a minute was utterly impossible. I was feeling that I must throw up my hands and scream out when the beast leaped off the bed. He had heard people in the hall. He run about the room whining and snarling, and all at once made a spring for the door of the reception room, which was being shut too by human hands. A space six or eight inches wide was left, and when the dog attempted to push his head into this, a couple of bullets were fired into him and he backed out to fall dead. Henry had summoned two policemen, and while the brute stood over me on the bed the faithful servant had entered the reception room and pushed the door as nearly shut as they wanted it, having believed that the dog would behave just as did. That Czar was suffering with hydrophobia none could doubt from his looks and conduct. Inside of twenty days two house dogs which he had snapped at as he came up went mad, and then there was no further question that I had had a close shave from a horrible death.—New York Sun.

A Trip to Virginia City, Nevada.

Leaving the Union Pacific Railroad at Reno, 244 miles east of San Francisco, I took the 1.45 P. M. local train on the Virginia and Truckee for the greatest silver mining city in America, Virginia City. A ride of 11 miles and we arrive at Steamboat Springs, the most noted hot springs of western Nevada, so named by the first white men who visited them on account of the puffing sounds that some of them emitted and because of the tall columns of smoke and steam that some of them sent up. They are situated at the eastern base of a low range of hills and occupy the top of a flat ridge over a mile in length by a half mile in width. The temperature of the principal springs is said to be over 200 degrees which is about as hot as water can be made at a height of 5000 feet above the sea level. Some of the springs rise through circular openings of from 1 to 3 feet in diameter. Steam rises in great volumes from all these boiling springs, and the air is filled with a strong odor of sulphur; far down in the underground regions are heard loud surgings and lashings as if huge volumes of water were being dashed to and fro. In the morning when the air is cool and calm from 60 to 80 pillars of steam may be counted rising to the height of a hundred feet or more above the low bare ridge. At the springs is a fine commodious hotel, bath houses for vapour baths and every accommodation desirable. The springs are very beneficial to persons afflicted with rheumatism and also useful in many other cases.

A few miles further on we pass Frankfort, a small mining village of perhaps 300 people. Another half hours ride and we reach Nevada's Capital, Carson City, where I stop for a day to "take in the town."

Carson City, the capital of Nevada and County seat of Omsby County, was founded by Major Omsby in 1858. It is beautifully laid out on the plains of Eagle Valley, east of the high timbered hills, forming the eastern base of the main ridge of the Sierra Nevada mountains. It now has a population of about 5000. It derives its main support from the fine farming country by which it is surrounded. Probably it contains more costly public buildings than any city of thrice its size in the Union. There are two daily papers, "The Appeal," owned and edited by the world renowned Sam Davis, whose serio-comic writings are copied by the leading papers all over the country. I called upon "Sam" during my stay in Carson. Mistaking me for a book agent he at first met me with an exceedingly cold glitter in his eye, but on my solemn declaration that I was simply a New England Yankee and that my visit was of a purely social nature, he relaxed into his usual good humor and I passed an hour very pleasantly with him. Mr. Davis is a power in Nevada politics and like the WOBURN JOURNAL, the Appeal is the Herald of the "Grand Old Party."

Resuming my journey the next morning at 10.20 we first reach Mound House, a small mining town of no considerable importance; 9 miles further on we reach Gold Hill where silver was first found. There were houses and settlers in Gold Hill long before Virginia City was settled. There the great Comstock lode was first struck by an old Virginian miner, John Bishop by name, who was prospecting for placer mines. The town is 6000 feet above the level of the sea. Being walled in, east and west, by hills it is always several degrees warmer than at Virginia City which is a thousand feet further up on the mountain side. The first mines were struck in sinking an air shaft for the Comstock mine; much gold was taken from the top of the shaft, and further down it yielded many millions of silver and many millions have been and are now being taken from the veins beneath the foundations of the town. Under the town are many famous mines among which are the Crown Point, Belcher, Yellow Jacket, and others many of which are known undoubtedly to the luckless Eastern stock dabblers who, to put it mildly, have erred in judgment in making their deals. Conspicuous among the private residences is that of Senator Jones. During the prosperous times of '78 the town contained a population of 8000; now there is less than half that number.

We now arrive at Virginia City situated on the eastern face of Mount Davidson, a rocky treeless mountain 7775 feet above the sea level and 1000 feet from the summit lies Virginia City. The town was first settled in 1859. It was first called Ophir, then Pleasant Hill, and finally Mt. Pleasant Point. Late in October of '59 James Fennimore, known among the miners as "Old Virginia;" was in town one evening having a little roundup with the boys when he fell and broke his whiskey bottle against a rock. Picking up the bottom of the bottle in which remained a small quaintity of the precious liquid he solemnly poured it upon the ground and exclaimed: "Boys, I christen this camp 'Virginia,'" and called upon those present to witness that he had christened in "due form" the town in honor of himself and his native State. Being a favorite with the boys they unanimously declared that Virginia it should be, but the town growing rapidly "City" was attached, and Virginia City it remains until the present day.

Up to 1875 everything prospered. The mines were yielding their millions and the population had grown to 20,000 when in October of that year the City was nearly wiped out of existence by fire. No fewer than 2000 buildings and $10,000,000 worth of property was destroyed, the total amount of insurance amounting to only $2,500,000. In 60 days after the fire the principal streets were rebuilt with larger and finer structures and it now contains many fine business blocks, residences and public buildings that would be considered creditable to cities of ten times its inhabitants. The men who made their millions were those who came after the mines had been pretty well prospected.

The discoverers of the great Comstock mine were two prospectors, Comstock and O'Riley. Comstock sold his interest soon after its discovery for $10-000 with which he opened a store in Carson City for the sale of such goods as the country demanded. Knowing nothing about business, having no education and being unable to keep books he was soon flat broke. After losing all the property he possessed in Nevada he struck out into Idaho and Montana where he prospected for several years without success. In Sept. '70, while encamped near Bogeman, Montana, he committed suicide, blowing out his brains with his six shooter. O'Riley held his interest until it brought him $50,000 a part of which he received in the shape of dividends. He then commenced delving in mining stocks and soon lost everything, became insane, and ended his days in an Asylum.

The total yield of the mine discovered by these unfortunate men has been over four hundred millions; the consolidated California and Virginia from the time of its discovery until Dec. 30, 1888, was $119,997,718; the net dividends for that period were $76,690,800. Although Virginia City covers more ground than before the fire and contains larger and finer buildings it is not so populous as in the old flush times of the big bonanza as the Comstock is called. In those days every hotel and boarding house was filled to overflowing; now most of those in the city are permanent inhabitants and property owners. Those who formally composed the great army of sports and adventurers have gone to other fields, as a result of the work of an organization known as "Vigilance Committee 601." Virginia City has now a population of about 10,000 of active, whole souled generous people. The mills and mines employ a large body of men, over half a million being paid for labor every month.

Trial bottles free at H. L. Flanders & Co.'s Drug Store.

The cloakmakers in New York city have won their fight. The rates of wages established by the union are to recognized. Public opinion was so severe upon the sweaters that they were compelled to give in. They have heard some very wholesome truth in the last six weeks.

In July the sun is about ninety four million miles away from the earth. There have been times during the week when New Yorkers have thought it was about two blocks off.

Literary Notices.

"One Thing at a Time" is a good motto, the wisdom of which is exemplified by a striking picture in the August number of PETERSON'S MAGAZINE. A girl stands with a broom in her hand, so completely absorbed in a newspaper that she is oblivious of the fact that the kettle is boiling over on the stove, the toast burning, and disorder generally reigning in the kitchen. The number is rich in fine illustrations, fashion-plates and needlework designs. Two serials begin this month, one a tale of English life by Georgia Grant, the other, a story of Virginia by Alice Maud Ewell; both open admirably, and the contrast between them adds to the interest of each. There is a wide variety of choice reading matter and miscellaneous articles, a timely paper on Cholera and its treatment by Miss Elizabeth Scovil, Superintendent of the Newport hospital. Terms, two dollars a year, one dollar for six months. Address, PETERSON'S MAGAZINE, Philadelphia, Pa.

Forced To Leave Home.

Over 60 people were forced to leave their homes yesterday to call at their druggists for a Free trial package of Lane's Family Medicines. If your blood is bad, your liver and kidneys out of order, if you are constipated and have headache and an unsightly complexion, don't fail to call on any druggists to-day for a free sample of this grand remedy. The ladies praise it. Everyone likes it. Large size packages 50 cents.

Jay Gould Interviewed.

Jay Gould had gobbled the New Jersey Southern, and there was an effort to attach its boats. He sent them somewhere out of the state. I went to ask him about it.

"Tell me all about it," said he.

I did, like a little man.

"Well, well, well," said he. "Now, that's great news. What, the Jesse Hoyt missing—and the little Americus? Why, I know those boats very well, sir, and I have ridden in them so often that I have grown very fond of them, especially the Jesse Hoyt. This is great news. If you hear any more about it come and tell me."—Julian Ralph in Chatter.

What It Does.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
1. Purifies the blood.
2. Creates an appetite.
3. Strengthens the nerves.
4. Makes the weak strong.
5. Overcomes that tired feeling.
6. Cures scrofula, salt rheum, etc.
7. Invigorates the kidneys and liver.
8. Relieves headache, indigestion, dyspepsia.

The cars on the Jungfrau railway have movable flaps, which may be expanded by the guard until they nearly touch the tunnel lining. In this way the car becomes a kind of piston, acting in the tunnel as a cyclinder, and the air acts as an automatic brake to check the speed of the descending car.

See What

The well-known manager of excursions to Washington, California, and the White Mountains, I. A. Whitcomb, says: I have never had anything do me so much good as your Sulphur Bitters. It is the best spring medicine I ever used. I would advise all who suffer from biliousness and dyspepsia to use Sulphur Bitters, for I know they cured me.

The Lagrange (Ga.) Graphic says: "There is a negro in Perry by the name of Alfred Swift who was struck by lightning on the 19th. The bolt struck him at the elbow on the right arm, ran up his arm, around his body, down both legs, tearing both his shoes to pieces. The marks of the lightning are as plain as on a pine tree."

Thousands have been relieved of indigestion and loss of appetite by a single bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The use of this medicine, by giving tone and strength to the assimilative organs, has made innumerable cures of chronic dyspepsia. Price $1. Worth $5 a bottle.

INK BAGS.

"The Cuttle Fish has a kind of gland, called the ink bag, from which, when pursued, it throws out a brownish black liquor that darkens the water, enabling it to escape observation."—Webster's Dictionary.

Just so do the Alum and Ammonia Baking Powder manufacturers, who have for years been palming off on the unsuspecting housewife their adulterated powder as "absolutely pure." As soon as the fraud which they practice is shown up by the baking powder "testers," their ink bag opens and out comes the dirty liquor of falsehood and misrepresentation in the form of reading notices in the newspapers under such headings as: "Trying to Defraud Housekeepers," "Sneak Thieves in Disguise," "Overshooting the Mark," etc., in the hope that their adulterations and fraud will thereby escape observation.

Since the public have learned that these nasty ejections from the baking powder cuttle fish are not editorials, but advertisements, paid for by the wincing Baking Powder Co., they understand how a Company willing to resort to such methods has the hardihood to distort and falsify even Government Reports.

The Cleveland Baking Powder Co. makes an article so pure and wholesome that it is willing to have the composition known, and therefore prints it on every can, and fears no test that can be made.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—U. S. Gov't Report, Aug. 17, 1889.

The Woburn Journal

FRIDAY, JULY 25, 1890.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

All Advertisements, to insure insertion in this paper, must be handed in as early as 10 o'clock on Thursday forenoon.

THE ORIGINAL PACKAGE BILL

It is very doubtful if any law is passed at the present session of Congress to meet the decision of the Federal Supreme Court respecting the sale of intoxicating liquors in original packages notwithstanding the fact that the Senate some weeks ago enacted a bill to that end. On Tuesday the House, which had had the Senate bill under consideration for some time, passed an act but it was so unlike any measure believed to be needed that its adoption by the Senate is entirely out of the question.

It is doubtful if the House intend to have any original package law passed this session. They act as though they were opposed to such legislation, and the close vote by which their bill was adopted strengthens this belief. But if the measure fails the Republicans will be held accountable for it, for they have a majority in the House and could pass an effective original package bill if so disposed. "Webb," the Washington correspondent of the Boston Journal gives an intelligent account of how the matter stands, and his statement is published in another column of this paper.

A LAWN PARTY.

The Suburban Press Association are extremely delighted over an invitation from Congressman Lodge to attend a lawn party on his beautiful grounds at East Point, Nahant, some afternoon next month, the exact date to be fixed hereafter.

Mental visions of a "square meal" at the Congressman's expense, supplemented by domestic lemonade ad lib., with icecream and speeches galore, cause much impatience, it is said, on the part of the craft for the arrival of the day of the physical and intellectual feast.

Should the afternoon prove to be a pleasant one, and if the feast and lemonade come full up to the grade (which will certainly be the case, for Congressman Lodge is a generous and gentlemanly host), then look out for eloquence in the editorials of the S. P. A. for succeeding weeks, and taffy without stint.

THE GREAT G. A. R. PARADE.

Commander-in-Chief Alger has issued his first order for the parade of the Grand Army of the Republic at the annual National encampment to take place in Boston on August 12. The encampment, the parade, and everything connected with them, are expected to be on a grand scale, with a larger number of Veterans there than have ever before assembled on a similar occasion.

Boston and the neighboring country are making great preparations for the reception of the Veterans from other parts of the Union and nothing that can contribute to their comfort and pleasure will be left undone.

— Secretary Whitcher told us that the Woburn Co-operative Bank sold $2350 at the last meeting at a good rate. The money was bought for building purposes.

— Mr. E. D. Newton has entered the employ of Carter & Nichols as salesman in their coal office. Handling coal and lumber was his business before going to California.

— Dr. Dodge having disposed of his drug business will now give his whole time to the practice of medicine and can be found at the office at his residence, 391 Main street.

— Fred F. Lowell is at his old haunt, Peaks Island, Portland Harbor. Portland, Peaks Island and Casco Bay have charms for Mr. Lowell which no other spot in America has.

— Major Ambrose Bancroft's family are at Plainfield. The Major's real good time will begin about Aug. 11 or 12th when Boston will be full and overflowing with Veterans.

— The semi-annual report of General Secretary Bailey of the work and results of the Y. M. C. A. of this city, to be found in another column, tell a good story for the Association.

— The remaining concerts of the series provided by the Woburn Brass Band will be given on Aug. 6 and 20, and Sept. 3. Funds, so it is said, have been raised for the purpose.

— Gentle Reader, cast your eye over the great parade of figures which Mr. Webster Woodman makes in his advertisement of the best Life Ins. Co. in America. They are enormous.

— S. Franksford Trull and family, Henry E. Smith and wife, Miss Susan Edgell, Miss Josie Hinckley, Miss Hattie Bosworth, William F. Bosworth went to Canaan, N. H., last week.

— The Phalanx (Co. G.) have had a very nice week or their annual muster. The weather has been delightful. This is Governor's Day, and to-morrow the boys will be getting back home.

— James Skinner, Esq., surviving partner of the late firm of James Skinner & Co., leather makers of this city, publishes a notice in this issue of the JOURNAL to which attention is called.

— There is a Major H. C. Hall at Waltham and he is receiving votes for the Globe's 1000-dollar sword. Woburn has a Major H. C. Hall who is as deserving of votes as the best of them.

— Mr. Sparrow Horton has an important change in his card to-day. People entitled to pensions will do well to give him a call, for he can do the business up in the best of shape.

— Auctioneer Prior advertises an important sale to take place at Wood Hill, Burlington. The property to be sold is desirable and no doubt the sale will be a spirited and well attended one.

— The Woburn Electric Light Company are putting electrics into the depot of the B. & M. RR. in this city. Under the management of Supt. Fish electric lighting is spreading in this city.

— The Foresters of this city, 500 strong, expect to dine at Hotel Nantasket, Nantasket Beach, on Aug. 20, and spend a holiday there. Athletic sports, games, etc. will be the order of the day.

— We had a short call from Editor Barnstead of the Stoneham News last Wednesday morning. He is about the thriftiest looking country Editor we have seen for a long time. As usual Mr. Barnstead was in a big hurry.

— President Davis of the Greensboro (N. C.) Institute (colored) preached at St. Johns Baptist church in this city last Sunday. He is visiting the North to collect money for his college, and got a good purse from the members of St. Johns last Sunday.

— The following are the new set of Bellevue Club officers: President, John F. Carley; Vice-President, Reuben E. Morton; Secretary, William A. Sherburne; Treasurer, Edward B. Thompson; Executive Committee, the President, Joseph P. Shields and John M. Wallace.

— Rev. N. B. Fisk, a former beloved pastor of the M. E. Church in this city, will occupy his old pulpit next Sunday, providence permitting. He has hosts of friends and admirers among the people of Woburn because he is a man of sterling character and genuine piety.

— Miss Josette Gertrude Menard of Woburn, whose graceful musical lyrics are so much enjoyed, goes next week to visit the Nova Scotia coast and enjoy its romantic scenery.—Boston Budget. The JOURNAL hopes she will enjoy the trip and at its close safely return to her home here.

— Mr. George A. Day, Cashier of the First National Bank in this city, visited Newport, R. I., lately and filled his portefolio with pictures of scenes and things at that very fashionable watering-place. It is understood hereaway that Mr. Day is something of an expert with lens and tripod.

— The Chronicle is trying to impart a musical education to the people of Reading by publishing weekly an original piece of music. The only fault that can justly be found with the productions is, that some of them seem rather too lively to suit the ideas and habits of that reposeful old burgh.

— The family of Mr. Charlie A. Jones of the Five Cents Savings Bank will leave next Thursday or Friday for Annisquam, their favorite summer seaside resort, where they will remain until about the middle of September. Mr. Jones will make frequent trips between Woburn and Annisquam during the summer.

— Mr. Charles Trull and family, which includes Mr. John Trull and his domestic dependencies, are away up among the White Mountains. By the way there is no foundation for the reports that White Mountain visitors have had to carry hot soapstones and bottles of boiling water to bed with them this week.

— Mrs. Julia A. Day, No. 10 Glenwood street, and Miss Jessie A. Day, a teacher in the Highlands School, are at Kennebunkport, a quaint old seaport in the neighborhood of Capes Arundal and Porpoise, and a popular place for summer resort for the best class of people. The sea views there are unsurpassed.

— We had another good dinner on the products of Mr. Levi C. Teel's prolific pea patch the other day. The soil of Cambridge street must be just the checker for green peas or else Uncle Levi is a master hand for making the excellent vegetable do its level best in the way of growing large and toothsome. Thanks, Uncle.

— Since the last issue of the JOURNAL Chief McIntosh and Officer McDermott have made several successful liquor raids, among which we may name John Maloney, Michael Reddy, Bridget Callahan and Hugh Rooney. A considerable stock of liquor was secured, and the owners of it will be attended to in due season.

— Leonard Thompson, Esq., of this city left Boston last Saturday with a large Raymond excursion party for Alaska, Vancouver, National Park, etc. The party was composed of men and women from different sections of New England. The trip will consume several weeks. Mr. Thompson is getting to be a good deal of a traveler.

— The JOURNAL Book and Job office is complete in all its appointments and has the reputation of turning out as fine work and as much of it as any printing establishment in Middlesex county. It is fully supplied with presses, all the latest styles of type, stock and men to use them, and gentlemen, your work is respectfully solicited. —tf.

— The first number of The News was issued by Andrews, Cutler & Co., last Saturday. It is a very neat, clean looking 7-column paper, well filled with local news, and appears to be a worthy candidate for public patronage. It will be neutral in politics and religion, or, in its own words, "non-partisan in sect and party." Mr. Frank E. Wetherell is its editor.

— Record of Deaths in Woburn from 1640 to 1873 prepared by Edward F. Johnson, Esq., ably assisted by Miss Gertrude Menard, has been published by the city and copies are for sale at the City Treasurer's office in Municipal Building. It is a very valuable volume as a companion production to Record of Births covering the same long period and done by the same author. Mr. Johnson has received many high encomiums for the manner in which he did this work.

— The two G. A. R. Posts in this city expect to take care of a good many Veterans during Encampment week in Boston, beginning on Aug. 12. Comrades from abroad will find the latchstrings of the homes of their Woburn fellow-Vets always hanging on the outside of the doors. The "boys" are lotting on a big time during the National Encampment.

— The wife and four children of Rev. F. W. March, foreign missionary, son of Rev. Dr. March of this city, arrived in Boston from Syria last Saturday night and proceeded to the home of Mrs. March's parents at Auburndale. Rev. Dr. March visited his daughter-in-law and grandchildren early this week and of course the meeting was a pleasant one all round.

— You all see what Fred Leeds has to say about his $14-excursion to the While Mountains? These are the particulars: Take Portland boat in Boston at 7 p. m., Tuesday, Aug. 5; early train from Portland, up through Crawford's Notch to Fabyans; 2 days at White Mountain House; thence home via Boston, Concord & Montreal RR. It will be a big thing for the money.

— Rev. H. C. Parker, pastor of the Unitarian Church in this city, and family will leave on next Wednesday for Duxbury by the sea where they will pass a portion of their vacation in the enjoyment of clams and ocean breezes. Another part of their midsummer outing will be spent inspecting the splended dairy products of the Green Mountain State. We wish them well, certainly.

— The best Hair Mattress is none too good for your bed. Sound sleep is cheap at any price. To say it cannot be bought with money is not strictly correct. Wonderful stories are told of an imported soft hair from South America, which is now being made up into mattresses by Paine's Furniture Co., 48 Canal street, Boston. It costs no more than ordinary hair, but is two or three times as luxurious.

— Local reporters of the Boston papers are making a great hue-and-cry over the dismissal of firemen Dean from Hose Company, No. 6, C. S., and are trying to make it out that he is a very badly abused man. For so much smoke there is but terrible little fire. Complaints were formally lodged by Capt. Newcomb with Chief Engineer Ferrin, and the upshot of it was, Dean was dismissed from the service.

— The National Band will give a concert on the Common next Wednesday evening, July 30, 1890.

1.	March. The Attack.	Reeves
2.	Overture. Polyphony.	Pettee
3.	Selection. The Jolly Minstrels.	Brooks
4.	Waltz. Remembrance of Naples.	Bennett
5.	Musical Reminisceces. A picture of the past.	Rollinson
6.	Serenade. Magnolia.	Missud
7.	Idyll. The Mill in the Forest.	Eilenberg
8.	Galop. Out on a Lark.	Cox
9.	Schottische. Chimes of Normandy.	Planquette
10.	March. Namasket.	Thomas

— Miss M. S. Brown of No. 30 Mt. Pleasant street in this city is Secretary and Treasurer of the "Ten Minutes a Day Society," which is a benevolent organization instituted for the purpose of supplying deserving people at home and abroad with useful and needed things, such as clothing, etc. The Society extends all over the country, and those who would communicate with it should address Miss Brown as above.

— Uncle Sam's letter carriers take their vacation of 15 working days each in this manner: Capt. William H. Mathews goes first of Aug. and will be privileged to take in the grand parade of Veterans in Boston on the 12th of which he is one; John Maguire and Ed. H. Callahan, on Aug. 14; E. E. Foss and John O'Brien, on Sept. 12. They have not yet determined just where they will hang out during their 15 days of vacation.

— Editors of country papers are not all of them useless pieces of the machinery that keeps society going. Many times they are as useful as anybody else and deserve as much credit for good conduct. For example, there is the Editor of the Natick Bulletin—if it hadn't been for his public spirit, push and pecuniary ability Natick people would have had no open-air band concerts this season. But the Bulletin Editor enlisted in the good cause and the concerts are a sure thing.

— Last Wednesday we received a call from Mr. John S. Colgate, Editor and proprietor of The North Texas Farmer, published at Paris, Texas. He is a son of Mr. Colgate, the florist at Cummingsville, and has been in Texas ever since the War. He was one of the "Boys in Blue," and his visit North is for the purpose of attending the National Encampment of the G. A. R. in Boston next month as well as to visit his old home here and his family. Mr. Colgate likes Texas and will return to his home there early in September.

— Officers of Liberty Council, No. 39, O. U. A. M.; Senior ex-Councillor, George H. Peters; Junior ex-Councillor, Charles F. Spear; Councillor, Orin W. Stevens; Vice Councillor, James E. Furlong; Inductor, Frank C. Taylor; Examiner, David H. Eaton; Recording Secretary, Chas. F. Richardson; Assistant Secretary, George C. Conn; Financial Secretary, Frank L. Skinner; Treasurer, W. Frank Fowle; Inside Protector, George H. Sutherland; Outside Protector, William F. Cummings; Trustee, B. Frank Smith.

— The Fourth of July parade committee are indignant over the paragraph printed in our last issue, copied from the Woburn JOURNAL, wherein the Woburn High School Cadets declined to parade because of a "Jack-at-a-pinch" invitation which they claim to have received from the committee. Mr. A. E. Ayer, secretary of the committee, states that the Woburn boys were among the first to be invited—ten days or two weeks previous to the celebration. They had plenty of time to make all arrangements necessary. Letters passed between Mr. Ayer and the Captain and everything appeared to be all arranged until about 24 hours before the parade, when they sent word declining to march. These boys had no occasion to feel sore over their invitation, as it was given in the best of motives, and should have been received by them in the same spirit, even if they did not want to parade.—Star. All the JOURNAL knows about it is what some of the Battalion boys said to its reporter.

— Mr. Charles M. Munroe, one of the most successful clothing merchants in this city, has been awarded the contract to supply the Woburn Fire Department with firemen's suits for the current year. This amounts to a pretty large matter, for each member of the Department is to be furnished with a suit and to supply the whole takes considerable money. It is understood that Mr. Munroe's facilities for filling the contract are firstclass and that he will give the city a fine job. It was wise in the Fire authorities to give the business to a home house.

— The Woburn Brass Band, to use rather a hackneyed phrase, fairly outdid itself last Wednesday evening in giving the public another of its splendid open-air concerts. There isn't, in our opinion, a Band within 40 miles of here that can beat the W. B. B., and but very few that can come anywhere near it. Thomas J. Marrinan is the leader and as a handler of the baton he hasn't many peers in these parts. A larger or better behaved crowd never before came out to enjoy one of Woburn's famous summer evening band concerts on the Common.

— James Chester Hanson, son of the late James I. Hanson, so long the Principal of our High School, and Mrs. Helen C Hanson, and a bright and studious lad he is by the way, has passed satisfactorily and without conditions the preliminary examinations for Harvard College. This was a very creditable achievement on the part of young Hanson, particularly as but a very few boys have accomplished the feat at any time, and it is stated that he is the only one who has passed such examinations "without conditions" in the last four years.

— It is to be hoped that the report that Mr. James Skinner has recommenced active operations at his leather manufactory is true. Since the death of Mr. True last winter Mr. Skinner has been dilligently employed settling up the business of James Skinner & Co., of which firm Mr. True was a member, and nothing, to speak of, has been done by him in the way of making leather. It is one of the largest establishments in the city and starting it up again full handed will add considerably to the business of the place.

— Town of Everett, lying between Malden and Boston, is entitled to the champion's belt. Its population in 1880 was 4,150; in 1890, 11,043, a gain of 6,893 in 10 years. Its popu- in 1885 was 5,825, reaching 11,043 in 1890, showing a gain of 5,218 in five years. This unquestionably goes ahead of any other town in Massachusetts as to per cent of gain. Malden hasn't done bad either. According to the U. S. enumerators its population is nearly 24,000; according to the count of the city Assessors it is 1500 more, or over 25,000. But Malden shows a remarkable growth in the last five years.

— The Woburn Gas Light Company held their annual meeting for the election of officers and the transaction of other business at 4 o'clock last Monday afternoon. President Benjamin Hinckley presided. The old Board of Directors were re-elected, namely: Benjamin Hinckley, John Johnson, G. R. Gage, Richard J. Monks, Charlie A. Jones; Auditors, Frederic A. Flint, Robert J. W. Phinney. At a meeting of the Directors, Mr. Benjamin Hinckley was re-elected President of the Company, and Mr. Richard J. Monks, Treasurer. Mr. John Gilcreast will, no doubt, continue in the office of Superintendent.

— F. M. Frye is booming the sewing machine business for all there is out. He is handling the "White," the favorite of the country, and they are going like hot cakes buttered on both sides. Frye has just hired R. M. Arnold, an expert sewing machine machinist, for salesman and repairer, and with him he expects to sweep the deck. Arnold understands all there is worth knowing about a machine and the business, and with him for salesman and repairer Frye feels confident that he has got the business all in his own hands. He will not only do general repairing, but has second-hand machines constantly on hand which he will sell at hardpan figures.

— Dr. S. W. Kelley is in Maine this week. He had business with the Portland Machine Works in relation to the Complete Combustion steam boiler in which he is largely interested, a part of which was to make a trial trip to Bangor over the Maine Central of one of the boilers just completed by the Works. From all accounts the boiler is a very valuable invention. A year ago the stock of the company owning it was sold for considerably less than half its par value, and to-day it is away in the pictures. Believing in its intrinsic merits and great utility Dr. Kelley has been indefatigable in pushing this invention into public notice and favor and at last it is a complete success and will probably prove a bonanza to its owners.

— People desiring copies of the Woburn Record of Deaths can obtain them at the City Treasurer's office. Under the vote of the City Council the Treasurer is to charge twenty-five cents per copy, and the purchaser can take as many copies as he desires at that price. Those who possess a copy of the Record of Births should make an early call on the Treasurer if they desire to obtain the corresponding volume of Deaths. This latter book also contains the quaint epitaphs of the old burying-ground some of which are exceedingly curious and amusing. We should like to give a few quotations, but our readers can obtain the whole thing for twenty-five cents, and become the possessors of a volume of exceeding interest and valye to every citizen of Woburn.

— Mr. Z. A. Atwood, cutter at G. R. Gage & Co's merchant tailoring establishment, and wife have gone to Bucksport, Me., the former home of Mr. Atwood, and also the abiding place of "Old Jed Prouty of Bucksport, Maine," a venerable hayseed well known to Boston theatre-goers. Mr. Atwood didn't doubt but that he would see "Old Jed" down there and go fishing with him. He and "O. J." were great cronies when they were boys and have always had a strong fellow-feeling for each other, so whenever they get a chance they generally improve it by going fishing. "Old Jed" knows all the trout holes in every brook in Bucksport and about there, and what he don't know Landlord Moses of the best hotel on the Maine coast can tell him. Mr. Atwood was longing to get down there to be with old Mr. Prouty and Moses as soon as possible and go fishing.

— At 5 o'clock, p. m., on Saturday, August 2, Auctioneer Prior will sell for Mr. Samuel Skelton as desirable a piece of residence property as there is in Woburn, it being a part of the real estate which belonged to the late Samuel C. Skelton. The lot—a large one—lies on Warren street between Capt. John P. Crane's new residence and the late John H. Cummings homestead, nearly opposite Lawrence street, and for a gentleman's home there is nothing in this city that surpasses it. Academy Hill takes the lead by considerable as a residence section—in fact, some call it the "Court End" of the town—and it is a really a delightful part of the city. None but nice, genteel homes are found on it, and this property which Mr. Prior is going to sell for Mr. Skelton on Aug. 2, is as desirable and pleasant as any of the many very fine places on the Hill. Please bear this important sale in mind.

— Mrs. W. H. Swain prefers the Upper Kennebec as the scene of her summer vacation this year and a letter addressed to her at "Skowhegan, Somerset County, Maine" wouldn't be likely to miss her hand very much. Skowhegan, located on both sides of the beautiful Kennebec at Skowhegan Falls, is as pleasant a New England village, of the first magnitude as to size, as the traveler would be likely to light on in a month of Sundays. There is nothing around there more charming unless it be Norridgewock, five miles further up the river, which is, by all odds, the choicest spot on earth for summer rest and repose and of course takes the palm over all the towns in that country, although all of them are wonderfully attractive—especially Madison. There is where Mrs. Swain is passing the "heated term," while William, who is a prosperous Boston marketman, will be likely to join her later on.

— When a certain Main street barber got back from a fishing trip through Wilmington the other day he was about as near used up as a man generally gets to be. He and a friend started out together about 5 o'clock in the morning and hoofed it to a brook running through the farther end of Wilmington where they expected to catch more trout than a half dozen men of their size could tote home on their backs in a month. They tramped and they tramped; they went up the stream and they went down the stream; but they caught no fish. When our friend, the barber, with an appetite as sharpset as any crosscut saw, turned his attention to fodder he found, to his dismay, one of his two ham sandwiches gone and no trace of the thief to be found anywhere. The other chap said nothing and fished. It was a tough day for both of the boys. They declared they had walked over a thousand miles that day in a broiling July sun, but that was setting the figures rather high we should say. But they were a tired, hungry, dirty, fishless brace of mortals when they got back to Woburn that night, and there is no way you can rile their temper quicker than to ask them how fishing is in Wilmington.

City Government.

COMMON COUNCIL.

At a special meeting of the Common Council of Woburn last Tuesday night, the Highway Committee's report on laying out Dartmouth street, Dexter and Longwood Avenues, were accepted in concurrence. An order was passed authorizing the Treasurer to hire $6000 for the construction of a new conduit from the pumping station to the reservoir. An order was passed to build a new four-room schoolhouse on Fowle street, and that a joint committee of five be chosen to purchase land and make contracts in accordance with plans drawn by J. Merrill Brown. The City Treasurer was authorized to hire $14,000 for the construction of a schoolhouse and the purchase of land. In recognition of the G. A. R. parade in Boston, August 12, it was voted to close all the Municipal Buildings on that day. Councilmen Beggs, of Ward 3, Eames and Fox were chosen on the school building committee.

ALDERMEN.

The Board granted a hearing to the fish dealers of Woburn on their petition to have all out-of-town fish peddlers pay a license fee of $50 for selling fish within the city limits. The Mayor's nomination of Daniel Lafferty to be a special policeman, vice McGiver, removed, was confirmed. B. S. Devlin & Co. were granted leave to withdraw on their petition for a druggist's liquor license. The Board adjourned to Sept. 2 for the summer vacation.

The Bryant & Stratton Commercial School of Boston, which our readers will notice advertised in this week's issue, will re-open Tuesday, Sept. 2nd. This School needs no recommendation from us, as its present standing and reputation gained during the last 29 years places it at the head of all schools of a similar character. It can be patronized with full confidence that nothing that is possible to be done for its pupils will be left undone.

Death Record From 1640 to 1873.

The record of deaths in Woburn from 1640 to 1873, as copied from the Woburn records, and alphabetically and chronologically arranged by families by Mayor Edward F. Johnson, has just been published at the city's expense. Miss J. Gertrude Menard has assisted in comparing the record with the data to be found on the gravestones in the Salem street and Calvary cemeteries, and this has resulted in the addition of over 400 names, and the discovery of a number of discrepancies between the clerk's records and those chiselled on the gravestones. An appendix to the work gives a transcript of epitaphs in the Woburn first and second burial grounds, as made by Mr. William B Cutter, Librarian of the Public Library.—Boston Herald

It is often charged that men gain high positions by a liberal use of "soap." If "soap" enough is used a man may make a clean sweep. Of course this is spoken figuratively, yet one can always make a clean sweep if he or she uses Brussels soap, for its mission is to purify and cleanse, and this it does with astounding rapidity and celerity. All who use Brussels soap attest the fact. It's economical.

Not one island has risen or sunk in the Pacific ocean for thirty-four years, and geologists declared that the earth is resting for some mighty effort in the future.

BY THE GENERAL SECRETARY.

Aug. 9, a deep sea fishing excursion; 5 tickets only; any gentleman who wishes one can procure it at the rooms for $1.00.

Saturday evening meeting is an informal one, and we wish every man who is interested in Christain work would endeavor to be present. It will pay you.

At the Sunday afternoon meeting at 4 o'clock we expect to be addressed by Rev. N. B. Fisk, a former clergymen of this city. All men are invited to be present.

The moonlight excursion down the harbor will occur next week Tuesday. Round trip tickets from Boston, Battery Wharf, 50 cents, for sale at the Y. M. C. A. rooms. Let all plan to go. Call for further information on the General Secretary.

"LOOKING BACKWARD."

We do not believe in this motto at all times, yet in this instance we wish to make an exception and glance "backward" for six months to see if the Young Men's Christian Association of this city have a right to live. If they have this right certainly there are men and women who should be willing to support it. The following statistics show for themselves:

Visits to the rooms (Sunday excluded)	8,501
Daily average,	66
Total attendance—Men's Meetings,	1725
Average,	69
Saturday evening meeting,	200
Average,	9
Request for prayers,	22
Professed conversion,	14
Joined the church,	6
Boys Branch Meeting Sunday,
Total attendance,	1227
Average,	49
Boys asked for prayers,	30
Boys professed conversion,	10

Some of these will join the church in the fall.

Two lectures have been given to members and friends, beside a number of sociables.

Membership at present time is as follows: Sustaining members (paying $5 or more per year), 62, and 151, limited or unlimited, paying less than $5.

It costs about $175 per month to keep the rooms open. This sum looks large and some may say it is needless, but stop a moment: How much would you be willing to pay to keep your boy out of bad company? I am sure you would say the above is none too much.

The Lord only can reveal the amount of good that has come to those who frequent here.

NOW AND THEN.

Occasionally we hear of a Christian who does not believe in the Young Men's Christian Association. Usually such an opinion is the natural outcome of ignorance of what the Association is doing. The same man would not denounce the church or its immediate branches of work, but he fails to see that the Association is an ally of the church, but using those agencies which appeal to the physical, mental and social tastes of young men, thereby bringing them under Christian influences and among Christian men. He does not know, or knowing, does not care that while his boy may have a cheerful home and kindly surroundings, thousands of young men roam the streets in the evenings, or worse, visit the saloon, only because they have not a better place. It is not surprising that men go down hill. A young man comes to the city, and after his first days's work goes out for a stroll. He feels just like having a talk with a friend. There is not a person in all the length and breadth of the city that he knows. On every corner and in every street vice in its most fascinating form greets him, and fortunate is he, if by the restraint of early home training he finds himself in no worse place than a cheap play house. Somewhere in town is a Young Men's Christian Association, struggling for an existence, where he would find congenial and wholesome society, but so many are the allurements on every side that he does not reach it, and before three months he is ruined, or going down hill by lightning express. This is no picture of fancy, but an intense and awful reality, and the man who "does not believe in Associations" is to blame, because he does not, by his support and prayers, help the Association to extend its work, thus giving it a chance to save the young men before the saloon and its allies destroy him.—Ex.

W. C. T. U.

A strictly pure, unfermented wine for sacrimental use is manufactured at Bedford, Mass., by Mrs. Sarah C. Sampson & Co., who are successors to Miss Emma M. Taylor, of Woburn, all being members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Mr. James H. Roberts, formerly of the State Prohibition Committee is arranging for a large mass meeting, in which all the temperance organizations will participate, to be held Aug. 4th, at Downer Landing, a favorite picnic resort in Boston Harbor. Gov. St. John, and other prominent platform speakers will be present. Special excursion rates are secured.

The W. C. T. U. of Hampden County has established, at South Hadley Falls, an industrial home for inebriate and fallen women, and has given it the name of the Frances E. Willard Industrial Home. The gifts from different Unions and individuals in the county have amounted to about thirteen hundred dollars, which is sufficient to carry on the work for one year. The estate has been hired from a member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and contains a house of twelve rooms and sufficient grounds to make it an available and pleasant place for such an institution. The matron, Miss Rachel Lee, has been under the efficient training of Miss Charpiot, who for years has skillfully managed the Home for Intemperate Women, in Boston.

The Boston Y. W. C. T. U. has established a coffee house on Federal Street, two doors south of Kneeland Street, in the vicinity of the Old Colony R. R. Station, where good coffee, rolls, sandwiches, pie, and soups are furnished. The establishment is run on a practical business basis, and is becoming well patronized. In the evening the room is used as a free reading room, which is crowded with boys, who enjoy the books and games. If sufficient funds are secured, the work will be enlarged by fitting up two rooms, one for the training of boys in carpentering and wood-carving; the other for a training school for girls, where they will be taught sewing and cooking.

The Original Package Bill.

Special Dispatch to the Boston Journal.

WASHINGTON, July 22. The House passed the Original Package bill, but it was neither the Senate bill nor the Adams substitute. It was the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee. It was a bill which it is clear as the sunlight will not be accepted by the Senate. If there is to be any legislation on the subject, it will be as the result of a conference. No one ventures even to suggest what would result from the enactment into law of the bill which today passed the House. The difference between the Senate bill and the bill which has passed the House is very simple. The Senate bill applies to liquor only, and attaches to the original packages in a severe and drastic manner at the border of the States. The House bill applies to all articles of commerce—liquor, oleomargarine, cottonseed oil—not at the border, but when they are offered for sale to enter into the mass of merchandise of the State. No one may say what might not happen under the House bill. It is very clear that one State might under cover of its protection assail in the name of purity the business of a neighboring State, and that the measure, instead of being solely in the interests of health and good morals, might be made a weapon to destroy commerce and to injure sections. The House bill, in the form in which it passed, will not become a law. Possibly the Senate bill will not. The best opinion is that out of the conference may come some measure which will be restricted to liquor alone, and that further attempt at legislation upon that subject will be postponed until next winter. The vote on the passage of the bill was a very close one, and for a long time its fate was undetermined.

Forgot His Bait.

From the Sunday Herald of the 20th instant we clip the following concerning our fellow-citizen, Benjamin Champney, from the letter of its White Mountain correspondent:

I met Mr. Benjamin Champney the other morning starting out for the second time that day to go a fishing. Artist's Brook was to be his fishing ground, but, to his vexation, after he had walked away up above the falls, and was about to begin fishing, he discovered that he had left his bait at home. It was a hot day, but he went back for it, and was trudging along back again through the dust when I saw him. Whether or not he was rewarded with the good luck he certainly deserved I am unable to report. He asked me to call in at his studio and see a painting that had just been sold to Mr. Fred Whiting of the Herald. The artist has named it "The Forest of Arden," and he obtained his conception of it from the scene in "As You Like It," at Daly's last winter. It is a beautiful picture of an avenue in a grand old forest. It has a dreamy, delicious atmosphere, and along the broad way, and off in the alluring distance in the depths of the wood, the ground lies bathed in a soft, golden light. A great tree in the foreground at the beginning of the avenue, and the dreamy, romantic sentiment of the whole, reminded me of the lovely scene in "Joan of Arc," as I saw it in Germany, where the maid stood alone under the vast talking oak and addressed a parting invocation to the dear loved scenes of her childhood, beginning:

"Lebt wohl ihr Berge, ihr geliebten Triften,
Ihr traulich stillen Thaeler lebet wohl!"

["Farewell ye mountains, ye beloved pastures,
Ye dear, still valleys, fare ye well!"]

Tries to Console Itself.

The Boston Courier says: The Boston Advertiser tries to console itself for the outstripping of Boston by Baltimore and St. Louis. "It is not by her census roll," says this philosophic Bostonian, "but by her roll of patriots, thinkers, philanthropists, of names illustrious in the records of the church, the State, the school, the forum, and the world of letters, that Boston is ambitious to be known and remembered." Upon which the New York Sun remarks as follows: "Bully for Boston! While she can boast of body and mind, Sullivan and Cook, her necklace of beans will be more illustrious than the violet crown of the elder Athens. What if Baltimore and St. Louis have a few more men, women and children? In those ungodly places you can get claret and soda in the drug shops. Boston forbids the drink. In Boston, too, soaking is sedentary. What more does the town need to make it glorious? Depend upon it, the thin shanks of Boston will never cease to shin up the toilsome steep of Fame."

Mason's Fruit Jars at 63c. a dozen, and "Fruit of the Loom" bleached cotton, at 8½c. a yard, are specimens of the prices quoted in the "Lean Pocket Book" sale advertised on our local page this week.

Hollander, Bradshaw & Folsom's Department Store where this sale is taking place is noted for its offerings of standard goods, at down cellar prices.

Gen. Banks Will Run Again.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—[Special.]—J. J. McCarthy has not succeeded in getting a ship for the Charlestown navy yard, but he has seen Gen. Banks and announces exactly what The Record announced two months ago, that Gen. Banks expects to run again in the fifth district, if the bill (to place him on the retired list) does not pass the house. Gen. Banks' term here has been a pleasant one, and his speeches, though few in number, have always been received with much attention. He has a clerk (as he is chairman of a house committee) and his work is not especially arduous. He lives very quietly and cosily in a little house in the eastern part of the city, and has refrained from taking any active part in the social life at Washington. This life seems to suit him, and he would, as The Record has already stated, be unwilling to retire unless he were placed on the retired list of the army.

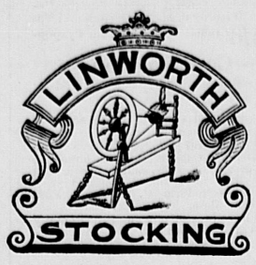
A child is not nourished in proportion to the bulk of food he receives into his stomach; he is only nourished by the food he can digest. Every atom of Mellin's Food is assimilable and nourishing. It contains in proper proportions those nitrogenous and phosphatic matters which are so essential for the healthy growth of a child.

"Have you washed your feet?" You think this is a queer question to ask, but it is one that many Mammas have got in the habit of asking the boys and girls as "Have you washed your hands?"

And Why? Because it has been almost impossible to get Stockings that would'nt crock and fade.

But alas! for Pearline.

We have got a Line of Stock-



ings Worth much more than many so called "Fast Blacks," which will please the Mammas and the boys and girls as well, and not cost any more. Sizes to fit everybody from baby to grandmamma.

Pearline has its place but it will not have to be used to wash-out the stains left by the "LINWORTH."

Literary Notices.

THE COTTAGE HEARTH for August is a fine number. The contents are fresh and entertaining. There is a great deal in the number that the women ought to know about because it bears on their everyday life in all its departments. There is nothing cheap about this magazine except its subscription price. We give THE JOURNAL ($2.00 a year) and THE COTTAGE HEARTH ($1.50 a year) for $2.00 INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE.

HARPER'S MONTHLY for August is a handsomely illustrated number, there being no less than 8 papers in it whose interest is much enhanced by the excellent work bestowed on them by the artist. The literary contents of the issue are of the best quality. Port Tarascon is continued; Edward Everett Hale has an interesting paper called Magellen and the Pacific; Street Life in India; A Walk up the Avenue; An Impression—these are a few of the large number of entertaining articles which the August HARPER'S contains.

The numbers of LITTELL'S LIVING AGE for July 12th and 19th contain A Visit to a Great Estate, and Distinction, Dante in his Relation to the Theology & Ethics of the Middle Ages, A Kentish Pilgrim Road, and Vermin in England, Sultan Abdui Hamid, by Professor Vambery, Jamaica, The Gods of Greece, by J. R. Mozley, Some Indian Wild Beasts, and The Art and Mystery of Collaboration, George Wither, In the Brazilian Capital, Notes of a Pilgrimage, Mr. Patmore on Distinction, The Lady Wrangler, and The Effect of the New Careers on Women's Happiness, with instalments of The Strange Occurrences in Canterstone Jail, and Lloyd Courtenay's Banishment, and Poetry. For fifty-two numbers of sixty-four large pages each; the subscription price ($8) is low. Littell and Co., Boston, are the publishers.

The complete novel in LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for August is contributed by that popular English author, Mrs. Alexander. The story is entitled What Gold Cannot Buy. The many readers of Mrs. Alexander's The Wooing O't, Her Dearest Foe, and other charming stories will devour with pleasure this new and captivating romance. It is the story of a plucky young English girl who goes out as the companion of an elderly and aristocratic matron. There are capital descriptions of English country life among the higher classes, and the story gradually leads up to a startling and unexpected denouement. Lawn Tennis for Women is the title of an article which will greatly interest all lady players. It is written by those famous lady players, Miss Bertha L. Townsend and Miss Margarette Lyman Ballard, for years the champions of the United States. Lawn Tennis is the most widely popular of all out-door games among both men and women, and much has been written about it, but so far only from a man's point of view. Women's play of course differs essentially from that of men. This article is written with the object of improving the play among women, and should be read by every lady player. Some of the other papers are: Veiled, Ebb and Flow, Contemporary Biography, Women, The Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences, etc. Published by Lippincott, Philadelphia.

A raft of young men consisting of Thomas Feeney of the Boston Record, Felix O'Connor, Isaac Boudro, Al. Hutchingson and Herbert Decelle are spending the week on Plum Island off against the mouth of the Merrimac a few miles below Newburyport. The weather was slightly glacial during the fore part of the week for camping, especially near the sea.

Our town has not gained in population the last 10 years nearly as much as we all thought it had. There has been a large number of dwellings built here since the last State census was taken and yet the increase of inhabitants for 1885 to 1890 was less than from 1880 to 1885. I give you the figures:

From 1880 to 1885,	588
From 1885 to 1890,	457
From 1880 to 1890,	1045

Or only 100 yearly gain since 1880. I think there is a screw loose somewhere in this census business.

Last year the tax rate was $17.00 per $1,000.—Star.

To talk now about the 4th of July at Winchester seems to be in the nature of a "Day After the Fair," nevertheless there was one feature of it which I will venture to bring up for a few words of commendation for the reason, principally, that so little mention has been made of it in the public prints. I refer to the entertainment given for the pleasure of the children in the Town Hall in the afternoon. It was one of prettiest and most interesting parts of the whole celebration and as highly enjoyed, particularly by Winchester people. The committee who had the affair in hand and carried it through so successfully were Messrs. F. W. Lawson, E. H. Rice and John H. Carter, the chief pusher being Mr. Lawson, who fairly dotes on young 'uns. The Town Hall was filled to its utmost capacity with delighted spectators, and the entertainment consisted of an exhibition of Lovett's "Living Pictures," feats of Legerdemain, Ventriloquism, etc., and passing judgment and awarding prizes to to the most beautifully decorated boy of Winchester and the most beautifully decorated girl, who should enter the competative list. The decorations were in leaves, wild flowers, etc., and the one to whom the first prize was awarded received a handsome and costly gold medal, and the second, a silver one. There was a great variety of decorations, much taste was displayed in the arrangement of the flowers and leaves over the boys and girls, and the exhibition was a fine one. Indeed, it was so highly enjoyed that next year it will be repeated on a much larger scale.

It's economical—Brussels soap.

General Sherman's Mule.

In a conversation with Judge Joseph Cox, who is a very pleasant talker and full of anecdotes and information, he said: "I was talking to Gen. W. T. Sherman, several years ago, about riding horses and mules, and he said: 'Cox, a mule is the easiest animal to ride in the world. I always preferred to ride one during the war. In a picture representing the burning of Atlanta the artist has me seated on a fiery steed, with fury in his eye, etc., while the houses are burning and the soldiers are tearing up the railroad iron. Well, I was there; but I was straddled on a plain, common, everyday mule.'" But of course it would ruin a historical picture to put a great general on a mule instead of a fiery charger.—Cincinnati Porcupine.

Religious Dogs.

The famous St. Bernard dogs are very carefully trained. A traveler who visited some of the monasteries of the monks of St. Bernard a few years ago found the monks teaching their dogs from the earliest stages of puppyhood. Not only is physical and mental training included in the teaching, but spiritual culture is by no means neglected. At meal time the dogs sit in a row, each with a tin dish before him containing his repast. Grace is said by one of the monks; the dogs sit motionless with bowed heads. Not one stirs until the "Amen" is spoken. If a frisky puppy partakes of his meal before grace is over an older dog growls and gently tugs his ear.—New York Ledger.

"Chipman's Liver Pills

the best in the world. Never gripe or make you sick. They are purely vegetable, and will sure cure your bilious trouble. All who use them speak well of them. Sold by all druggists."

Value of Good Clothes.

I once heard a gentleman tell this story: "I believed that clothes never made the man," said he, "until I started out in life for myself. I was rather indifferent then regarding my attire—in fact, I think it might have been deemed shabby. Well what was the consequence? Every hotel that I went to made me pay in advance if I stayed but a single night. I noticed then that others with better clothes than mine were treated with greater confidence. I took the hint and braced up, and, would you believe it, I could remain at a strange hotel for three and four weeks after that and never be presented with a bill?"

It is easier to slake the thirst of a bottomless barrel than to get along without Brussels soap.

It is so Understood, Etc.

It is understood that Gen. Banks will not seek a renomination to Congress this fall, whether he is put on the army retired list or not. But Gen. Banks should go on this latter. He is an old man, has been a faithful public official in both a civic and military sense, and the great American Republic can richly afford to deal generously with him.—Cambridge Press.

Imposing.

It is doubtless true that the carriages containing the crippled veterans will add inordinately to the length of the Grand Army procession, but there will be nobody in the line who will better deserve to be there than they. The scars of battle are even more honorable than epaulettes, and they will be apt to elicit quite as many plaudits.—Boston Herald.

A mystery of New York is a "Norwegian, a thorough cook and housekeeper, with the best of references as to character and ability, now out of employment," who has been advertising for a situation for nearly a year. Sometimes she receives as many as one hundred letters a day. Several decoy letters have been sent to her address by newspaper men desirous of penetrating the mystery, but they have been unsuccessful.

A regular industry is being started in this country in the manufactuae of gearing for electric railways out of raw hide. It is preferred to metal, as it makes far less noise and wears better. The material is said to finish up in the working as well as metal. The use of this material indicates that very severe strains are brought to bear upon cogs not capable, if of metal, of standing the stress.

William Malcolm, who died at Syracuse, N. Y., on Saturday, is said to have carried with him to the grave a scientific secret of inestimable. He could make lenses that did not require adjustment for varying distances, but, like the human eye, could sweep any field at one focus. His secret was known only by himself.

THE LOST AND FOUND.

LESSON IV, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 27.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xv, 1-10—Commit Verses, 4-7—Golden Text, Luke xv, 10—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "Then drew near unto Him all the publicans and sinners for to hear Him." Whatever else these might have to forsake in order to be His disciples, they would not have to renounce that which is perhaps the hardest of all to lay aside—religiousness, or self righteousness—for they did not profess to have any. They were despised by the holy people of the day. The Kingdom was not for them.

2. "And the Pharisees and scribes murmured, saying, This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them." They said a grand true thing when they said "This man receiveth sinners." He said Himself, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance" (Luke v, 32). And Paul, by the Spirit, rings it out as "A faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners" (I Tim. i, 15).

3. "And He spake this parable unto them." The whole chapter is one parable in three parts, showing the love of the Good Shepherd, the Spirit and the Father, in searching for and welcoming back the lost one. The lesson today brings before us the first two parts of the parable, the third part being reserved for next week. Both in creation and in redemption the Father, Son and Spirit are seen working for the welfare of the creature. "In the beginning God created." "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God. * * * All things were made by Him." "By the Word of the Lord were the heavens made and all the host of them by the breath (spirit) of His mouth." "And God said, Let us make man in our image" (Gen. i, 1; John i, 1, 3; Ps. xxxiii, 6; Gen. i, 26). So also in redemption. "God so loved that He gave His only begotten Son." "The Son of God loved me and gave Himself for me." "Through the Eternal Spirit He offered Himself without spot to God" (John iii, 16; Gal. ii, 20; Heb. ix, 14). And, stranger still, both Father, Son and Spirit come to make their abode in the heart of the true penitent who has turned to God (John xiv, 17, 23).

4. "Go after that which is lost until He find it." First we have the Son as the Good Shepherd seeking the sheep which is lost. The same illustration is found in Matt. xviii, 11-14, in connection with His saying, "The Son of Man is come to save that which was lost." The sinner is brought before us as a lost and helpless soul, unable to do anything to restore himself; not knowing the way back, and even if he knew it he is without strength to get there.

5. "And when He hath found it, He layeth it on His shoulders, rejoicing." Out in the desert He heard its cry; sick and helpless, and ready to die; and the cry of the helpless reached his heart. He said to Moses, "I have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry * * * ; for I know their sorrows" (Ex. iii, 7). "In all their affliction He was afflicted, and the angel of His presence saved them; in His love and in His pity He redeemed them; and He bare them and carried them all the days of old." "And of Benjamin He said, * * * he shall dwell between His shoulders" (Isa. lxiii, 9; Deut. xxxiii, 12).

6. "And when He cometh Home." Thank God for this, that, having found the sheep which was lost, He bringeth it home. He does not lose any by the way. Of those whom the Father gives to Him He loses none. He says, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish; neither shall any pluck them out of my hand" (John x, 28).

"Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep which was lost." Not only is his own heart glad, but he will have his friends and neighbors to rejoice with him because the lost is found. Jesus would have His people to rejoice with Him, for he says, "These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full."

7. "I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth." If a shepherd is so glad over the recovery of a lost sheep that he causes his neighbors to rejoice with him, "How much is a man better than a sheep?" (Matt. xii, 12). And how much is the finding and bringing home of a lost soul better than the finding and bringing home of a lost sheep. But here is a revelation of the unseen by one who has been there and knows all about it; joy in heaven, and why? Because a sinner has repented.

8. "Either what woman having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one piece, doth not light a candle, and sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it." In the sheep there might be a consciousness of its being lost, but a piece of metal has no feeling and is not conscious of anything. It may be that we are thus reminded of the soul that is "dead in sins" (Eph. ii, 5), and requires the convicting power of the Spirit (John xvi, 8). The woman with her light is the active agent in this case, and, as in the former, she seeks till she finds. Israel, as a nation, is compared to a woman (Isa. liv, 1, 5; lxii, 11, etc.)

9. "Rejoice with me; for I have found the piece which I had lost." Again, as in the former case, are friends and neighbors called upon to rejoice. All who have the Spirit of God ought to rejoice in the work of the Spirit wherever that work is manifest; and if we were filled with the Spirit what a going forth there would be after lost ones and backsliders. If friends and neighbors rejoice in the restoration of a piece of silver to its owner, the piece of money being the peculiar property of its owner, how much more should Christians rejoice in the conversion of every soul, wherever on the face of the whole earth that soul may be saved, because every redeemed one becomes a member of that body of which all the redeemed form a part, and of which Christ is the head (Eph. iv, 15, 16). And every member added to the body (although in His book all the members were written, when as yet there was none of them, Ps. cxxxix, 16) just hastens so much the manifest completion of the body, the marriage of the Lamb, and the coming of the Kingdom. Then shall be the true home bringing and the fullness of joy of all the redeemed.

10. "Likewise, I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." Not only there shall be (as in verse 7), but there is joy in Heaven over one penitent sinner. If we saw only one soul saved as the result of a day's teaching or preaching, we might not feel very much encouraged; but when we remember that every repentant soul, young or old, small or great, causes joy in Heaven, it ought to make us rejoice, too, with great joy. Think of Jesus patiently and diligently seeking the soul of Nicodemus, and just as patiently and diligently the soul of the poor sinful woman of Samaria, and let us be encouraged to more diligent personal effort. When praying once with a repentant one, upon whose mind the memory of a mother's prayers was doing effective work, I said to him as we rose from prayer: "Now it may be that the angels have already told your mother about this transaction." The joy that filled that man's heart at the very thought of the possible joy of his mother in Heaven made the words of this verse seem very real to me.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. H. L. Flanders & Co., Druggists.

Besides supplying the wants of its own population, France exports to Germany, Belgium, Holland, Denmark and Sweden large quantities of salted and smoked geese for winter consumption.

The evils resulting from habitual costiveness are many and serious; but the use of harsh, drastic purgatives is quite as dangerous. In Ayer's Pills, however, the patient has a mild but effective aperient, superior to all others, especially for family use.

THE OLD ACTOR.

He plays the parts we watched him play of old
With supple and vibrant voice, with healthful frame;
But all his glory of skill has now grown cold
And tame.

The people are kind; their strenuous welcome cheers,
Yet rings as if 'twere echoing, loud or low,
The hardier plaudits that were given him years Ago.

His art of yore, both real and regnant than,
Courts now mere vacant mummery; and at whiles
Mirth wages fight with melancholy * * * ac where He smiles.

Or yet so tired he seems by claims that task
Those powers of portraiture, once firm and high.
Pathos but half screens humor, like a mask
Worn awry.

Helping the Injured in London.

Mr. J. C. Cole, husband of the famous contralto, was some time ago trying to break a colt to harness. The colt took fright and ran away, and Mr. Cole was thrown from the buckboard wagon, breaking a leg just above the ankle. He was picked up and sent home in a passing carriage. That evening seven men called at the Cole mansion and demanded money for the services they had rendered in carrying the injured man across the street to the carriage! One creature was willing to take tu'pence for his services; he had picked up Mr. Cole's hat. Another man wanted three ha'pence for having called the carriage. All these fellows said they wouldn't have volunteered their services if they hadn't expected to be paid therefor. This is a fair illustration of the spirit that obtains in London, and I am told it prevails throughout England.—Eugene Field's Letter in Chicago News.

Justice Waiting Outside.

Dr. Tanner tells a story on a circus follower whom he met on his travels in the past. The "grafter" in question was arrested for stealing a silver watch from a canvasman, and was duly tried before a justice of the peace and acquitted. When the crowd had gone the magistrate saw the former prisoner still sitting furtively watching the door.

"Ah, my good man," said he, "the law has found you to be innocent. Why don't you go?"

"Go! go!" gasped the "grafter." "With that big strong arm guy that I swiped the watch from laying for me outside? I guess not; I'll stay here as long as he does."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Toads as Sharpshooters.

The toad is the best marksman I ever saw shoot, and very rarely misses his mark. He has a tongue more than twice as long as his body. This he can shoot out like a dart or lance, and on its sharp point he impales his game. I have frequently attached a fly by means of mucilage to the end of a stick and brought it within seven or eight inches of the nose of one of my toads. He would wink one of his large eyes, take aim, and in a second the fly was impaled on the point of his tongue. —Macon Telegraph.

Butter Made from Minerals.

A mineral oil, or rather butter, has been introduced as a lubricator by the Compagnie Francaise de Graisses Minerales Consistantes. It is stated to be free from acid, resin or drying oils, and does not alter with exposure to the air. Its melting point is 84 degs. Ci (183 degs. Fahrenheit), and it does not inflame at a lower temperature than 220 degs. C. While it resembles butter in color it is odorless and has no chemical action on metals.—English Mechanic.

New Use of the Spectroscope.

It is proposed to use the spectroscope to determine whether cesspools, stables, etc., drain into neighboring wells. A solution of carbonate or chloride of lithium is poured into the suspected sources of pollution in the neighborhood, and after a week or so the well water is examined spectroscopically for lithium, which can thus be detected even if the water holds in solution less than one pint in a million.—New York Telegram.

Worth gives as much thought to one of his wonderful gowns as a poet would to a poem. His best creations are born at some quiet French or German spa, and the detail wrought out in his Paris house. He has a fine residence on the Rue de la Paix, where he can be seen only by the initiated. His constant companions at home are two little black dogs that are always at his heels.

The improvement of coffins has long been a favorite field for ingenuity. The latest idea is to have the name plate in the form of a scroll. At the top the scroll turns into a hollow cylinder with a cap which can be unscrewed. This cylinder is intended for the preservation of any record which may be inclosed in it at the time of burial.

Saginaw, Mich., has a family which lives in a shed 12 by 16 feet in area. The family consists of father, mother, three children, three horses, two cows, two goats, six dogs, a flock of pigeons and six cages of singing birds. A bale of hay separates the so called brute portion of the family from the rest.

Any book of poems which has the word "tyrant" in it cannot pass the Russian frontier. The czar thinks it a direct hit at him. An English book was lately tabooed because it had the sentence, "God's free air." All the air in Russia belongs to royalty.

Hold It To The Light.

The man who tells you confidentially just what will cure your cold is prescribing Kemp's Balsam this year. In the preparation of this remarkable medicine for coughs and colds no expense is spared to combine only the best and purest ingredients. Hold a bottle of Kemp's Balsam to the light and look through it; notice the bright, clear look; then compare with other remedies. Price 50c. and $1.

A Kiss for a Blow.

"I took one of your pretty young ladies for a drive on Wednesday," said a traveling man at the Windsor. "The dust was blowing a cloud and covered us up completely. I noticed that her nose was twitching and that her eyes were full of dust, and she nervously felt in her pocket, but seemed not to find what she was after. After a while she sneezed a little birdie sneeze and said: 'Montague (that's me), will you kindly loan me your handkerchief? I find that I have lost mine in some stupid way.' Now I had just arrived from a week's trip, so my laundry was in a frightful state of decomposition and the one handkerchief that I had in my inside pocket was like a printer's towel—it would stand alone on one corner—so I blushed and told her I had lost mine. Things were getting rather serious for want of a kerchief, and she said, 'Dear me, I want to blow my nose awfully.'

"I bashfully informed her that perhaps I could offer a substitute, and she looked at me expectantly.

"'What?' she said

"'A—a—kiss,' said I, desperately.

"'Sir! Take me home this instant.'

"I meekly turned my horse around. 'I was only offering to fulfil a biblical injunction, Miss Rapphyno.'

"She looked at me relentlessly and coldly said:

"'How so?'

"'A kiss for a blow,' I said, meaningly, trying to smile. She blossomed out again in a minute.

"'I guess we needn't go home,' she said."—Denver News.

"Hurrah!"

What was the origin of the exclamation "hurrah?" There are few words still in use which can boast such a remote and widely extended prevalence as this. It is one of those interjections in which sound so echoes sense that men seem to have adopted it almost instinctively. In India and Ceylon the mahouts and attendants of baggage elephants cheer them along by a perpetual repetition of "Hur-re-re! Hur-re-re!" The Arabs and camel drivers in Turkey, Palestine and Egypt encourage their animals to speed by shouting "Arre, ar-re!"

The Moors in Spain drive their mules and horses with cries of "Arre!" In France the sportsman excites his hounds by his shouts of "Har-re, har-re!" The herdsmen of Ireland and Scotland shout "Hurrish! Hurrish!" to the stock they are driving. It is evidently an exclamation common to many nations, and is probably a corruption of "Turaie" (Thor aid), a battle cry of the ancient Norsemen, who called upon Thor, the god of thunder, to aid them in their strifes.—St. Louis Republic.

Forests of Europe and Africa.

"Since I have made my map," said Explorer Henry Stanley in an address to the Royal Geographical society, "I have taken the trouble to measure the extent of the area covered by this forest, and I find it to be something like 224,000,000 acres; and if we allow each tree thirty feet around for sufficient space, and only forty-eight trees to the acre, we have the colossal figure of 10,752,000,000 as the total number, and if we calculate the plants and saplings of the impenetrable undergrowth we shall be among the incalculable billions."

The forests of Europe, according to a recent report of one of the state foresters of Prussia, cover the following areas: Germany, 34,596,000 acres; Russia, 494,228,600 acres; Austria-Hungary, 46,951,700 acres; Sweden, 42,000,000 acres; France, 22,240,000 acres; Spain, 19,769,000 acres; Italy, 9,884,570 acres, and England, 2,471,000 acres.

Men Like to Give.

"Much obliged. Yes; don't care if I do," responded the close fisted man of our set as I asked him to help on a new wing to the orphan asylum where my wife was a directress. As I turned the corner I whipped the book out of my overcoat pocket, and stuck it under the nose of the most benevolent man in our crowd. "Well, well," he gasped. "I wouldn't have asked him, though. I should have expected to get a slap in the face, and I would rather have paid the $1,000 he has put down out of my own pocket than to have risked insult in asking him."

"Yes, and that is your constant mistake," I rejoined. "That is how you have earned your name for generosity. You give rather than ask. But I assure you that other men like to be asked. Men are better than they seem."—New York Weekly.

Look Out for Cheese.

A Virginia artillery company has been using cheeses in target practice, and it was shown that one of the cheeses fired against an earthen breastwork penetrated two feet further than a solid iron ball. They carry at point blank range farther than shot or shell. Look out for cheese rinds in the next war.—Detroit Free Press.

The cars on the Jungfrau railway have movable flaps, which may be expanded by the guard until they nearly touch the tunnel lining. In this way the car becomes a kind of piston, acting in the tunnel as a cyclinder, and the air acts as an automatic brake to check the speed of the descending car.

One of Ex-Senator Jones' Stories.

Ex-Senator Jones, when he first came to Detroit, was noted as an excellent story teller. Many citizens will recall one he told on several occasions. It was during a congressional campaign and he was "stumping" Florida. Arriving at a small town about noon he started out after dinner for a walk about the village, on the outskirts of which he came upon a building thronged with people. Upon inquiry he learned that the building was a church and that a wedding was about to take place. He edged his way through the crowd until he reached a spot where he had a good view of the bride and groom and the clergyman who was to perform the ceremony. The church was packed with the exception of a low, dark gallery near the roof. This was apparently deserted.

The minister proceeded with the ceremony until he came to the point where the custom then in vogue in that neighborhood required him to pause and inquire if there was any one present who knew any reason why the couple should not be made husband and wife. A hush fell upon the assemblage, and everybody waited in breathless suspense. Something of a sensation was caused when a voice came from the upper gallery, saying:

"Yes, I have."

All eyes were turned to the loft, where, seated all alone in the gloom, was barely discernible a meek looking little man, with a haggard face and dishevelled hair.

After the clergyman had recovered from his surprise he said, sternly: "State your reason, sir."

The suspense was turned to merriment by the man's reply:

"I want the gal myself," he said.—Detroit Free Press.

The Immensity of Space.

For a long period astronomers unsuccessfully endeavored to determine the distance between the stars and the earth, and it is only within a comparatively short time that the interesting problem can be said to have been solved. The distance which separates us from the nearest star is, according to Professor Nichols, about 206,000 times greater than the distance from the earth to the sun, or 95,000,000 of miles multiplied by 206,000.

Alpha, in the constellation of the Centaur, is the star nearest the earth; its light occupies three whole years in traversing the distance which separates us from the little blinking orb; or, in other words, should Alpha be blotted out of existence today we would be well into the summer of 1893 before the inhabitants of this mundane sphere would be aware that Alpha no longer existed. Yet light travels so rapidly as to occupy no perceptible space of time in flashing around our globe.

If the sun were transported to the place occupied by this, the nearest star, the vast circular disk, which in morning rises majestically above the horizon and in evening occupies a considerable time in descending entirely below the same line, would have dimensions puny in their insignificance. Colossal as the sun appears to us it would, were it possible for it to exchange positions with Alpha, take the Lick telescope to make it appear as a star of the third magnitude.—St. Louis Republic.

Ate Spools of Thread.

The great charm of a fox terrier is that you never can tell what he is going to do next. It is always the unexpected, you may be sure. A person uptown owns one that a short time ago suddenly took an unaccountable liking for spools of thread as an article of diet. He would swallow them whole, and his digestion did not seem to be impaired in the least by it. Upon one occasion the thread had become partially unwound before the spool was swallowed, and when the dog was discovered an end was hanging out of his mouth. His owner took hold of the end, and had no difficulty in reeling the thread out, leaving the dog only the empty spool. The operation was not followed by any disastrous results, but the terrier looked as if he had been cheated of something, and did not wag his stumpy tail vigorously for some time. —New York Tribune.

The Artists' Profits.

Of pictures by Meissonier the "Recit du Siege de Berg-of-Zoom," in the Secretan sale, which fetched 20,100 francs, is exactly the size of a five-franc silver piece, that is to say, smaller than one of our silver dollars. The picture is sometimes known among collectors as "La Piece de Cent Sous," and it is told of it that Meissonier painted it originally for M. de Chevigne at the rate of 100 francs an hour, and did it in three hours. A profit of 19,800 francs on a single picture ought to satisfy any one, except, possibly, the artist, who does not profit by the advance.—Exchange.

A hatless and coatless stranger rushed into a Tacoma store and asked if they could cash a $40 check for a man who has an office in the same building upstairs. Being told that they could the stranger rushed upstairs and in a moment came down with the check, which was then cashed. When it was sent to the bank the next day the forgery was discovered. The swindler escaped.

CIGARS THAT WERE CIGARS.

He Knew What They Were Because He Raised and Made Them Himself.

He was the conductor of a milk train on the Erie railroad, and he sat on a can at luncheon hour smoking in a reminiscent mood.

"Did you ever roll a cigar?" he asked the brakeman.

"Can't say I did," answered that worthy, spearing a piece of corned beef from his dinner pail with a case knife.

"I have," said the conductor. "I had a farm up country, and a man says to me, 'Hank, here's a little terbacker seed. See what you can do with it. And when it sprouts look out how you weed it, because terbacker looks terribly like mullein.' So I planted the seed, and when the plants got high enough I transplanted most of 'em, and every night I'd go out and spade around and water the plants and pile on the fertilizer. I never saw anything grow the way them terbacker plants did. I told the feller that gave me the seed how the plants was growin', and he came over to get some sprouts. He looked at the plants rather queer, felt the leaves and says he, 'Hank, yer terbacker 'll make fine mullein stalks.' And blamed if I hadn't been diggin' and waterin' a whole mullein patch.

"Well, sir, he give me some more seed, and I raised that terbacker and cut it. There was a woman lived near me that used to work in a cigar factory, so I got her to show me how to roll cigars, and then I went to work. I reckon the first cigar I made had enough terbacker in it to make five, and when I lit it I braced my feet agin the mantelpiece and pulled till I thought I'd bust. I had to bore that cigar with a gimlet before it would go, but after a while I got the hang of rolling, and I'd make up a boxful at a time. I tell you they was men's cigars. I never see anything since like the strength of 'em. The way they'd burn, too, was a caution. The light would wind all around one of them cigars like a cowpath, and you never knew how much smoke you had left.

"I used to go out with a pocketful and give 'em away, but I never seed a feller try one but once. I was down at the station one Sunday afternoon. We was sittin' in a milk car smokin', and a young feller came along I knew. He had on a brand new suit, and he wouldn't sit down on a milk can for fear of a grease spot. I offered him one of my cigars, and he lit up. Just about the fifth puff that feller sat down on a milk can as slick as could be; didn't mind the grease at all, and when he finished half an inch blamed if he didn't throw that cigar away, forget all about his new clothes, and plump right down in a heap on the dirty floor, with a face on him as white as the milk in a can. Before that young feller went home we thought he'd throw up his feet."

"I tell you," said the conductor thoughtfully, "them cigars was hummers."

"Didn't the smoke smell bad?" inquired the brakeman with much interest.

The conductor knocked the ashes out of his pipe and waved the engineer to start up. "Well," he replied diplomatically, "I didn't mind it."—New York Tribune.

Infection in Chewing Gum.

The practice of chewing gum has become very widespread. It is not a very elegant habit, to many it is positively repulsive, and there are sources of danger, too, that should not be overlooked. A case in point was related to us a few days ago. Diphtheria broke out in a family in East Des Moines. After the child had recovered, the clothing and all the exposed articles fully disinfected, the parents, with the convalescent child, visited some relatives in the country. The indispensable chewing gum, like Satan, went also—in the mouth of the little child. Prompted by generosity it allowed its country cousins—two children—to chew the gum previously chewed by the visiting child. In three or four days, without any other known source of infection than the chewing gum, the two children were simultaneously stricken down with diphtheria in a most serious form.—Exchange.

The Average Man's Taste.

As a rule the ingenious woman is much admired and sought after by the opposite sex. The average man cannot stand a woman who will wear her dress buttoned in the back, a la Kate Greenaway. He may condescend to talk to a woman dressed like a guy, but he will never, never take her out. The average man may call a dress a gown and mistake satin for silk and silk for satin, but his ideas on woman's dress are far more significant than many people suppose. He dislikes anything approaching the masculine in woman's dress, and a cardinal point in his belief is that the bodice of a gown should be of some soft material—never a shirt front and never beaded.—New York Press.

Twenty Dollars for Smith's Name.

Henry Smith, a drummer from the flats of Jersey, wrote his name on one of the outside windows in the top of the Washington monument. Officer James B. Evans, who is stationed at the monument, promptly arrested him, and Mr. Smith forfeited $20 collateral when the case was called in the police court a few hours later.—Washington Star.

Their Future Secure.

He—No, but we can live on my love's father.—Chatter.

What is a cold in the head? Medical authorities say it is due to uneven clothing of the body, rapid cooling when in a perspiration, &c. The important point is, that a cold in the head is an inflamation of the lining membrane of the nose, which, when unchecked, is certain to produce a catarrhal condition—for catarrh is essentially a "cold" which nature is no longer able to "resolve" or throw off. Ely's Cream Balm has proved its superiority, and sufferers should resort to it before that common ailment becomes seated and ends in obstinate catarrh.

Woman's Column.

The "Glorious Fourth."

Sixteen States now have school suffrage for women. Kansas has municipal suffrage. Wyoming is the first State whose daughters are politically free. It is our hope that South Dakota will be the second. This year, for the first time, the Judiciary Committee of the U. S. House of Representatives has reported in favor of a sixteenth amendment enfranchising women.

As these results crown the labors of many years, it will be appropriate for the suffragists of the United States to hold meetings on the coming Fourth of July, for the double purpose of rejoicing over these victories and helping the Dakota campaign. Let such meetings be held on the Fourth wherever it is practicable, and at every meeting let a collection be taken up for Dakota. Hold literary exercises appropriate to the occasion, and secure good speakers and fine music. Let the women who believe in representative government enlist the men who also believe in it, and together let them make this a Fourth of July worth of a Republic.

The improved methods of fastening strings of Pianos, invented by us, is one of the most important improvements ever made, making the instrument more richly musical in tone, more durable, and less liable to get out of tune.

Both the Mason & Hamlin Organs and Pianos excel chiefly in that which is the chief excellence in any musical instrument, quality of tone. Other things, though important, are much less so than this. An instrument with unmusical tones cannot be good. Illustrated catalogues of new styles, introduced this season, sent free.

COURAGE.

Miss Comfort went boldly ahead, opened a first-class boarding house and made money.

"Men go on credit," said she, "and why shouldn't women? At the year's end, if I can't any more than pay expenses, I'll try something else."

But at the year's end there was a snug little balance in Miss Comfort's favor, so she took heart of grace, and continued in her business.

"Oh, it's you, is it?" said Miss Comfort Walker, as she perceived Ellen O'Brien, the washerwoman, in the basement hall.

"Yes, it's me, worse luck, Miss Comfort," whimpered poor Ellen.

"And what's the matter?"

"It's me bill up stairs, Miss Comfort—the boarder in the second story front, wid the gay, goold shirt studs an' the green and yellow stones in his sleeve buttons. Nine dallers and sivinty cents, Miss Comfort—six weeks' washing and ironing—and now, when I make bould to ax him would he be pleased to pay me, he tells me it isn't convanient. And when I tells him how sore I need money, he up and gets mad and says I shan't have it at all.

Miss Comfort stood listening, with knitted brow and troubled, black eyes.

"Have you got your bill with you, Ellen?" said she, after a moment's hesitation.

"Jimmy wrote it out, all nate and proper," faltered Ellen, producing a crumpled slip of blue paper from her pocket.

"Give it to me," said Miss Comfort Walker, "and come here this evening at 8 o'clock, and you shall have your money."

Ellen shook her head disconsolately.

"And thank you all the same, Miss Comfort, dear," said she, "but you can't no more't we can get blood from a stone."

"We'll see about that," said Miss Comfort.

She went slowly up stairs, with the little piece of paper in hand.

"It's a shame," said Miss Comfort.

Leotard Carlyon was Miss Comfort Walker's best boarder, with the single exception that up to the present moment, his twenty-five dollars a week had been in the future. Now, it so chanced that one reason for her reposing so much confidence in Mr. Leotard Carlyon, the new boarder, was that he was the nephew and heir apparent of Caleb Carlyon, the rich banker, from whom she rented her brown stone house, at the trifling consideration of $3000 per annum.

"He can't be a thorough-going imposter," said she to herself, "with such a relation as that."

So she went bravely up to Mr. Carlyon's room and tapped at the door.

"Come in," he called out. "Oh it's you, Miss Walker, is it?"

Miss Comfort advanced valiantly with the bill in her hand to where Leotard Carlyon reclined languidly amid a heap of sofa pillows, with a newspaper in his hand.

"Don't you think you could settle this little account, Mr. Carlyon?" she said. "The poor woman needs it very much."

Leotard Carlyon's handsome black brows darkened.

"She has been to you with her story, has she?" snarled he. "No, I can't settle it! And I wouldn't if I could. It's worth more than the money to me to be so badgered and beset. Have the goodness, Miss Walker, for the future to remember that I am able to attend to these little affairs for myself, without any extraneous interference."

"That means that I am to attend to my own business," thought our little housekeeper, as she retreated, coloring and rather indignant. "Well, I will, for I consider it my duty to obtain redress for the unfortunate."

So Miss Comfort tied on a little brown velvet hat she had trimmed with scarlet poppies and brown autumn leaves and set out bravely for the Mount Orient bank.

The clerks stared at her a little curiously as she was shown into the president's room at the back, where Mr. Carlyon sat, straight and upright, with blue eyes like a falcon and hair slightly sprinkled with gray.

He elevated his brows at sight of Miss Comfort Walker.

"I believe your rent is not due for a month yet, Miss Walker," he said, with the cold courtesy which always made her feel as if he were encased in an armor of ice.

"No," said the little lady, courageously; "but it's about your nephew, Mr. Leotard Carlyon," and she told the story of Ellen O'Brien and her wrongs.

"He ought to pay the money," said Miss Comfort, excitedly. "He must be made to pay the money."

"May I ask, Miss Walker, why you interest yourself so markedly in this affair?" the banker asked with a cold, measured calm, that contrasted strangely with the little woman's heat and flurry.

"Another way of telling me to mind my own business," said Miss Comfort to herself. But she kept up a bold front and answered:—

"Because I think no man has a right to cheat a poor woman out of her hard earned money."

"Cheat is a strong word, Miss Walker," observed her landlord.

"It's the only correct word in this case, Mr. Carlyon," retorted Miss Comfort, secretly marvelling at her own courage in thus daring to confront the stately banker.

"Perhaps he is owing something to yourself?" questioned the banker keenly.

"Yes, sir; he is," Miss Comfort made answer. "But it isn't that I came about. I am quite able to attend to my own financial debts, even to lose a little if it should be necessary, but this poor woman is friendless and alone."

Mr. Carlyon glanced at his watch. Miss Comfort turned toward the door.

"I'm very sorry that my time is no longer at my own disposal," said he, courteously.

And Miss Comfort went away almost crying.

"Now I've made an enemy of him, as well as Mr. Leotard, and haven't done the least bit of good," she thought. "And he will let the house to some one else in the spring, and—and—but, after all, I am not sorry that I did my best. Poor, poor Ellen! What shall I say to her when she comes at 8 o'clock?"

But that evening, just as Miss Comfort was beginning at her pile of account books, a ring came to the door, and Miss Comfort rose up, confused and fluttering.

"Miss Walker, prav don't let me disturb you," said the banker. "I have only dropped in for a little social call. You showed yourself to me today in a different light from any in which you have yet appeared."

"A dun!" demanded poor Miss Comfort, almost hysterically.

"No—a true-hearted, noble-natured woman! But you need no longer distress yourself. The bill is paid. And now, if you are at leisure, I'll just take my evening cup of tea with you."

How pleased and proud Miss Comfort was, as she poured the decoction of fragrant young hyson into her great-grandmother's cup, decorated with butterflies and oblong scrolls of gilt and violet. And how she kept wondering all the while how Carlyon, the great banker, could take such an interest in her homely, humdrum little affairs.

But if she had only known it, Mr. Carlyon seldom came across a true, real heart in his complicated business transactions.

"It's not true," said Mr. Leotard. "My uncle would never make such a fool of himself at his age. Why, he's fifty if he's a day."

"Only forty-four," said Mrs. Leigh Creswick, with malicious delight. "But, of course, it must be a great mortification to you, Mr. Leotard, who have always been looked upon as his heir. And to think too, he is going to marry that queer little old woman who keeps the boarding house. For it's true! As true as taxes! I saw the wedding ring myself at ——'s."

Leotard Carlyon gnawed silent at his mustache. How strangely little circumstances are woven together in life's web, he thought. If he had paid that whining washerwoman's bill, she would not have confided her woes to Miss Comfort Walker; and Miss Comfort Walker would not have gone to his uncle; and his uncle wouldn't have fallen in love with Miss Comfort's rosy cheeks and bonnet neither; and he would have still been the rich banker's heir apparent.

He wished he had paid the washerwoman's bill.

The Vampire Bat.

A great many Mulhatton yarns have been told by travelers about the "terrible bloodsucking vampires." The reader of South American travel is always treated to a dish of this kind of stuff, which, if half were facts, would make a fellow's hair stand on end to think of being compelled to sleep in open air in any part of northern South America. The facts seem to be that there is a species of bat, phyllostoma spectrum, inhabiting the Central American republics and South America as far south as the yakada, which if pressed for food will fasten itself on animals and the exposed parts of the human body for the purpose of sucking blood.

That sleeping persons are not awakened by the bat, and that the incisions through which the blood is drawn readily heal, should be taken as proof positive that the vampire bat stories, like the human vampire stories of Hungary, are but fabrications of diseased imaginations. The little vampire is an insect eater, perfectly harmless, and not at all feared by the natives of the region which it infests.

A recent traveler (Clarke, 1888) says: "I have slept out in the open air in the Xingu country in all kinds of weather: have seen hundreds, yes, thousands, of vampire bats, but have always found them perfectly harmless, as much so as the native black bat of Pennsylvania and York state."—St. Louis Republic.

Government.

There are occasional gleams of humor even in the most serious articles which newspapers ever publish. A recent one one on "The Business Outlook" contained the following paragraph:

"Thanks to the administration's want of foresight the dry weather of the past season has become exceedingly menacing to the agricultural interest."

The journal does not explain how the government could have prevented a drought in a portion of the country, or a wet season in another. Perhaps it thinks that the government ought to have some influence with its own barometer.

This criticism brings to mind the not unfamiliar criticism of a western farmer in a season of heavy rains.

"Rain, rain, rain!" said the farmer. "An' this is what we get for electin' old Bill Flood governor last fall!"—Youth's Companion.

Diseased Pork.

Many persons who never venture to eat pork on account of its alleged unwholesomeness will not deny themselves the use of bacon and ham under the belief that when cured the much abused flesh of the pig is purified of all its noxious qualities. They can now, unfortunately, no longer maintain this position, for recent investigation has shown that salting or pickling seems to have little, if any, destructive effect upon the common forms of bacilli which are found in diseased meat. Experiment showed that such meat, after being in pickle for two months, exhibited multitudes of these living germs of disease. The experiments have been carried out with care, but it is not stated whether or not meat which has been subjected to the operation of smoking as well as pickling is freed from its disease provoking germs.—New York Telegram.

Remarkable Rescue.

Mrs. Michael Curtain, Plainfield, Ill., makes the statement that she caught cold, which settled on her lungs; she was treated for a month by her family physician, but grew worse. He told her she was a hopeless victim of consumption and that no medicine could cure her. Her druggist suggested Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption; she bought a bottle and to her delight found herself benefited from first dose. She continued its use and after taking ten bottles, found herself sound and well, now does her own housework and is as well as she ever was. Free trial bottles of this Great Discovery at H. L. Flanders & Co.'s Drug Store, large bottles 50c. and $1.00.

"Hurrah!"

What was the origin of the exclamation "hurrah?" There are few words still in use which can boast such a remote and widely extended prevalence as this. It is one of those interjections in which sound so echoes sense that men seem to have adopted it almost instinctively. In India and Ceylon the mahouts and attendants of baggage elephants cheer them along by a perpetual repetition of "Hur-re-re! Hurre-re!" The Arabs and camel drivers in Turkey, Palestine and Egypt encourage their animals to speed by shouting "Ar-re, ar-re!"

The Moors in Spain drive their mules and horses with cries of "Arre!" In France the sportsman excites his hounds by his shouts of "Har-re, har-re!" The herdsmen of Ireland and Scotland shout "Hurrish! Hurrish!" to the stock they are driving. It is evidently an exclamation common to many nations, and is probably a corruption of "Turaie" (Thor aid), a battle cry of the ancient Norsemen, who called upon Thor, the god of thunder, to aid them in their strifes.—St. Louis Republic.

Food Value of Fresh Fruit.

We do not attach to fresh fruit the food value it actually bears; for instance, bananas. A keen social analyst has said that the habits and obligations of civilized life are purely a question of geography, and the uses of food are so absolutely. In that wonderful record of perils and triumphs, "In Darkest Africa," Stanley cites among his chief resources against starvation bananas, plantains and a large variety of pineapple. From days too painfully near starvation, when two bananas daily was all the food he could allow himself, to that time of plenty when the foragers brought in four tons, the sole nutriment was bananas and plantains—"with what cries of joy these wild children of nature flung themselves upon the fruit and kindled fires to roast and boil and bake." If the reader would know the possibilities of this admirable fruit let her try thick slices dipped in butter, salt and pepper and broiled, or breaded and fried, or baked, or made into fritters. Even boiled plain they are as good in their way as boiled tomatoes.

Ask Your Friends About It.

Your distressing cough can be cured. We know it because Kemp's Balsam within the past few years has cured so many coughs and colds in this community. Its remarkable sale has been won entirely by its genuine merit. Ask some friend who has used it what he thinks of Kemp's Balsam. There is no medicine so pure, none so effective. Large bottles 50c. and $1.00 at all druggists. Sample bottle free.

The Old Creeds and the New.

An unecclesiastical and broad minded clergyman whom we will call Smith was walking down Broadway in company with a friend whom we will call Jones. Pretty soon they met an acquaintance of Jones, who presented his clerical companion in these words: "Let me introduce you to my friend, the Rev. Mr. Smith, who as you may infer, makes divinity his specialty." "Pardon me for making a correction," said Mr. Smith laughing, "but if I make a specialty of anything it is humanity rather than divinity." This answer shows the very marked line of cleavage between the old and the new school of clergymen. The former thought so much of the attributes of God that they had little time to think of man; while the latter pay so much attention to man that they have little room in their system for abstract speculations about God.

Why Is It Popular.

Because it has proven its absolute merit over and over again, because it has an unequalled record of cures, because its business is conducted in a thoroughly honest manner, and because it combines economy and strength, being the only medicine of which "100 Doses One Dollar" is true—these strong points have made Hood's Sarsaparilla the most successful medicine of the day.

It is rather significant that the English should send the Grenadiers to Bermuda just now. They seem extremely anxious to get that garrison strengthened. But Uncle Sam does not seem over curious about this increase of troops in his immediate vicinity.

Forests of Europe and Africa.

"Since I have made my map," said Explorer Henry Stanley in an address to the Royal Geographical society, "I have taken the trouble to measure the extent of the area covered by this forest and I find it to be something like 224,000,000 acres; and if we allow each tree thirty feet around for sufficient space, and only forty-eight trees to the acre, we have the colossal figure of 10,752,000,000 as the total number, and if we calculate the plants and saplings of the impenetrable undergrowth we shall be among the incalculable billions."

The forests of Europe, according to a recent report of one of the state foresters of Prussia, cover the following areas; Germany, 34,593,000 acres; Russia, 494,228,600 acres; Austria-Hungary, 46,951,700 acres; Sweden, 42,000,000 acres; France, 22,240,000 acres; Spain, 19,769,000 acres; Italy, 9,884,570 acres, and England, 2,471,000 acres.

Men Like to Give.

"Much obliged. Yes; don't care if I do," responded the close fisted man of our set as I asked him to help on a new wing to the orphan asylum where my wife was a directress. As I turned the corner I whipped the book out of my overcoat pocket, and stuck it under the nose of the most benevolent man in our crowd. "Well, well," he gasped. "I wouldn't have asked him, though. I should have expected to get a slap in the face, and I would rather have paid the $1,000 he has put down out of my own pocket than to have risked insulting him."

"Yes, and that is your constant mistake," I rejoined. "That is how you have earned your name for generosity. You give rather than ask. But I assure you that other men like to be asked. Men are better than they seem."—New York Weekly.

The vicissitudes of climate are trying to most constitutions, especially to people having impure blood. For all such (and they constitute the majority), the best safeguard is Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the use of which cleanses the blood and strengthens and invigorates the system.

INK BAGS.

"The Cuttle Fish has a kind of gland, called the ink bag, from which, when pursued, it throws out a brownish black liquor that darkens the water, enabling it to escape observation."—Webster's Dictionary.

Just so do the Alum and Ammonia Baking Powder manufacturers, who have for years been palming off on the unsuspecting housewife their adulterated powder as "absolutely pure." As soon as the fraud which they practice is shown up by the baking powder "testers," their ink bag opens and out comes the dirty liquor of falsehood and misrepresentation in the form of reading notices in the newspapers under such headings as: "Trying to Defraud Housekeepers," "Sneak Thieves in Disguise," "Overshooting the Mark," etc., in the hope that their adulterations and fraud will thereby escape observation.

Since the public have learned that these nasty ejections from the baking powder cuttle fish are not editorials, but advertisements, paid for by the wincing Baking Powder Co., they understand how a Company willing to resort to such methods has the hardihood to distort and falsify even Government Reports.

The Cleveland Baking Powder Co. makes an article so pure and wholesome that it is willing to have the composition known, and therefore prints it on every can, and fears no test that can be made.

The Woburn Journal

FRIDAY, AUGUST 1, 1890.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

All Advertisements, to insure insertion in this paper, must be handed in as early as 10 o'clock on Thursday forenoon.

OUR GROWTH.

The figures which we reproduce in another column of the JOURNAL from a computation made by Chief Wadlin of the Bureau of Statistics and Labor respecting the population of this city and its growth during the last 10 years cannot but prove to be in the highest degree gratifying to those who care anything about the prosperity of the place. The increase of the number of inhabitants was as surprising as pleasing to most people for the conviction was quite general that, by reason of causes which could not be controlled the report of the census-takers would be anything but a flattering one or one that we should be likely to feel much pride in.

The figures are very encouraging. They show that our city is making splendid progress in the right direction—it is growing in population, and additional ones will of course show that it is growing in business and wealth. This with a handsome reduction in the rate of taxation ought to give Woburn a boom this year.

There is everything to encourage the business men of Woburn to cordially join hands and work for its future prosperity. If our citizens will unite as one man to keep home business at home and not bestow so much of their patronage on Boston; if they will join together to advance the interests of home industries; if they will put their shoulders to the wheel and increase their efforts to secure a greater variety of them; if they will only give "a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together," when the next State census is taken, in 1895, it will be found that this city has distanced all competitors in its growth of population, business, and wealth.

THE LAWRENCE TORNADO.

At about 10 o'clock last Saturday forenoon a very destructive tornado struck South Lawrence and No. Andover, 15 miles northeast of this city, and in both localities did a great deal of damage. Some six or eight lives were lost and 30 or 40 people were more or less injured, many of them seriously. A large number of buildings, among them the Catholic church, were unroofed, shattered, or totally destroyed in South Lawrence and some at No. Andover, and the loss of property, on which there was no tornado insurance, was very great.

In the locality visited were the homes of many factory operatives, on which class the loss in death, personal injury and property principally falls. They were neat, nice residences, generally the abode of peace and plenty, but in a moment scores of them were swept away before the irresistible force of the cyclone.

The tornado, which was accompanied by a powerful rain and terrific thunder and lightning, lasted only a few seconds, but in its march from near the So. Lawrence station of the Boston & Maine Railroad, due east, to No. Andover, almost every obstacle encountered was torn to pieces and levelled to the ground.

It was estimated that from 40,000 to 50,000 people visited the scene of the cyclone on Sunday.

OF COURSE.

The renomination of State Auditor Ladd by the Republicans is not only a foregone conclusion but is very desirable from any standpoint. Efficiency and honesty in a public official are very desirable.—Boston Journal.

Not to nominate Auditor Ladd, one of the most efficient and faithful of all the Commonwealth's officers, would be a great mistake.

But then, nobody contemplates such a thing, and any other kind of talk is idle.

IN HONOR OF THE OCCASION.

Very wisely and patriotically, we think, the city government have ordered that Municipal Building, the seat of said government, shall be closed on August 12 in honor of the great National G. A. R. parade which is to take place in Boston that day.

It was due to the two Posts in this city that such action should be taken.

REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION.

The State Committee held a meeting last week and made arrangements for the Republican State Convention, Wednesday, Sept. 17, was fixed upon as the date for holding it, and Tremont Temple, Boston, as the place.

☞ The Boston Evening Traveller is nothing if not enterprising. It is always wideawake for news and never fails "to get there" on time and in the best of shape. Last Saturday afternoon in gathering up and giving to the public the news of the great tornado at Lawrence the Traveller distanced all competitors. It was the first to have an account of the affair in print and on the streets; it had the fullest and most reliable report of it; and it demonstrated to a dot that when it comes to getting right up and doing things—doing them quicker and better than anybody else—the Traveller is the genuine "Old Reliable" every day in the week, Sundays excepted. Besides all which the Boston Evening Traveller is one of the livest and best dailies published in New England.

☞ Complaints against the U. S. Census Bureau on the score of poor work are well nigh universal. Nobody anywhere appears to be satisfied with the count. An Englishman is at the head of the Bureau, which may or may not have something to do with it.

But Woburn is not grumbling much.

☞ The Suburban Press Association will hold their next meeting and banquet at the Crawford House in Boston on Saturday, Aug. 16. Several distinguished gentlemen are expected to address the craft on that occasion.

— City Treasurer John C. Buck, with his family and company of friends, has returned from a visit to Lake Winnepiseogee, a favorite N. H. resort of many Woburn people.

— Mr. Jacob M. Ellis has taken a large contract for railroad grading in Vermont. The work to be done is not far from St. Johnsbury and involves the expenditure of many thousands of dollars.

— The City Assessors are getting so they can see the end of their job for 1890. It is a big one to list the property in this city, make the assesments, and put it all on the books for the Collector.

— Mr. E. J. Gregory, auctioneer and dealer in real estate, advertises his business in the JOURNAL this week. He also carries on the insurance and represents some firstclass companies. Read his card.

— Milton, Mass., has been the abiding place for the last fortnight of Miss Mary Moore of Union street. She is visiting her friend Miss Nellie Kenney, now of that place but formerly a resident of Woburn.

— A finely executed photograph of Major William W. Wade of this city adorns the exhibition board of one of Boston's largest photographic establishments on Tremont street. It is an excellent likeness.

— If any linguist in this city has a desire to try his luck on a few jaw breaking names let him tackle the "list of unclaimed letters" in this paper. If that don't floor him he'll do to travel in foreign parts.

— Mrs. Sophia Stevens of Jersey City, N. J., daughter of the late Samuel B. Tidd of this place, died at her home last week Thursday, July 24. She had numerous relatives and many old friends in this city.

— Mr. E. L. Shaw and family are at Jackson, N. H., for their summer recuperation. The place is away up among the mountains, cool and salubrious, and has always been a favorite resort for Woburn people.

— Peter McGoff of this city has received 1144 votes for the Globe's 1000-dollar sword, and Commander James L. Pinkham of Post 161 has received 518. Scattering votes have been cast for other Vets.

— Mrs. Frederic Flint celebrated the 80th anniversary of her birthday yesterday. She is well and as bright and active as person 15 years younger. May she celebrate many more birthday anniversaries.

— Mr. Herbert Richardson of Erie, Penna., and family have returned here from the beaches and are stopping at the pleasant residence of Mr. Chandler Parker on Canal street. Mr. Richardson was formerly a "Woburn Boy."

— Mr. Alexander Grant will leave to-morrow for Pictou, N. S., his native town, where he will remain a fortnight or so. He will go from Boston to Halifax, N. S., per steamer Halifax, thence to Pictou by rail. Mr. Grant makes it a practice to visit his mother, who is now 83 years old, at the old homestead, every summer.

— Hundreds of people went from this city last Sunday to view the ruins left by the great Lawrence tornado last Saturday morning. Many modes of conveyances were resorted to and the city was left pretty bare of inhabitants.

— Mr. Lewis White, of the Lyceum Building tonsorial parlors, has secured the services of a first class hair-cutter and shaver. He ranks at the head of the profession. Particular attention paid to the cutting of ladies' and children's hair.

— No clew to the Goddard burglary last week has yet been struck. They made a good haul of gold and silver goods, including a fine gold watch, solid silver table ware, jewelry, etc. and it is very doubtful if any of it is ever recovered.

— Mrs. S. T. Converse and daughter of Sherman Place in this city are at their favorite resort again this summer, namely, West Compton, N. H. Both ladies think there is no place like West Compton for genuine summer rest and pleasure.

— Mr. Postmaster Reade has succeeded in getting a morning mail for Woburn direct from New York without stopping at Boston. Allow brother Reade time enough and he will give this city a mail service that we may well feel proud of.

— Col. A. L. Richardson has gone into it too. Just as soon as the fad struck him he went off and bought a camera and at the rate he is going on a whole picture gallery will be the swift reward of his picture-taking talents and industry.

— These are good nights for burglars to operate in. Windows in sleeping apartments are generally left open, to take advantage of which thieves are not generally slow. Look out for open windows if unpleasant visits from burglars would be avoided.

— Mr. Waldo Thompson, of the Thompson hardware establishment, wife and Miss Winnie DeLoriea have returned from a visit to Nantucket which, they unite in declaring, is the very best place in the world at which to pass the heated term.

— Mr. Water Register A. P. Barrett will please accept the JOURNAL's thanks for "comps" to the dramatic entertainment to be given by the St. Charles Minstrels for the benefit of G. A. R. Post 33 in Lyceum Hall on next Monday evening, August 4.

— Mr. F. H. Nourse of Winchester is a prominent real estate dealer and auctioneer in Boston and Winchester and does a great deal of business in his line elsewhere in this part of the State. He is considered one of the fairest and most reliable men in the business.

— Moses P. Brown of East Boston, Governor of the United Order of Pilgrim Fathers, has appointed Mr. George W. Nichols of 396 Main street, this city, Deputy Governor. A new Colony is now forming for full particulars of which apply to Mr. Nichols.

— Notwithstanding the rain Auctioneer Gregory made a capital sale of the Descheneaux place at Allenville last Saturday. It was valued for taxation $1,000, but Gregory, working the business up in energetic style, sold it for $1185. Everybody said it was a fine sale.

— Gems of art in Mirrors, Cheval Glasses, Cabinets, Antique Desks, Corner and Reception Chairs, and unique pieces of lovely furniture dazzle and almost bewilder the visitor in his first visit to the spacious warerooms of Paine's Furniture Co., 48 Canal street, Boston.

— Dog days began on July 25 and it was a remarkable fact that the weather was in perfect keeping with the almanac. We felt that day the first touch of dog days weather for the summer, and people remarked how unusual it was to have date and temperature so closely agree.

— The wedding of Dr. Winn of Winchester and Miss Mary Reade of this city will take place in St. Charles Church next Tuesday evening to be followed by a reception in Music Hall. The elite of this and neighboring cities will be present and witness the ceremonies and participate in the reception.

— Mr. John Duncan, Superintendent of the Boston Clothing Company's store, will probably take a 4 days trip with the De Molay Commandery of Knights Templars, Somerville through the Old Granite State. They expect to have a big time and Knights seldom fail in their calculations in respect of such matters.

— Mr. Francis A. Buckman and family, and Mr. E. G. Clough and family left for Marblehead Neck day before yesterday where they will remain for a few weeks. Mr. Alvah Buckman and wife will go down next week, when he hopes to be fully recovered from the attack of illness he had last week.

— Our esteemed friend, Mr. Marshall Tidd of No. Woburn, and wife started yesterday for a trip through Southern New Hampshire, and will be gone two or three weeks. Mr. and Mrs. Tidd are getting to be quite tourists and it would not surprise us to hear that they had embarked for a European trip.

— The street cars on both routes from here are well patronized every day from 5 to 10 o'clock p. m. A trip to Medford Square, or Malden, or any of the wayplaces, in the cool of the evening, is just as delightful as anything can possibly be. A great many people understand this and govern themselves accordingly every evening.

— The grocers of this city have concluded not to observe "Grocers Day" in the usual form this year, but to join in with the general G. A. R. celebration on Aug. 12, and let it go at that. They do not want two holidays in August and the 12th they are in duty bound to observe in honor of the National G. A. R. encampment in Boston.

— The long and severe drouth broke all to pieces last Friday whereat the earth and vegetation greatly rejoiced. Not a drop of rain fell during the whole haying season and the crop was never secured in better condition in the world. Just as soon as the haying was well through with the rain came in great abundance and the potato crop will be from fair to middling.

— The JOURNAL Book and Job office is complete in all its appointments and has the reputation of turning out as fine work and as much of it as any printing establishment in Middlesex county. It is fully supplied with presses, all the latest styles of type, stock and men to use them, and gentlemen, your work is respectfully solicited. —tf.

— Alderman S. B. Goddard returned from Jackson, N. H., last Tuesday evening where he left Mrs. Goddard and her sister Miss Frost, who are enjoying the cool mountain air of that favorite summer resort very much. They will remain there a fortnight or so longer, during which time Mr. Goddard will probably revisit the scene of his last week's pleasures.

— Captain William C. Parker of the Woburn Mechanic Phalanx (Co. G, 5th Regt. M. V. M.), with Mr. C. E. Osgood of Somerville, went down to Providence, R. I., last Monday evening and on Tuesday accepted an invitation from a crack yachting club there to take a cruise and a big yachting dinner, both of which were highly enjoyed by Capt. Parker and Mr. Osgood.

— We are indebted to Messrs. B. B. Brown & Co., No. 10 Faneuil Hall Square, Boston, per Mr. B. B. Brown of this city, senior member of the firm, for a bottle af Worcestershire Sauce, and another of Pepper Relish, the latter put up by B. B. B. personally. For which evidence of good will Brown & Co. and Mr. Brown will please accept the JOURNAL's best thanks.

— Assessors Col. Grammer, Ferguson and Prior did the handsome thing by the JOURNAL last week in furnishing important information respecting the tax rate this year. The figures were what the tax-payers desired to see, realizing which fact the accommodating Assessors here mentioned kindly furnished them on request, for which they will please accept the JOURNAL's thanks.

— On next Monday evening, Aug. 4, the St. Charles Minstrels will give a concert at Lyceum Hall for the benefit of Post 33, G. A. R., to which the price of tickets has been fixed at 35 cents. This combination has given a good many fine musical entertainments in this city. It is composed of firstrate talent and a most excellent performance may be expected from them next Monday evening.

— Mrs. Elizabeth McDonald, proprietor of Hotel Windsor in this city, started last Wednesday evening for New York city where she intended to remain a day or so and then to take one of the floating palaces on the Hudson and voyage up that romantic and delightful river to Albany, thence proceed on to Saratoga and such other resorts as may be calculated to gratify her fancy for travel and sight-seeing. Her trip will include a visit to the White Mountains of course.

— After an illness of several months Alderman Michael Golden died at his home at Montvale last Tuesday of Bright's disease. He had been Superintendent of the B. & L. freight yards in Boston for many years; was formerly a member of the Woburn Board of Selectmen; has represented Ward 5 in the Board of Aldermen ever since the incorporation of the city, and was esteemed an honest, upright man and good citizen. He left a wife and several children to mourn his death.

— Bristol, N. H., is getting to be a famous resort for Boston and suburban people. The JOURNAL has recorded the arrival there of numerous representatives of Woburn's best society. Last week Mrs. Marcellus Littlefield (wife of the accomplished reporter of the Boston Herald), Mrs. John Ferguson (wife of the Commodore who is at the head of the Almshouse Committee), and her daughter Mabel, went up to that choice country retreat for a good time and at last accounts they were having it.

— Assessor John Ferguson, whose official station requires him to make and keep notes of the same, says almost anybody would be surprised to go over this city and ascertain how many buildings have been erected during the past year. There have been so many of them that their aggregate value more than offsets the loss on personal property chiefly occasioned by the inactivity in the factories of James Skinner & Co., Eustice Cummings & Co., Bryant & King, and others.

— Thomas Beatty, the well known athlete of this city, was one of the participants in the sports at the Lynn Lasters Union picnic, held at Lake Walden last Monday, and made quite an addition to an already enviable record in the line of athletic sports. He took first prize in the standing and three long jumps and was defeated in one heat in the 135 yard handicap of 48 entries where he received a start of only 5 1-4 yards ahead of Mills and Bowen, two of America's best sprinters.

— The following are the officers (elected last Monday evening) of the Woburn Mutual Benefit Assseciation, an insurance Order recently established here: President, John G. Maguire; Vice President, Elmore A. Pierce; Clerk, Charles K. Conn; Treasurer, Lawrence Reade; Directors, John I. Munroe, James L. Pinkham, Isaac A. Howe, Edward J. Gregory, Myron B. Field, George W. Nichols, Elliot L. Packard, Elmore A. Pierce, Lawrence Reade. Bylaws were adopted and an application made for a charter.

— Mr. B. F. Kimball of No. Woburn received a letter from Rev. Charles Anderson, formerly pastor of the No. Woburn Congregational Church but for the last two years a professor in Robert College, Constantinople, Turkey, of which his brother-in-law, Mr. Washburn, is President and his father-in-law, Rev. Dr. Hamlin, was the founder, which contained the gratifying intelligence that Pastor Anderson and his family were all well and enjoying life as fully as they could expect to do so far away from their native sod. President Washburn has been in America nearly a year during which period Prof. Anderson has had the principal charge of the College, for the proper discharge of the duties of which position he is abundantly able. There are many people in Woburn who would like to see Rev. and Mrs. Anderson again.

— From present appearances the auction sale of real estate on Academy Hill tomorrow afternoon by Auctioneer Prior will be largely attended by men of means who are after the most desirable residence property in this city. The JOURNAL, by error, stated that the lot lies between Capt. Crane's and the estate of J. H. Cummings; it should have said, between Capt. Crane's and the new house of Mr. Wilbur Cummings, for there is where it is. Mr. Skelton's advertisement conveys full information respecting the property and the reader is referred to the same. There can be doubt at all but that somebody will get a big bargain in the lot, for it is going to be sold anyhow.

— Last Tuesday Mr. Waterman Brown, historian of the Boston & Lowell Railroad, and its faithful employee from the beginning of it to the present time, submitted for our inspection "An Act" passed by the General Court of Massachusetts, April 14, 1852, to discontinue the old Middlesex canal and dissolve the Company owning it, which was incorporated by an Act of said General Court passed June 22, 1793. The document is endorsed "House—No. 182," and is the printed report of the Committee on Railways and Canals issued, as is the custom, for the use of the members. The act was passed and the old Middlesex canal corporation went out of existence on April 14, 1852, and the canal itself gradually followed.

— The fish dealers of Woburn believe in the home market principle, and are petitioning the home government to put a heavy tariff (license) on the out of town peddlers who come there to dispose of their raw material (fish). These fish dealers have nothing to say about the Woburnites who go into the neighboring cities and towns to traffic. However, the principle of spending your money among your own merchants, as far forth as you can, is a good one and to be commended.—Lynn Bee. Aye; when the business is brought right home to our individual pockets we are all good protective tariff people. Every mother's son of us believes in looking out for No. One first, and that is the bedrock idea of a National protective tariff.

— Capt. Frank Wellock, of Boston pilot-boat No. 2, and wife came over from their home at East Boston a few afternoons ago and recuperated and strengthened themselves on a lot of good, substantial country fodder found at the residence of the JOURNAL folks on Church Avenue. Capt. Wellock is one of the oldest Boston pilots in point of service, although by far from being the oldest in years, and if there is anything connected with getting in and out of Boston Harbor, or with anything a good distance beyond it, that he don't known all about then it must be something that isn't laid down in the charts or contained in nautical works. He has been all over it a thousand times and staid there all night too. They were accompanied by Miss Emma Busell of 21 Chelsea St., East Boston.

— Mr. John Cummings 2nd, the popular Cummingsville grocer, laid a sample of English gooseberries on the Editorial table last Wednesday which were worthy of more than a passing notice. On an average the individual berries were about the size of walnuts, of a very dark color, extremely juicy, and about as sweet as honey—sweeter than hand-made honey or city manufactured maple sugar. The English gooseberry was introduced here only a couple or three years ago, but it has earned a right, by its prolific yield, size, and excellent quality, to the protection of the American Flag and exercise of American suffrage. Neighbor Cummings sets up the claim (in a mild sort of a way, to be sure) that nobody else in Woburn has the knack of making these gooseberries grow so large and sweet as he does!

— The young man or woman who expects to get ahead in the world at the present day without being a rapid writer, quick at figures, and practical accountant, will find it exceedingly difficult to enter into competition with those who have had special training in these departments. The Burdett Business College whose announcement appears on page 3 fits young people in three months and upwards to all positions as accountants, cashiers, stenographers and typewriters. The many young people in this city who have been assisted to good situations by the Principals, who are Woburn residents, together with the general commendation of its methods of individual instruction by our Supt. of Schools, High School Principal, and others, is double assurance that any promises made by its Principals will be more than fulfilled.

— Last Wednesday was a date of accidents in this city. A few minutes past 1 o'clock, P. M., Peter McKenna, a painter in the employ of Mr. William Leeman of this city, fell from the gable window of the Fifield building on Fowle street a distance of 40 feet and died in 20 minutes after. In seeking to gain the swing staging on which the painters stood to do their work it is supposed that McKenna made a misstep when he got out of the window to gain a place on the staging, and his foot slipping, he was precipitated to the ground below. Near the ground he struck a projecting timber and received internal injuries from which he died without recovering consciousness. He worked for Mr. Leeman last year and was in his employ again this season. He was about 47 years old and left a wife and three children at Lowell. Undertaker Reade took charge of the remains.

— At 6.45 on last Wednesday evening, John Doherty, who lives at the Sand Banks in Winchester, just over the Woburn line, was run over at the Main street crossing of the B. & L. Railroad in this city and very seriously, if not fatally, injured. He was walking South on the track between the Church Ave. and Main street crossings and when at the latter point a switch engine that hauls back into the yards a part of the 6.42 train struck and knocked him insensible. The engineer stopped the engine at once and proceeded to investigate the accident. Doherty lay unconscious near the track with his left arm cut off just below the shoulder and one foot badly crushed. A crowd soon surrounded the terribly injured man and in a few moments Dr. Harry Blake responded to a summons and took him in charge. Policemen Mulkeen and Kean were speedily on the spot and succeeded in dispersing the crowd that the unfortunate man might get a chance to breath if any life was left in him. After temporarily attending to his wounds Dr. Blake ordered Doherty to be sent to the Massachusetts General Hospital, and he was put into the baggage car of the 7.08 train and taken there. The women of Station Agent Green's household noticed Doherty go down the track towards Main street and expressed a fear that he would meet with just the accident he did, as the engine and car was but a short distance away. The danger whistle and bell were employed and the engineer and fireman yelled with all their might to warn Doherty off the track, but he appeared to take no notice of the warnings. No blame can be attributed to the engineer, fireman or other train hands for they employed in vain every means in their power to save the unfortunate man. At last accounts Doherty was alive.

Woburn's Population.

A SPLENDID SHOWING.

Contrary to the expectations of almost everybody this city has made a handsome increase of population during the last 10 years, and especially since the State census of 1885. There seemed to be good grounds for the general fear that Woburn contained a smaller population on the 1st of June, 1890, than on the same day, 1885, therefore an increase of such magnitude as the figures show was a great surprise. A very gratifying feature of the returns is that which shows that the increase of population from 1885 to 1890 was more than double of that from 1880 to 1885, because it demonstrates that the city is now growing, and growing more rapidly than ever before.

During the last five years the leather makers have experienced their hardest times. There has been but little money in the business, and expenses, including working forces, have been cut down to a minimum. In that period many labor-saving inventions have been introduced into the factories, the tendency of which has been to reduce the number of men employed; while severe and prolonged labor troubles have driven tanners and curriers from our home establishments to similar ones in other leather making localities in flocks. These and other potent causes have led some of our people to doubt if the place had grown any in the last five years, not a few claiming that if we had held our own as to population during that period we had done remarkably well, while others were to be found who were free to express the belief that there had been considerable of a shrinkage from the figures of 1885.

In percent of growth few towns or cities in Eastern Massachusetts can make as favorable a report as Woburn shows by the census of 1890. The footings, kindly furnished the JOURNAL by Hon. Horace G. Wadlin, Chief of the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics and Labor, are not only a surprise but one of a most encouraging and gratifying character. Despite the many adverse things and strong head winds and currents it has had to contend with our city has been growing right along, is now growing—growing faster than ever before, and with more rapidity than any other town or city in Middlesex county, with here and there an exception.

The population of Woburn on June 1, 1890, was 13,440.

Here are the figures for the decade:

10,931.	11,750.	13,440.

Gain from 1880 to 1885, 819: from 1885 to 1890, 1690: from 1880 to 1890, 2,509.

Woburn was incorporated in 1642. The first Colonial census was taken 1765; the 2d in 1776. The first United States census was taken in 1790 and has been taken every 10 years since. The first State census was taken in 1855. The following shows the population of Woburn from the first official enumeration to the present year:

1776——1691
1790——1727	(U. S.)
1800——1228
1810——1219
1820——1519
1830——1977
1840——2993
1850——3956
1855——5448	(State)
1860——6287	(U. S.)
1865——6999	(State)
1870——8560	(U. S.)
1875——9568	(State)
1880——10931	(U. S.)
1885——11750	(State)
1890——13440	(U. S.)

Instances of considerable decrease are accounted for by the incorporation of parts of Woburn into other towns, as Burlington and Winchester.

BY THE GENERAL SECRETARY.

We invite any man who wishes to come to our prayer service at 8 o'clock Saturday evening.

Sunday at 4 o'clock we are to hear a man who was a skeptic but is now a believer and we desire that any man who is skeptical shall be present in Concert Hall.

August 10, we propose to hold at 4 o'clock a Mass Meeting. We invite all. We are expecting help from the neighboring cities and intend to make it one of the best mass meetings ever given. Remember August 10, 4 o'clock.

One more word about North Lubec. If you are in want of a place and do not know where to go we entreat you to go there. Why? not because we shall have the benefit of it, but because you will. The Hotel is ready and if any are going they should send in their names at once. Get membership passes from the General Secretary so as to secure the benefit of reduced rates. Fare, $4, round trips; $1 for passes; Hotel rates from $1 per day to $1.50 according to room; which makes round trips only $12 one week, including fare, $19 for two weeks.

The question often arises: What is the extent of the Y. M. C. A.? We give the following facts:

In United States and Canada,	1,341
In Colleges,	305
Railroad branches,	82
German branches,	10
Colored men,	36
Indian,	11
	1,785

Value of property owned by Association, including libraries and furniture, $10,433,-647.

In addition there is pledged towards building, $1,500,000.

Expended for local current expenses last year, $1,654,750.

Expenses for International and State work $162,000.

Secretary and assistants engaged in the work, 1,095.

And this has been accomplished since 1844, or the last 45 years, for it was then that a young clerk in the city of London, Mr. George Williams, brought to light the Young Men's Christian Association for the first time.

In these days of societies for reforming everybody and almost everything it is really a relief to have some one realize that there is such a thing as perfecting one's self independent of any society. It is therefore with genuine pleasure that we call our readers' attention to the advertisement headed "Self Improvement" on our local page this week.

Waterman Brown's Bear.

At divers and sundry times we have been asked to publish the following letter written by once one of the leading citizens of Woburn, now deceased, but it has only been within a few days past that we have been able to procure it from Mr. Brown. By those who knew Mr. Hart when alive, and now know Mr. Brown, the letter will be read with interest.

WOBURN, MASS., Dec. 22d, 1869.

My Dear Brown:

I have great pleasure in saying that while on a recent visit to your good city of Nashua I found myself pleasantly convened with a few of your old and well tried friends. Your early history, so full of stirring events, the pure habits of your maturer life, your cultured and refined tastes, and the general proclivities of your character formed a topic of brief discussion. It was decided that, among your many prominent and happy characteristics, that perhaps you excelled as an eminent Zoologist. Desiring to crown the discussion with some tangible token of our appreciation of your proficiency in this interesting department of science, as well as to add to your already large collection of Zoological specimens, we have, through a committee, purchased a Black Bear, the most perfect of his kind, which we desire you to accept from your strictly personal friends. The animal has been under the care and tuition of Prof. La Montagne for two years and is proficient in all the elements of education ever taught the species.

The committee deserve congratulation in having been able to effect the purchase at any cost, as her Majesty's agent has tendered the most liberal offers to secure the animal for Saint Regents Park, London.

Happy in having been permitted to participate in affording facilities to science as well as honoring an old friend, we remain Yours very truly,

D. D. HART and others.

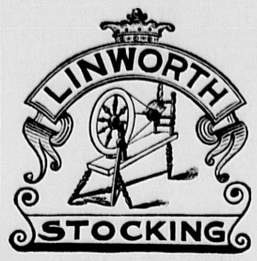
Lasts twice as long as cheap soap for laundry use—Brussels.

"Have you washed your feet?" You think this is a queer question to ask, but it is one that many Mammas have got in the habit of asking the boys and girls as "Have you washed your hands?"

And Why? Because it has been almost impossible to get Stockings that would'nt crock and fade.

But alas! for Pearline.

We have got a Line of Stock-



ings Worth much more than many so called "Fast Blacks," which will please the Mammas and the boys and girls as well, and not cost any more. Sizes to fit everybody from baby to grandmamma.

Pearline has its place but it will not have to be used to wash-out the stains left by the "LINWORTH."

C. Willard Smith

Cruelty to Dogs.

EDITOR WOBURN JOURNAL: In reading a late copy of the JOURNAL my eye fell upon the official notice of your city anent the "muzzling" and "restraining" of dogs during the midsummer months and as a native and old resident of Woburn I beg a bit of space in the columns of your paper to utter my protest against such an unjust and cruel edict as noted above.

I am surprised that the wise and sensible Mayor of Woburn (proven so in divers ways) should have given his official consent and seal to such an act, for he ought to know that to muzzle a dog, especially in hot weather, deprives him of the act and privilege of perspiring and of refreshing himself with water at will. The dog perspires only through, and at his mouth and to muzzle him is an act of absolute cruelty.

The dog is a very nervous animal and very sensitive to kind, or cruel treatment. The "mad dog" scare is a very groundless one and it is a wonder that otherwise sensible people can be found so utterly credulous and timid of such a rare trouble and disease as is rabies, or hydrophobia. It may exist but, as above stated, is so rare that in a life time a case may not be known. I state with authority that there have been only two cases in this State during the last eight years. Fear and tetanus (commonly called "lock-jaw") and bad blood cause the many cases of hydrophobia reported. I have been bitten often by my own and strange dogs and the only effect has been a scar.

There are few dogs so wicked as to injure any one; the fault in most cases is with the man, woman or child and not the dog. If a dog is tormented, worried, insulted or anywise ill treated he naturally retaliates but he has not hydrophobia. The dog is a noble, faithful animal, and if he is otherwise he is made so by man—infinitely more brutal than he is.

"The more I see of men the better I love dogs" and I hope the dog owners of Woburn will keep their dogs muzzled, or restrained, as kindly and lightly as possible and that soon a more enlightened feeling may prevail as to their bruteness.

"O, let us yet be merciful!"

A Modern Promised Land.

[Correspondence of the Boston Times.]

JERUSALEM SPRING HOUSE,
CANAAN, N. H., July 18, 1890.

If, in the much told "once upon a time" fable the beautiful nymph of the water were to unite her charms with those of the gallant sprite of the wood and in the enjoyment of fairy bliss were each to contribute a share to embellish a home of pleasure and enjoyment, it has often been wondered where this spot would be. Many places have claimed this distinction, but the fact that others are constantly coming to the front shows conclusively that the much-looked-for capital of sylphland is as yet a myth of the imagination.

The ideal place is unquestionably that where Nature in all her loveliness reigns supreme, and where Art is present only to make it habitable for man. A place where one may feel that he is of the world and yet not in it. Such is the idea which prevails by those whom fortune has favored with a visit to the Jerusalem Spring house at Canaan, N. H. Here the natural beauties of scenery, woodland, brooks, mountains, drives, walks, and the health-giving qualities of pure spring water, are combined in a fascinating mosaic; and they are made still further enjoyable by the hospitable air of the hotel and its easy accessibility by the surrounding world.

Woburn is just now very well represented on the hotel register of the Jerusalem Spring house, for among the arrivals here from that city last week were Mr. and Mrs. S. Franksford Trull, Mr. Elliott F. Trull, Miss Bertha P. Trull, Master Clifford Trull and nurse, Mrs. Deborah G. Trull, Mr. and Mrs. H. Eustis Smith, Miss Susan Edgell, Miss Evelyn Trull, Mr. W. Fred Bosworth, Miss Hattie Bosworth, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Trull, Mr. John T. Trull, and Miss Josephine S. Hinckley.

Mine Host Taft is one in a thousand, and with his good wife is ever on the alert for the comfort of his guests.

Naval Officer Frank D. Currier and his wife are frequent visitors here.

A number of Boston people have already secured rooms for August which is one of the pleasantest months here.

If you don't know where to get pleasing quiet, delightful outdoor surroundings, charming indoor hospitality, for an outing over Sunday, for a week, a month, or the summer, this house can be recommended from the heart of experience.

A Visit to Lake Tahoe.

Leaving the Central Pacific at Truckee, 208 miles east of San Francisco, we reach the Lake by a stage ride of 14 miles along the Truckee River, and grand and beautiful scenery along the base of high rocks and picturesque mountains the sides of which are covered with stately pines. In places where the walls recede from the stream are charming little nooks, meadows and valleys, and at almost every turn of the road and river new beauties present themselves to view. There are delightful surprises on every hand over every mile of the road from Truckee to Tahoe city, which town is situated at the outlet of the Lake.

Taking into consideration the surroundings there can hardly be a more beautiful Mountain Lake, lying as it does between the eastern and western summit ridges of the main ridge of the Sierra Nevada Mountains at an elevation of 6247 feet above the level of the sea. Its length is a little over 21 miles. Roughly, it has the form of a parallelogram, lying nearly north and south about one third in Nevada and the remainder in California, and having an area of 204 square miles. Its greatest depth is 1800 feet. It is shut in and surrounded on all sides by mountains that rise from 2000 to 5000 feet above its surface. The Lake evidently occupies an extinct volcano crater of great size. Soundings show in the bottom a deep channel or crevice which extends nearly the whole length of the Lake in a north and south direction. In this the depth is every where from 1500 to 1700 feet. The deepest spot, 1800 feet, is towards the south end of the lake, in front of Mount Tallac. The water is of great clearness and crystal pureness, and never freezes. The lake receives the waters of 51 creeks and brooks, the largest of which is the Upper Truckee which empties in at the south end, the only outlet is the Truckee River.

It is very difficult to swim in this lake on account of the great elevation and reduced atmospheric pressure on the water rendering the lake less buoyant than bodies of fresh water at a sea level. The Lake in some respects is treacherous and dangerous. It is subject to sudden heavy squalls; fierce gusts of wind at times rush down from the big canyons causing the water to boil with fury. These squalls are liable to capsize any boat and unless an experienced boatman be of the party, fatal results are almost sure to follow. The bodies of persons drowned in the Lake are never recovered unless very near the shore. The bodies of no less than 12 men are known to lie at the bottom of the Lake, and among them there came very near being that of your correspondent, occurring as follows:

On the afternoon before my departure from the Lake, in company with two fellow tourists, I went out for a farewell fishing trip. Taking a boat at the wharf in front of the Hotel, we rowed out about 1-4 of a mile towards the centre of the Lake, where after a half hour's skillful angling we succeeded in landing a dozen or more "speckled beauties" in the bottom of the boat. Being satisfied with these, we turned our boat homewards. I was seated on a box placed on the small platform in the extreme end of the boat, trolling my line along in water, leisurely puffing a cigar and enthusiastically "taking in" the magnificent surrounding scenery, when a 12 pound trout appropriated the hook and insisted on perambulating in the opposite direction. I at first opposed his wishes, when the boat making a sudden lurch I as suddenly changed my mind, likewise my position, and turning as graceful a somersault as the surrounding circumstances would permit I silently followed his troutship into the water as before stated. The water of this Lake is decidedly difficult to swim in, owing to its extreme dampness, and other scientific reasons too numerous to mention, and after a few spasmodic strokes, getting my mouth full of the previously described crystal pure water, I went down. When I next became acquainted with myself I was being rolled to and fro on the platform in front of the Hotel ostensibly for the purpose of reducing the water supply. "I told that d—d tenderfoot he would get killed if he didnt take better care of himself" in which I recognized the voice of a bluff old Californian lumberman who the day before had kindly volunteered this bit of wholesome advice. After passing a moment or two in silent meditation and pleasant reflection, I was assisted to my feet when I apologized to the fast assembling crowd for appearing in public in such a dilapitated condition and referred them "at my expense" to the Hotel Bar for further particulars.

Our eastern trip to Truckee was completed at 10 o'clock the next morning.

To the tourist in general, and New England people in particular, should you chance to pass over the Union Pacific Railroad in summer time, stop for a day at Truckee and visit this beautiful mountain Lake. You cannot afford to miss this opportunity.—7534.

Mrs. Caldwell and daughter of Reading, Pa., are guests of Mr. J. W. Taylor in this village. The former is 85 years old and was for a long time, many years ago, a resident of Woburn. She thinks it is good to get back to the old home.

Mr. Loring, of Loring & Avery, the extensive leather manufacturers of this place, has cut and housed 120 tons of hay this season from his farms. Not a drop of rain touched the hay, a finer crop of which or a larger one was never harvested in this section of country.

There is nothing that Mr. F. H. Nourse enjoys better than a lively Winchester town meeting—and who ever knew of a Winchester town meeting that was not lively? There was considerable fun at the one held the other day to see what the town would like to do about having a poor farm, or almshouse. There was some sharp sparring between some of the attendants, and if there had been more of it Mr. Nourse would have liked it better. He liked what there was of it—he liked it so well that he managed to have the subject postponed to the next town meeting so that he could get another instalment of Winchester sharp talk.

The following valuable information was obtained from reliable sources and will prove of interest: It is noticed in comparing last years Assessor's report with that of the present, a falling off in the number of poll-tax payers. A year ago there were 1260, while now according to the report there are but 1177, a falling off of 83 polls. The cause of this dropping off is not ascertained. Real estate valuation last year was $3,471,327, while now it is is $3,603,235, a gain of $131,908; personal estate last year $1,031,920, this year $1,063,820, a gain of $31,-900, or a grand total gain of $163,808. The amount to be raised by taxation the present year is $84,972.37, while for 1889 it was $79,087.40. From this it is clearly seen when the rate of taxation exceeded that of the previous year 70 cents on $1,000, notwithstanding that the town has increased.

Literary Notices.

The numbers of LITTELL'S LIVING AGE for July 26th and August 2d contain The Poetry of John Donne, Mute Witnesses of the Revolution, Charles the Twelfth: a Memoir, by the King of Sweden, The First General Election in Japan, My Islands, and Nero and St. Benedict, Early Days Recalled, The Sultan of Turkey, Wasted Solar Heat, Notes of a Pilgrimage, The Spring Habits of British Quadrupeds, and The Cliff Dwellers of Colorado, with instalments of Marcia, A Waltz of Chopin and The Empty Compartment, and poetry. For fifty-two numbers of sixty-four large pages each (or more than 3,300 pages a year) the subscription price ($8) is low.

The August number of THE ARENA exhibits the characteristic boldness and fearlessness that has made the great review so popular in the short space of nine months. Sterling ability, coupled with absolute freedom in the discussion of all great problems, is something novel in magazine literature; yet this has been a leading characteristic of THE ARENA since is incorporation. The present issue contains a remarkably interesting paper from Prof. N. S. Shaler of Harvard University, on The Economic Future of the New South, in which the great scientist notices at length the wonderful resources of the South, her natural advantages in soil, climate, and great mineral resources. This is followed by number of able papers among which may be mentioned Our Foreign Immigration, Hypnotism, etc., Domestic Infelicity of Literary Women, A Day In Court, An Inspired Advocate (Rufus Choate), The Shadow of the Noose, etc.

"Waltham Should Do the Same."

Woburn's City Council has directed that all city offices be closed August 12, in recognition of the G. A. R. encampment. Waltham should do the same. The day should be made a general holiday and the city can inaugurate the work of making it so by passing in order like that passed by Woburn. A portion of the day or evening should be devoted to a public recognition of our guests. Let our business men take hold at once of the matter of closing their stores on that day so that none may plead insufficient notice.—Waltham Free Press.

Electric Street Railroads.

The Lynn & Boston Railroad company has petitioned for the electric system in Peabody. This company, with its usual energy, is pushing the electric system in every direction, and the time is not far distant when the system will prevail on all the company's lines.—Lynn Bee.

Mr. Breed, President and principal owner of the Lynn & Boston, is President and principal owner of the North Woburn and of the East Middlesex lines, which means that the day is close at hand when the cars of both these roads will be run by electricity. Mr. Breed is rich, progressive and prompt to adopt modern improvements, therefore it is safe to conclude that electricity will be the moving power on both of these Woburn roads within, probably, the next year or so. It would add very materially to the passenger receipts of both corporations to change horseflesh for harnessed lightning.

Burlington.

Mr. Frederick Richardson of Stoneham was severely injured, Tuesday morning, while driving an ox-team loaded with hay from his land in Burlington. Near the house of Mr. John Winn he was trying to get off the team when the oxen started and the forward wheel ran over him, breaking one of his legs. He was carried to his home in Stoneham.

Typhoid fever often gets into a community and has a "run." Science says it is born within the human system, and that when the germ reaches the open air, perhaps through the pores of the skin, its touch is contamination. It is then very essential that clothing should be thoroughly washed, and this can best be done with Brussels soap, and then all typhoid and other germs become inert.

THE PRODIGAL SON.

LESSON V, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 3.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xv, 11-24—Commit Verses, 17-20—Golden Text, Luke xv, 18—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

11. "And he said, A certain man had two sons." This is the beginning of the third section of this parable, which is a continuation of the lesson of last week. The whole parable touches the great love of God, the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, for lost, and helpless, and erring humanity; and the sympathy of the angels with God in His joy over the salvation of the lost.

12. "And the younger of them said to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living." The sin is seen in the son's desire for the things of his father rather than for the father and his love. The desire also for independence of the father and separation from him indicates the ingratitude of his heart and his insensibility to the father's love and care.

13. "And not many days after, the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living." The first illustration of this rebellious nature in man is seen in Cain, who would not submit to the kind requirements of a loving God; but preferring his own way "went out from the presence of the Lord" (Gen. iv, 16) to do as he pleased. It is seen in Esau, who preferred a mess of pottage to his God given birthright (Gen. xxv, 32-34).

14. "And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want." When we turn away from God, who is the fountain of living waters, and seek to satisfy ourselves with aught else, even with the gifts of God, we are hewing out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water (Jer. ii, 13), and sooner or later we shall surely come to want.

15. "And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country; and he sent him into his fields to feed swine." The far country into which he went from his own father's house and plenty is all about us. It is this present evil world which lieth in the wicked one (Gal. i, 4; I John v, 19), and which allures us away from God. All who are unsaved are said to be "far off," and because of their sinful and unclean natures are compared to dogs and swine (Eph. ii, 13; II Pet. ii, 22).

16. "And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat; and no man gave unto him." First want then worldly helps, and now a beastly appetite.

17. "And when he came to himself, he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger!" He had been so full of self and self seeking that the Father's house had not been much in his thoughts, except perhaps as the recollection of a restraint which he could not submit to. But by having his desires granted he has been led to see somewhat of the leanness of his soul (Ps. cvi, 15). We read in I Cor. v, 5, of one being delivered unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. And in Job xxxiii, 14-30, we read of dreams, visions, sickness and afflictions as means used by God with men to bring back their souls from the pit, to be enlightened with the sight of the living.

18. "I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee." In the story of the lost sheep and lost piece of money we saw the seeking shepherd and woman with the light. The sheep and the money did nothing, the shepherd and woman did all. But here is a responsible human being who has gone astray like a lost sheep, and has been as insensible to his father's love as a piece of metal.

19. "And am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants." He was unworthy to be called the son of such a father when he had plenty and was living riotously, or even when he left that father's home, or when he demanded his share of the goods. But he did not know it, and could not, under those circumstances, be made to see it. The only way to humble him and bring him to his senses was the way he was allowed to take. Now he sees his sinfulness and unworthiness as he could not otherwise have been made to see it.

20. "And he arose and came to his father." All his conviction, and sense of unworthiness, and good resolutions, would have gone for nothing had he failed to take this step. He might have remained in the far country and died there full of conviction and good resolutions. But here is the saving point, "He arose and came." And now we shall see the result.

"But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him." Here is the Love of God which said to one poor sinner, "Thy sins are forgiven; thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace." And to another, "Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more," and which says to all, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out" (Luke vii, 48, 50; John viii, 11; vi, 37).

21. "And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son." This was not all he had intended to say (see verse 19), but it seems to have been as far as he got. It is a high honor to be a servant of God, but He makes us His children, children of God and joint heirs with Christ, when in true penitence we come to Him (John i, 12; Rom. viii, 17; John xv, 15). If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness (I John i, 9).

22. "But the father said to his servants, Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet." Think of Adam and Eve having lost their fellowship with God and hiding from Him because of their sin; and see God clothing them with coats of skins which He had made (Gen. iii, 21). See the robe of righteousness, and garments of salvation of Isa. lxi, 10; II Cor. v, 21.

23. "And bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat and be merry." If, in the previous verse, we have forgiveness of sins, and righteousness, and full restoration to position and inheritance and authority, here we have true fellowship and great joy. The foretaste is enjoyed here when He comes in to sup with us and we with him (Rev. iii, 20); but the full joy will be when we eat and drink with Him at His table in His kingdom (Luke xxii, 30). See in Mordecai's exaltation, apparel, adorning, and in the joy and gladness of the people, a foreshadowing of kingdom joys (Esth. viii, 15-17.)

24. "For this my son was dead, and is alive again: he was lost, and is found. And they began to be merry." For the third time in the parable He tells us of the joy over the lost when found. And again in verse 32. Surely that which gives such joy to Father, Son and Holy Spirit, should give great joy to every child of God. But is it not to be feared that the spirit of the elder brother might be still manifest if we should make much ado over the conversion of some poor publican or harlot? Let us pray to be filled with the Spirit of Him who receiveth sinners and eateth with them.

Happy Hoosiers.

Wm. Timmons, Postmaster of Idaville, Ind., writes: "Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feeling arising from Kidney and Liver trouble." John Leslie, farmer and stockman, of same place, says: "Find Electric Bitters to be the best Kidney and Liver medicine, made me feel like a new man." J. W. Gardner, hardware merchant, same town says: Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't care whether he lives or dies; he found new strength, good appetite and felt just like he had a new lease on life. WHERE CLOCKS ARE IN NEW YORK.

Cogent Reasons Why Women Shopping in New York Do Not Carry Watches.

Many women whom I know invariably leave their watches behind them when they go out shopping. I remonstrated with one of them the other day and got this answer and explanation:

"There is no need of my carrying a watch, which is a most inconvenient thing for a woman to carry, anyway. She can't put it in her pocket, for she'd never find it when she wanted it; if she buttons it in the front of her waist it is more getatable, but is still inconvenient. No one wears a watch in her waistband, and a chatelaine watch, or carrying your watch in a chatelaine bag, is a temptation to a thief. So I leave my watch at home and trust to the public clocks.

"Of course I see my hall clock when I go out. Then there are several clocks on the Grand Central; there is a clock in every elevated station; there is the church clock at Twenty-ninth street and Fifth avenue, besides Howard's electric clock. The Fifth Avenue hotel clock every one knows, and there is a clock in Twenty-third street near Sixth avenue. There are two clocks along Broadway south of Twenty-third street, a clock in Fourteenth street near Sixth avenue. Tiffany's clock is in Union square, and there are several clocks in all the big 'shopping stores,' generally near the elevators.

"There are a few clocks along the Bowery, and some along Sixth avenue, while down town there are plenty of them; the City Hall, The Tribune, The Times clocks, the Produce Exchange clock, and quite a number of less prominent but equally good timekeepers. So really what is the use of my carrying a watch that is either in my way or out of my way, and in both cases useless?"

After Dinner.

A lady who had become a member of a small club was horrified at receiving the announcement:

"April 2, dinner at 6. Toasts. You will reply for the gentlemen."

"Toasts!" cried she. "Why, I know nothing about toasts except what I learned in the kitchen. Make an after dinner speech! I could as well compose a symphony!"

She is not alone in her timidity. Many an accomplished orator has owned to the stage fright connected with "saying a few words" after dinner. There are still those who take comfort in Thackeray's delightful prophesy that "a day will arrive when we shall have the speeches done by a skilled waiter at a side table, as we now have the carving."

Still, a man's newe and ability can never be gauged by the amount of fright excited in him at the mere act of getting upon his feet. With many persons that one movement seems to break the ice of timidity, though even Mr. Lowell once assured an audience that "whenever he finds himself upon his legs he is tempted to yield to a natural impulse and take to his heels."

There are, however, those who find no difficulty in getting up, but seem to be totally unable to sit down again. The old advice in regard to the length of such speeches as they are likely to make is still the best which can be given them.

"If you haven't struck oil in less than five minutes you'd better stop boring."—Youth's Companion.

Stilton Cheese.

It is a part of the religion of every epicure that dinner without cheese is like a beautiful maiden with only one eye. An Englishman of national reputation has said: "I do verily think that in 1828 a Stilton cheese was a better fellow than he is in 1889," and the man ought to know, for he has eaten them for almost three-quarters of a century. Stilton is a quaint old village in the northwestern part of Huntingdonshire, in the west central part of England.

It has never been famous for anything but cheese. The Stilton that comes to this country is fairly good. It has been said that in the old days men put less milk in their cream and less water in their milk than at present, but it is only fair to admit that the crusty, brown old port that was taken with it made it seem better to those who ate it long ago. Stilton is the most expensive of the cheese brought to this country, and the sale for it is found altogether in the eastern states. —New York Tribune.

One of Ruskin's Jokes.

I met a very charming English girl who told me a most characteristic tale of John Ruskin. One of the classes at Girton had just completed Ruskin's "Stones of Venice," and to show their appreciation of the author's work wrote him a "round robin" thanking him for the pleasure this book had given them. In a short time each signer of the letter received a note from Mr. Ruskin telling her that her writing was a digraceful exhibition of girlish ignorance, and that she must write three verses from the Bible every day for a month and then send her manuscript to him. And the joke of it all, my young friend went on, was that the girls were geese enough to do it.—New York Star.

FUN OPENING SALES.

Some Incidents Showing How Troubles Arise from Little Causes.

"There are many amusing incidents connected with our business," said a safe manufacturer one day to a Boston reporter. "It is to be expected that in the ordinary course of events circumstances will arise when a safe will have to be opened by an expert. Locks, like any other piece of mechanism, are not infallible. The best of them are liable to fail at times through some slight defect in manufacturing, same as the mainspring of the most valuable watch may give out unexpectedly.

"Not long ago a firm wanted a man to fix their safe. It was open, but they could not shut the door far enough to throw the bolts. The man went to the place and after a brief examination saw a penny resting on one of the bottom flanges. Taking this off the door shut and locked all right. I forget how much it cost the firm to have the man go to their place and pick up that little coin, but it was enough to prevent its being repeated, no doubt. A similar case happened recently. We were sent for at about the close of business hours to see what was the trouble with one of our safes. The bolts would not throw far enough to turn the lock. The result was the finding of a cloth button from a lady's dress in the lower bolt hole.

"Some years ago we had delivered a new set of vault doors for a bank about two hundred miles away. Just before they were ready to occupy their new quarters we had a telegram to send a man at once. The bolts of the outer door would not throw far enough to lock it. Our man went, and this is what he found: The bank officers had fitted in a board for the tread of the vestibule, but had omitted to bore holes in it for the throw of the bolts. An auger and ten minutes' labor made everything all right, but made that piece of board a rather extravagant luxury.

"Epicurean like, we have reserved the best for the last. For fear that this may reach the eyes of the hero of the incident I will substitute for his correct address that of Calais, Me. It was not a thousand miles from there. The letter read to come at once and open a safe, as there were important documents wanted for immediate use. With his kit of tools a man took the next train and arrived on the following evening. It proved to be an old fashioned safe with a large key lock. 'There,' said the man, 'is the safe. The lock has been working harder and harder for weeks, until now I am locked out. I am in a hurry to have it opened. Never mind the damage if you will only break into it in short order.'

"Our expert took the key and tried it, but it refused to work. He then took a small wire and picked out half a thimbleful of dirt and lint from the key, tried it again and a better working lock was never seen. 'How much is your bill?' As this involved a trip to and from Calais of about 600 miles, and time and expense in proportion, he replied $40. Taking a roll of bills from his pocket he said: 'That is satisfactory on conditions. Does any one in the place know your business here?' The reply was, 'No one.' 'All right, then; get out by the next train and keep mum, for I would gladly pay $100 rather than have any of my friends know that I was fool enough to go to Boston for a man to pick the dirt out of my key.'"—Boston Courier.

A Phantom Postman.

For weeks a remarkable phantom or illusion has attracted attention at Parkersburg, W. Va. On dark nights the figure of a phantom postman has been seen clearly outlined on one of the windows of the city postoffice. The form and features of the phantom are as distinct as life. It appears to be in the act of distributing mail. The apparition has been seen only when no one was in the building, and it cannot be accounted for. Hundreds have seen it, and among the superstitious it has created alarm. It reads the postal cards. —Exchange.

Where "Counterpane" Comes From.

Counterpane is a corruption of counterpoint, from the Latin cul, cita (a wadded wrapper, a quilt). When the stitches were arranged in patterns it was called cul, cita, puncta, which in French became courtepointe, corrupted into contre pointe, counterpoint where point is pronounced "poyn" corrupted into "pane."—Dry Goods Chronicle.

Spectacles in Art.

The earliest picture I know of is one by Domenichino, in which St. Bartholomew "ecclesiam B. M. V. aedificari jubet; et columna decideus Monachi ejus discipuli jussu sistitur." The saint stands in the center of the picture examining a plan through a pair of pincenez.—Notes and Queries.

Suggestions for a Marine Barometer.

A suggestion for bettering weather predictions has been made by Capt. Franklin Fox, a well known English seaman. During January, 1890, when terrific gales burst upon the British islands, he finds that barometers at London gave no reliable monitions of these disastrous cyclones. His own idea is that the atmospheric power of rising or depressing the mercury in a barometer is affected by the amount of electricity in the air at the moment, and that "to have strict, reliable weather glasses we require electric tests of the conditions of the atmosphere attached to them."

It may be true, as Capt. Fox has supposed, that electricity has an effect on the oscillations of the mercury in the glass. During the passage of an electric storm over a station the mercury, for reasons never fully explained, almost invariably rises or falls very rapidly, though it often returns to its previous level when the storm is past. There is little doubt that the electrical state of clouds, as Lord Rayleigh has shown, determines their precipitation, and the down rush of rain, always accompanied by a down rush of air, will tend to sustain or elevate the mercury —an effect likely to be intensified when the descending air is filled with the smoke and dust arising over a great city.

When, therefore, a great storm is approaching, and clouds in its front are in that electrical condition which favors heavy and prolonged precipitation from them, the effect may very naturally account for the barometric phenomenon noted by Capt. Fox. At all events, the series of experiments which he proposes could not fail to throw new and valuable light upon the degree of reliance to be placed upon the weather glass. If the invention of a reliable marine barometer should be the result of such experiments it would be the means of saving thousands of lives and ships from the ocean cyclone. —New Orleans Picayune.

A Generous Farmer.

Rev. Smith Baker, of Lowell, Mass., formerly of Maine, while in Saco told of an experience he once had while holding a pastorate near Bangor. There was a well to do farmer who lived on the opposite bank of the Penobscot from Mr. Baker's residence who one spring, whenthe ice on the river was breaking up, lost a daughter. Mr. Baker was asked to officiate at the funeral, which he did, being obliged to hire a horse and carriage to make the journey, the nearest bridge being some distance up the river. Nothing was said about paying him either for his services or his expenses.

A little while afterward another death occurred in the family. Mr. Baker was again asked to conduct the services, which he did, this time hiring a man to row him across the river, and again with no mention of compensation. The next spring the farmer's mother passed away. Mr. Baker was obliged to make the journey as he did the first time by carriage. This time the farmer went to Mr. Baker and said: "Mr. Baker, you have been very kind to come over here to conduct these funerals at such an expense to you, and I feel that it is asking altogether too much. I want to pay you something. So next fall, when the apples are ripe, you drive around and you can help yourself from my orchard."—Lewiston Journal.

He Didn't Tell His Parents.

"I have never been so happy before in all my life," said Henry Soulen, the father of a 15-year-old boy who fell from a fifth story window in the New Insurance building, and was saved from a horrible death by alighting upon a mass of telegraph wires. Mr. Soulen was talking about his son's escape, and, although two days had elapsed, his voice trembled with emotion. "I have just been over to the scene of the accident," he stated, "and consider that my boy's escape was simply wonderful. The wires upon which he fell are not more than a dozen in number." It appears that young Soulen did not tell his parents of his frightful experience. "John reached home Saturday evening," said his father, "ate his supper, and acted as if nothing had happened. He thought he might as well keep quiet so long as he had not been hurt. In the evening my son Herman, who had read about the affair while down town, rushed into the house, grabbed John in his arms and thanked God that he was still alive. Then we heard for the first time of John's fearful experience."—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Seventy-three Roses on His Coffin.

A pretty little episode in the life of the late Dr. Byford was revealed at his funeral. The noted doctor had many devoted friends, and among them were Dr. and Mrs. Henrotin. The latter has for a number of years been in the habit of sending Dr. Byford a white rose on his birthday. She carried the rose to him on the last anniversary, and he then said to her: "You must bring seventy-three roses next year, for I shall be that many years old." The doctor died before his seventy-third birthday arrived, but Mrs. Henrotin attended the funeral and brought the seventy-three white roses which were laid on his casket.—Chicago Herald.

The Widow's Mite.

An aged German general wore only one trinket, a much worn German half-penny, at his watch chain. One day his grandson asked the reason of its presence in the place of honor, and the old general answered by telling a little romance. Baron Malortie, the grandson, narrates the story in his book, "Twixt Old Times and New."

The grandfather was so severely wounded at Leipsic in 1812 that he was picked up for dead and thrown with thirty or forty corpses in a common grave. His servant having promised the officer's father to bring his son alive or dead, searched for his master's body and found him still alive. A strong constitution and the servant's nursing allowed the officer to be removed at the end of ten days.

His father's house was a long distance from Leipsic, and the country was overrun by French patrols and marauders. The journey home was begun at night in a peasant's cart drawn by an old horse. Cross roads were taken, and during the day they rested at some farmhouse.

One morning after traveling all night they reached a small village and stopped in front of a baker's shop. The servant went in to buy bread, leaving his master stretched on a bed of straw and rags covered with a mantle and wearing a soldier's old cap on his bandaged head. There was nothing to betray his rank, but on the contrary he seemed a poor wounded private.

A poor woman in a tattered black gown, with a child in her arms, looked in the baker's window. Suddenly she saw the wounded man. Glancing at the halfpenny in her hand, and then looking at the bread in the window, she pressed the coin into the soldier's hand, and hurried off without saying a word. She had sacrificed her own and her child's breakfast that she might relieve one whose need she thought greater than her own.

At this moment the servant appeared, and by his master's order ran after the poor woman. Overtaking her he dropped a gold piece in her hand as a gift from the wounded soldier, who from that day wore the widow's mite at his chain.

The Hands.

One of the most common signs of want of breeding is a sort of uncomfortable consciousness of the hands, an obvious ignorance of what to do with them and a painful awkwardness in their adjustment. The hands of a gentleman seem perfectly at home without being occupied. They are habituated to elegant repose, or, if they spontaneously move, it is attractively. Some of Queen Elizabeth's courtiers made playing with their sword hilt an accomplishment, and the most efficient weapon of the Spanish coquette is her fan. Strength in the fingers is a sure token of mental aptitude. When Mutius burnt his hand off before the eyes of his captor he gave the most indubitable proof we can imagine of fortitude, and it was natural that amid the ferocious bravery of feudal times a bloody hand in the center of an escutcheon should become the badge of a baronet of England.—New York Ledger.

Syndicates at Home and Abroad.

We are informed that in Europe Germany takes the lead as the country of syndicates in 1889. Ninety-two were formed there in that year, including an auction "ring" and a warfingers' "ring." In Austria there were thirty-eight syndicates; in Great Britain, thirty-one; in France, six; in Russia, seven; in Belgium, eight; in Italy, two; in Sweden, four, and in Denmark, one. In addition to these there were eleven international trusts dealing with copper, zinc, nitrates, rails, mirror glass, sugar, dynamite and hotels. In America fifty-eight syndicates were formed, several of which were of English origin. It is known that about 260 of these trusts were formed during 1889, and it is probable that an equal number existed unknown, except to those interested in them. The majority of the syndicates appear to have been genuine industrial and commercial undertakings.—Stock Exchange.

Combination Life Preserver.

The idea of combining various uses in a single article is a favorite one with inventors. "The combined cap, pillow and life preserver" is to be made of some air tight material. As a cap it looks like the double visored headgear which is considered the thing for steamer wear. The center pulls out. What appears to be a ventilator in the top proves to be a mouthpiece. You blow into it until the interior is about half filled with air, and you have a very fair imitation of the air pillow. If you awake at night and find that the boat is sinking you blow some more air in through the mouthpiece and have a life preserver as big as a good sized bladder. There is even a piece of tape attached for tying the preserver to the breast.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Wood Pulp Blotters.

Ordinary blotting paper is too compact to absorb ink readily. The wood pulp from which fine white writing paper is manufactured is the best of blotting paper, and in localities where a pulp mill is accessible writers can easily obtain sheets of it.—Cor. Author and Writer.

"Yeth, um."

"What is Jerusalem?"

"An ejaculation, mum."—Harper's Bazar.

What is a cold in the head? Medical authorities say it is due to uneven clothing of the body, rapid cooling when in a perspiration, &c. The important point is, that a cold in the head is an inflamation of the lining membrane of the nose, which, when unchecked, is certain to produce a catarrhal condition—for catarrh is essentially a "cold" which nature is no longer able to "resolve" or throw off. Ely's Cream Balm has proved its superiority, and sufferers should resort to it before that common ailment becomes seated and ends in obstinate catarrh.

"Do you take many periodicals?" asked a young minister on his first visit to one of his parishioners. "Oh, no, sir," replied the good woman; "I never do, but I'm sorry to say that my husband takes a periodical about once in every two months. I wish you could induce him to sign the pledge."

It is estimated that the factories of New England will make over $125,000,000 worth of footgear this year.

Amazing Cures

OF Blood Diseases are made by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. People try other remedies, without avail; but when they test the merits of this medicine, they speedily find relief.

"Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. I had no appetite, and my flesh, strength, and vitality wasted away, so that my condition became quite alarming. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore and removed all its debilitating effects. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more results. Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my eyesight, which, on recovering from my sickness, I found much stronger and keener than before."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"It is my belief that for diseases of the skin there is no remedy equal to Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I have witnessed many cures of erysipelas, prairie-itch, and salt-rheum effected by this great medicine."—Thomas G. Edwards, M. D., Blanco, Texas.

"I have great faith in the virtues of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Two bottles completely cured a child of eczema. The case had baffled all the local physicians. It is a great remedy."—O. B. Anderson, Chraneville, Mo.

"Among the many remedies which are recommended for diseases of the blood there is Blinders and Cold Rits.

Blinders cause constant constraint, because the horse's eyes, being on the side of his head, they compel him to look ahead, which is just as much cross eyed for him as it would be for us to look sideways. They also act as reflectors and throw the sun's glare into the animal's sensitive eyes. But care should be used in taking them off horses accustomed to them. Never put a frosty bit into a horse's mouth when the temperature is below the freezing point. It inflicts acute present suffering and often permanent injury to the animal. A leather or rubber bit should be provided for such weather, or else a leather covering as smooth as possible should be put on the metal bit. A real mouthpiece can be made by any harnessmaker at a small cost.—New York Times.

The steno-telegraphy, with which people are now experimenting in France, is creating much excitement among news gatherers. By it shorthand reports can be transmitted to any distance, just as they come from the desk of the stenographer. The invention also effects a rate of telegraphic speed, either in long or short-hand, never obtainable before. In an hour for instance, by means of it, 25,000 stenographed words were transmitted from Paris to Brussels, 18,000 words to Lyons and 15,000 to Marsailles. Stenographed words can be sent at the rate of 200 words per minute; ordinary words, 100 or 120. Further experiments are expected to give still more astonishing results.

The Chicago News has this item: "A peculiar display of atmospheric effects upon a lifeless human body was witnessed six miles south of Quincy yesterday. A farm hand disappeared from the farm of Mr. Borcke. He was not seen again till this morning, when his body was found in a cornfield half a mile away from the house, where it had lain for more than three weeks. Instead of being decomposed it was dried up like a mummy. The skin was stretched tightly over the bones and was dry and hard. Physicians are unable to explain the phenomenon."

The Shah of Persia has granted an English company control of the Straits of Ormuz, which connect the Persian Gulf with the Arabian Sea. This virtually gives England control of the gulf, and is a menace to the forward movements of Russia. England now controls the Straits of Gibraltar, the Suez Canal, the Straits of Ormuz, the harbor of Hong Kong, the Bermudas and numerous other points that give an immense advantage over any other nation in the world.

The peculiar enervating effect of summer weather is driven off by Hood's Sarsaparilla which "makes the weak strong."

Nineteen years ago a Gratiot county (Mich.) farmer refused to let his daughter go to a candy pull. She went, though, and remained away. Last week she drove up to her father's door, lifted out her eleven children, coolly took off her wraps, and astonished her father by declaring that she had concluded to return and stay home, and hereafter to be an obedient daughter.

Pianos-Organs.

The improved methods of fastening strings of Pianos, invented by us, is one of the most important improvements ever made, making the instrument more richly musical in tone, more durable, and less liable to get out of tune.

Both the Mason & Hamlin Organs and Pianos excel chiefly in that which is the chief excellence in any musical instrument, quality of tone. Other things, though important, are much less so than this. An instrument with unmusical tones cannot be good. Illustrated catalogues of new styles, introduced this season, sent free.

JUBA AND THE GHOST.

Juba was a dog. It was the custom in the negro quarters where he belonged by right of ownership to refer to him as "ornery cur;" but this contemptuous appellation was more descriptive than accurate, for Juba united in himself a dozen strains of blood and belonged to no race of dogs in particular.

He had the heavy lower jaw of a bulldog, the deep intelligent eyes of a Scotch collie, and the watchfulness and agility of a terrier, but somehow these characteristics refused to blend harmoniously in him, and his best friend would have been forced to fall back on the darky's description admit that he was "ornery" looking.

He was a dog that you would have known in a glance was a negro's dog. You have seen a thousand such in the cane, or corn, or cotton fields guarding a dinner pail, or dozing on a ragged old coat at the end of the "turn row," faithful sentinels even in sleep of the poor treasures they are set to watch. There is always something a trifle pathetic in the affection that exists between these outcast dogs and their masters—a kind of comradeship between those who have drawn blanks in the lottery of life, and who cling together in community of misfortune.

It was Juba's destiny to be born on a fine wheat and tobacco farm in Tennessee, whose owner was a connoisseur in dogs, and who had a scorn for a scrub dog only less than his contempt for a horse without a pedigree. So Juba was very nearly being drowned for the sins of his ancestors, when Uncle Mose, the old negro overseer, interposed and saved him. Whether it was that Juba looked upon Uncle Mose as his saviour, or whether he was naturally of an affectionate disposition, must ever remain a conjecture, but from the first there was a remarkable affection between the old man and his dog.

"Juba ain't a settin up to be no plumb beanty," he would say sententiously when any one criticised his pet; "but he's a powerful peart dog en mighty knowin. Lord, I des believe dat dog could teach a schoolmarster grammar ef he had de use of his tongue."

It really seemed to matter little to the old man, though, that his constant companion did not have the "use of his tongue." As they trudged fieldward in dewy mornings, and in the long evenings when Mose sat and dreamed before his cabin fire with the dog at his feet, it really seemed as if Juba's love was strong enough to bridge over the gulf that separates the human and the mere brute.

But perhaps Juba's chief charm was his satisfactoriness. He was a sober minded dog, who never rushed off on hair brained excursions on a wrong scent; he never foretold disaster by howling at the moon, or treed imaginary possums up the wrong gum tree. He was not a brilliant dog, and he was keenly conscious of his own defects. When the brown partridges hid in the stubble in autumn, and the setters and pointers were brought out, Juba would drop his ears, that were greatly the worse for having been "chawed" in a fight, and slink dejectedly away.

These disadvantages, however, counted for nothing in Uncle Mose's eyes.

"Talk about yo' pinters en setters en sheep dogs en whut all yo' mind to, dey ain't nary one of dem can hol a candle to Juba when hit comes to treein possums and vermints," the old man would say, and then he would drop his voice to a whisper and add, "Lawd, dey ain't nothin can stop dat dog, not even sperrits en hants, en one time he treed a ghos!"

When Uncle Mose remembered the possum hunts he and Juba had taken together he loved him as we do an old friend who has shared our labors and our triumphs, but when he thought of the ghost he revered Juba as his preserver.

It happened years and years ago and it was in the early fall, when the wild grapes hang from the heavy vines in purple beauty, when the haw trees bend under the weight of their own crimson and black berries, when the pawpaws fall to the ground with their own weight and lie there in luscious ripeness and the persimmons gleam like ruddy gold amidst their dark green leaves. It is then that the possum is fattest and most toothsome, and that he falls the easiest victim to the hunter. No one knew this better than Uncle Mose, and for days, as he bent above the heavy tobacco, now splotched with dusky yellow and almost ready for the knife, he chuckled to himself as he looked over at the forest that skirted the "new ground" and thought about the possums fattening in it.

"You better be a sooplin' of yo'se'f, ole boy," he would say to Juba, who was, as usual, following close upon his heels down the tobacco row, "you better be a sooplin' yo'se'f, 'ease possums is powerful sassy and peart in 'simmon time."

The dark of the moon is the traditional season among the negroes for possum and coon hunting, and the night after the "turn" found a dozen or more stalwart negroes at Uncle Mose's cabin ready for the projected hunt. Some carried torches, others axes to cut down trees, if necessary, or to clear a way through the underbrush. A score or so of mongrel dogs yelped and sprung around in anxious expectancy. As usual, Uncle Mose with Juba, alert but quiet, at his heels stood in the midst of the group, and it was he who led, striking down the path towards the woods.

It was a picturesque group enough, as they threaded their way through the dim paths of the forest. The light showed the lithe, strong figures of the men; it glinted on the bright axes thrown over their shoulders; it showed the glancing forms of the dogs, hurrying hither and thither through the underbrush. The air was sweet with the odors of the night, and the silence was only broken by a deep, mellow laugh from a negro throat, or the sharp yelp of a dog, or the rattle of nuts, as the wind shook a scaly bark tree.

Presently there was a deep, bass note that thrilled every pulse as only a hunter's pulse can thrill at the presence of game. It was Juba's bark, and they knew he never failed. The first possum had been treed, and they broke into a sharp run, in answer to the summons.

"Hiyi, we'se got you now, ole hairy," exclaimed one.

"Don't come none yo' dead tricks on us," cried another; "you'se des de same ez in de pot now."

It was even so. In an instant a stalwart fellow had climbed the tree and shaken the hairy little beast down among the dogs, from whom it was with difficulty rescued. A cleft stick was procured, the possum's long tail inserted, and the party moved on, following in the wake of the dogs.

Possums were plentiful that night. Mose complained that "twaint no fun when dey are just settin' round on de logs lak days hankerin' to be put in de pot."

He found it difficult to keep up with his younger companions, and by and by he turned back homeward. With the faithful Juba at his heels, and the fat possum swinging over his shoulder he walked on, contentedly thinking of his morrow's dinner. Presently he became conscious that it was growing very dark. The clear starlit dusk was all blotted out, and he could hear the groaning of the trees as they trembled and shivered at the approaching tempest. In another instant, as it seemed to him, the storm had broken with all its fury over him. The thunder rattled and roared, the lightning blinded him, and he could hear the crash of the trees as the fierce wind tore them from their roots. Dazed and frightened, the old man stumbled along, falling over roots and torn by briers.

At last, by a flash of lightning, he saw that he was just standing without the little white painted neighborhood church. Ordinarily nothing could have overcome his superstitious fears sufficiently to induce him to enter a church at midnight, but in his present plight he welcomed any shelter, and pushing open the door he groped his way up the narrow aisle and crouched down beside the altar.

Juba lay at his feet and licked in mute sympathy the hand that caressed his shaggy head. Through the unshuttered windows every flash of lightning showed the gleaming white stones of the grave yard that almost surrounded the little church. Uncle Mose shuddered. There was the tall marble shaft that marked the grave of a negro trader. Every night, it was said, his spirit walked the earth, tortured by the tears and groans and broken hearts of the mothers from whom he had torn babies, by the curses of the wives he had torn from their husbands' arms. Even hell would not hold so vile a soul. There was the tiny grave of an unbaptized infant who cried because it could not enter heaven. There, horribly distinct in the flash of blinding light, was the unmarked grave of a man who murdered his brother. There was—God in heaven! what was that wild white face at the window? The old man staggered to his feet, but the apparition was gone. He would go out again into the night. Better the wildest storm than this ghost haunted place.

He turned toward the door, but there, standing in the gallery that ran across the back of the church, over the very door through which he must pass, was the white, ghostly thing.

Uncle Mose's heart stood still with fear; his trembling limbs would no longer support him and he fell on his knees.

"Oh Lawd God A'mighty," he prayed, "ole Mose ain't never been lak dese year common niggers dats always a pesterin' you for somethin' or n'er. Ole Mose ain't never boddered you much in all dese years, but Lawd he got the end of his row now, and dey aint no turn to hit. De fros' done cotch de ole man lak a stalk of backer standing out in de patch, en w'en you come to stem him an' strip him for prizin up dar he won't be nothin' but lugs."

The old man's voice died out in a sob, and he bowed his head, waiting for the awful something to come. But suddenly across his fears broke a familiar sound—Juba's deep, determined, unimaginative bark when he had treed something. Uncle Mose opened his eyes again on the world he never expected to behold more, and there, plainly revealed in a flash of lightning, was Juba with his "chawed" ears boldly erect, deliberately treeing the ghost in the church.

In all the years he had known Juba Uncle Mose's confidence had never once wavered in the sagacity and ability of his dog, and this was no time for half measures now. With a cry of relief he scrambled to his feet and with a bound cleared the church door, leaving the awful presence in full possession.

What was it?

The next morning a crazy woman who had escaped from a neighboring asylum was found dead near the church, with her long white garments soaked with rain, and there were those who suggest she must have been the apparition Mose saw in the church.

But he rightly refused to accept any such flimsy theory.

"I tell you," he always maintained, "hit would a been all up wid de ole man ef Juba hadn't tree'd dat ghos'."

There is little faith, however, that is proof against ridicule, and by and by it came to pass that the old man was shy of telling his ghost story to unbelievers, and it was rarely he could be won to speak of it at all after Juba died. When some irreverent stripling would ask, with a suppressed laugh, "Unc Mose, whut wuz dat tale you used to tell bout Juba en de ghos?" the old man would answer testily:

"Tail, tail? Dey wan't no tail bout Juba; he wuz de bob tailest dog yo' ever see in yo' bawn days."—Elizabeth M. Gilmer in New Orleans Picayune.

Does your Cake Dry up Quickly?

If so, your baking powder is adulterated with ammonia or alum, ingredients which are injurious to health and are used by unscrupulous manufacturers simply to lessen the cost of the powder and increase their profits.

Housekeepers who use Cleveland's Superior Baking Powder know that food raised with this pure cream of tartar powder keeps moist and sweet, and is palatable and wholesome.

"Cleveland's Superior" has the peculiar property, possessed by no other baking powder, of producing light, wholesome bread, biscuit, cake, etc., that retain their natural moisture and sweetness. This desirable quality, in a baking powder shown by the Official Reports to be the strongest of all pure cream of tarter powders, makes Cleveland's Superior "Absolutely the Best."

The Pulpit and the Stage.

Rev. F. M. Shrout, Pastor United Brethren Church, Blue Mound, Kan., says: "I feel it my duty to tell what wonders Dr. King's New Discovery has done for me. My Lungs were badly diseased, and my parishioners thought I could live only a few weeks. I took five bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery and am sound and well, gaining 26 lbs. in weight."

Arthur Love, Manager Love's Funny Folks Combination, writes: "After a thorough trial and convincing evidence, I am confident Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, beats 'em all, and cures when everything else fails. The greatest kindness I can do my many thousand friends is to urge them to try it." Free trial bottles at H. L. Flanders & Co.'s Drug Store. Regular sizes 50c. and $1.00.

No medicine in the world is in better repute or more widely known than Ayer's Sarsaparilla. As a safe and certain remedy for all manner of blood disorders, leading physicians and druggists everywhere recommend it in preference to any other.

The following significant dispatch from Toronto appeared a day or two ago in the press throughout the country:

"TORONTO, July 21. A cable dispatch says the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is about to procure fresh capital for purposes in connection with a Pacific steamship service under subsidies granted under the British and Dominion Governments."

Democratic organs, which a few short weeks ago were hotly and ignorantly denying that England subsidized her steamship lines, have been enlightened by the current discussion, and would now no more deny the existence of British subsidies than they would the existence of the pyramids of Egypt.

Blakeley Hall tells the Brooklyn Eagle that everything is much cheaper and nicer in Boston than in New York city; and he says Boston is especially cheaper than New York in the price of living. A dinner which can be had for $1.60 in Boston costs $3 in New York. A beautifully fashioned modern house in Commonwealth avenue which rents for $1100 per annum could not be had in a corresponding neighborhood in New York short of $3500. And so he continues to show the superiority of Boston, winding up with the statement that the private houses of Boston are much more magnificent than those of New York. All of which is refreshing to our local pride.

Mr. Blaine and Reciprocity.

Secretary Blaine's latest letter to Senator Frye on the reciprocity question is full of the same force which characterized the earlier correspondence. Mr. Blaine disposes—conclusively, we think—of the objection which has been advanced by opponents of the measure that, even if America were willing, Spain would not consent to reciprocity and stand by and see her richest colonies entering into closer and closer commercial relations with the United States. Mr. Blaine recalls the circumstances, which some of his critics had apparently forgotten, that six years ago Spain entered into a treaty of reciprocity, which failed because the free sugar proposition then was entertained with no favor in our Congress. About the same time the House of Representative had defeated the consummation of a similar arrangement with Mexico. If any reasons can be cited why Spain and Mexico would be any more averse to reciprocity now than they were in 1882-83, such reasons have not yet been presented.

Another interesting feature of the letter is Mr. Blaine's explicit statement that he urged the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, as long ago as last February, to make some provision for reciprocity in the forthcoming Tariff bill. He failed then, and the fact is not a good omen for the success of any reciprocity proposition in the present Congress. But Mr. Blaine's critics can no longer blame him for postponing decisive action until it was too late, for it is obvious that he seized the earliest opportunity to perform his duty as he understood it. This letter is in some respects the most important and the most urgent of the series. It evidently demands, and we are sure that it will receive, the thoughtful consideration of Congress and the country.—Boston Journal.

Hold It To The Light.

The man who tells you confidentially just what will cure your cold is prescribing Kemp's Balsam this year. In the preparation of this remarkable medicine for coughs and colds no expense is spared to combine only the best and purest ingredients. Hold a bottle of Kemp's Balsam to the light and look through it; notice the bright, clear look; then compare with other remedies. Price 50c. and $1.

The Anglo-Jewish Association gives a glowing picture of the condition of the Jews in Russia, which is growing from bad to worse. One of the worst features of their persecution is the restriction put upon education. Jewish students can only form 3 per cent of the total number, even in places where the Jews form 75 per cent of the total population, while the number of children allowed by law to receive elementary education in schools is only 5 per cent of the total number attending such schools. The Jews are still prohibited from holding arms or acting as agricultural administrators, and those who inhabit villages are not permitted to migrate to rural districts. It is also proposed to exclude them from the legal and engineering professions.

Some of the Republican Senators could not resist the temptation yesterday to pour a little hot shot into the Democracy, and Mr. Hiscock's speech was particularly effective. But it will be well for the Senators to remember as a general thing that with the mercury soaring away up where it is at present, legislation is what the American people want and not oratory.

Democratic correspondents at Washington continue to attribute the delay in the passage of the Appropriation bills to the imperfect operation of the House rules, when the fact is, as these correspondents know perfectly well, that the delay has been in the Senate and not in the House, and that one cause for it is the absence of such rules as those which govern the House.

When Gov. Taylor of Tennessee says that the National Election bill is an envious stab at a prospering South, he is uttering sheer nonsense, and if he only stopped to think before he spoke he would acknowledge it. To say that the bill is a stab at the prosperity of the South is equivalent to saying that that the prosperity of the South is based upon political fraud and intimidation.

"Papa," said the young mother, "I've decided on a name for baby; we will call her Imogen." Papa was lost in thought for a few minutes; he did not like the name, but if he opposed it his wife would have her own way. "That's nice," said he, presently, "my first sweetheart was named Imogen, and she will take it as a compliment." "We will call her Mary, after my mother," was the stern reply.

Plans are being prepared for a great market house in Chicago. The structure will be several blocks in length, to be covered with a glass roof and divided by streets 125 feet wide and 80-foot alleys. It is to be located beyond the Randolph street viaduct. The estimated cost is $1,000,000.

The longest journey on record for a young carrier pigeon was made in 1887 by the noted bird Wade, owned by Mr. Henry Wagner of Boston. This bird when only about five months old flew from London, Ont., to Boston—525 miles.

The natural affiliation of the Democratic papers with the wrong side of moral questions is illustrated afresh by the prompt ardor with which the Philadelphia Record assails the proposed anti-lottery bill "as an act of pure despotism." The managers of the Louisiana Lottery themselves could not have expressed their views with more fervor.

Senator Gorman gave in his allegiance to the free traders yesterday, but he did not do it gracefully. He is apparently still far from agreeing with the majority of his Democratic colleagues who hold with Senator Vest that the Democratic tariff policy "challenges the protected industries to a fight of extermination."

It is clear that the Germans are delighted to have Heligoland. Admiral Von Werner has just contributed to a Leipsic journal an article on the island's military value. The Woburn Journal

FRIDAY, AUGUST 8, 1890.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

All Advertisements, to insure insertion in this paper, must be handed in as early as 10 o'clock on Thursday forenoon.

FOR STATE SENATOR.

We are not surprised to hear that the political pot has already begun to boil. People are commencing to talk. The various political conventions will be putting in an appearance at an early day.

In connection with the Republican nomination for State Senator from this District the name of only one person has struck our ear, and that was Edward F. Johnson, present Mayor of this city. It is understood that Mr. Johnson will not consent to run for a third term of the Mayoralty and his friends think strongly of presenting his name in the Senatorial convention, if he will allow it.

It is probable that several other gentlemen in the District will be urged for the nomination between this and the date of the convention.

There is a plenty of good Senatorial timber in the District.

THE G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT.

Last Tuesday the Boston Herald published a careful estimate, based on the most reliable data that could be obtained, on the number of Veterans that would attend the National G. A. R. Encampment in Boston next week, and the number of strangers outside the G. A. R. ranks who would visit the city on business and pleasure at that time. The former it places at 50,000, and the latter at 250,000. These figures represent the lowest estimates made not only by the Herald but by intelligent people placed in positions which afford them uncommonly good opportunities to get facts on the subject.

According to these calculations Boston will be tremendously full of people next week.

THE PRESIDENT COMING.

If nothing turns up to alter his plans President Harrison will attend the National G. A. R. Encampment in Boston next week.

A reply to the Committee's invitation was received from him last week in which the above announcement was authorized.

The presence of the President of the United States will have a strong tendency to greatly increase the crowd at the Encampment.

KEMMLER EXECUTED.

Kemmler, the murderer who has been waiting for his earthly exit so long, was executed by means of electrietty at the Auburn, New York, State Prison, early last Wednesday morning, in the presence of several doctors and others.

It took two or three shocks to kill him. After the first he was pronounced dead but was brought back to life again.

It is believed there will be no more legal executions by electricity.

DELEGATES TO THE STATE CONVENTION.

According to the new apportionment the Republicans of Woburn will be entitled to 8 delegates in the State Convention.

Ward 4 will have 2 delegates and each of the other 6 Wards will have one.

The Convention will be held on Sept. 17.

MIGHT AS WELL GO FISHING.

Now that Gen. Banks isn't going on the retired list of the army, ambitious 5th district Republicans might as well go a-fishing.—Boston Herald.

There's about where it lights. If General Banks fails to get on the retired list he will be a candidate for re-election, and if he is a candidate for re-election he'll distance all competitors "as sure as shootin'."

☞ THE WOBURN JOURNAL is tickled almost to death because the taxes over there this year are to be only $16.50 on a $1000, and puts the figures in bold face type. Perhaps Editor Hobbs can save enough on his taxes to pay his passage to Nahant on the occasion of Congressman Lodge's reception to the S. P. Association. Hope to see you there, Bro. Hobbs.—Reading Chronicle.

What a sprightly old chap our neighbor of the Chronicle is getting to be! As member of the ever-to-be-esteemed S. P. A. he is first at the banquet and the last to leave it, indulges in oratory, throws off a bumper, shakes a hoof at the head of the quadrille, and "goes home with the gals in the mornin'," as gay and lively as a lad one-third of his age, and don't mind it a bit.

But then, Woburn beats Reading all to pieces on increase of population and decrease in rate of taxation.

☞ We are in receipt of the speech of Congressman Henry Cabot Lodge delivered in the House of Representatives at Washington on June 26, last, on a bill pending (called by the Bourbons "Lodge's Force Bill") to provide National Supervision of National Elections, which, on careful perusal, we find to be a fair, dispassionate discussion of an important National question. Mr. Lodge expresses statesmanlike views of the functions of the Federal Government, its rights and liabilities, and these views are laid down with clearness, calmness, and without any bifaluten whatsoever. In other words it is a clear, strong statement of correct ideas concerning the subject discussed.

☞ By courtesy of Hon. Charles R. Ladd, the present and prospective head occupant of the Auditor's Office, we are indebted for a copy of the annual report of that Department of the State government, for which we return thanks.

— During these hot summer months you should have one or two pieces of Rattan Furniture to make life comfortable. The best place in New England to secure Rattan goods at the lowest price, is at Paine's Furniture Co., 48 Canal street, Boston.

— Next week a company of young gentlemen, namely; Harry Carter, Harry Dow, Henry Brown, Carl S. Dow, George W. Buchanan and John E. Gilcreast, expect to go to Sebago Lake for a good time. It is a beautiful place for a summer outing.

— A careful perusal of the advertisement of Burdett's Business College in this paper is advised. The proprietors of the institution are among the best esteemed citizens of Woburn and deserve Woburn patronage for their popular and successful Boston school.

— Uncle Levi Teel's vegetable garden out on Cambride street holds out like the Widow's Cruise. If it keeps on humping itself as vigorously as it has of late it will keep Uncle Levi and the Editor a long way from the doors of the Poor House this fall and winter.

— It has been a very hot week. From 90 to 98 right through the day and 75 at midnight has been no uncommon meteorological condition since the middle of last week, and people have become pretty well wilted down. At least there is a good deal of groaning among them.

— Mr. Roger S. Spaulding who went to California nearly a year and a half ago and has been at Seattle, W., for a year past, has returned to this city. He reached this latitude early in July and has been visiting in New Hampshire. He was sick when he got here, but is now in good health.

— Judging from the multitude of placards in the store windows, each and everyone of which reads: this store will be closed Aug. 12, G. A. R. parade in Boston, it is fair to presume that next Tuesday will be observed as a general holiday in this city, for which the municipal authorities wisely set an example.

— John Doherty who was struck by a switch engine while walking on the railroad tracks between Church Ave. and Main street on Wednesday evening, July 30, died in the Massachusetts General Hospital last Friday night. His only known relative in this vicinity was a sister living in Boston or one of its southern suburbs.

— A committee composed of Alderman Linscott, B. Frank Kimball, W. W. Cummings and Elmore A. Pierce had conference last Wednesday with Superintendent Flanders of the Lowell division of the B. & M. railroad in regard to lower passenger rates for North Woburn. They were pleasantly and satisfactorily received.

— There was a very pleasant party at the residence of Chief McIntosh on Thursday evening of last week at which the Arion Quartet were handsomely entertained by the host and hostess. There was a fine collation, pleasant social intercourse, and some choice music by the Arion. The affair passed off very agreeably to all present.

— Mr. J. J. Grothe, successor to Pollard & Parker, blacksmiths and carriage builders, has just finished off a hose wagon for the Newton Fire Department. It weighs 1000 pounds and carries 800 feet of hose, with a capacity of 1000 feet if necessary. It is an excellent carriage and a credit to Mr. Grothe's mechanical skill and thoroughness.

— The Globe Theatre's fall season opens on Monday next, August 11, with Gorman's Minstrels. This is one of the best troupes that travel. The Globe Theatre is one of the coolest in the city, being lighted by electricity and fitted with appliances for furnishing plenty of fresh air to the audience. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday afternoons.

— Mr. Charles M. Munroe is having an addition made to his store which will more than double its capacity. The length of it will be increased 45 feet by a rear addition of that length and full width of the present rooms, which will give him one of the best stores in this city. A large and constantly increasing business demands this additional room to do it in.

— It is said that two Methodist meeting-houses are built every day in this country. One of them was started last week at Woburn, and all the Protestant ministers or the city attended and gave the pastor, Rev. Hugh Montgomery, fraternal encouragement. Mr. Montgomery expects to have the church paid for by the beginning of 1891.—Wakefield Citizen and Banner.

— The entertainment given by the St. Charles Minstrels at Lyceum Hall last Monday evening was of a high order of minstrel merit. It was first-rate and gave a great deal of satisfaction to a large and appreciative audience. Each part was as well carried out as it could have been done by professionals. There were dead loads of fun from beginning to end. Lyceum Hall was well filled aloft and alow and Post 33, for whose benefit the show was given, must have been materially benefitted in its finances from the receipts.

— Rev. Fr. Slattery of St. Charles church has returned to his post of duty in the best of health and spirits. During the last year he has passed through a series of severe attacks of illness and suffered a great deal; but he seems to have pulled clean through this time and has at last got firmly established health. He has a great many warm friends here who will hail his return with pleasure.

— Mr. W. P. Pierce of Olean, N. Y., formerly of Central Square, left here this morning for Old Orchard where his family have been stopping for several weeks. He will remain on the the coast—all along from Bar Harbor to Scituate—about a fortnight and then return to Olean, where he has a large tannery and is doing a handsome business at leather making. He moved there about a year ago, and likes York State firstrate.

— George F. Hartshorne, C. E., made photographic pictures of many of the scenes of devastation and ruin left by the Lawrence tornado two weeks ago. He went up the next day and took along his lightning camera to get views and when he returned home he had a large number of them ready to be finished up. The destructive power of the tornado was well set forth by these pictures of Mr. Hartshorne's.

— At the monthly meeting of California Pioneers of New England held at the Crawford House, Boston, last week, Hon. B. F. Whittemore of this city was elected Chairman of the Printing Committee for the Annual Banquet which is to be held on the 9th prox. in Boston, and his daughter, Miss G. M. Whittemore, was elected a member of the Ladies' Reception Committee.

— George W. Nichols, the watchmaker, went fishing last Saturday night. He and M. B. Field of the American Express Co. were taken down the harbor and out to sea by R. W. Pratt in a steam yacht. They were gone a day or so, and claimed to have had extraordinary good luck—for them. No doubt of it. As usual the color of their catch was not seen by Woburnites on their return.

— Miss Hattie Blake, daughter of Mr. E. N. Blake, and Miss Elizabeth M. Brown, daughter of Mr. Jacob Brown, went to Kennebunkport last week for rest and pleasure. Mr. E. N. Blake went down a few days after, and our latest intelligence from the party was to the effect that they seriously contemplated a hostile descent on Bar Harbor. Mr. Blake will probably fetch up on the banks of the Sandy river before he gets back to Woburn.

— Miss Bessie B. Grammer, daughter of Mr. Samuel G. Grammer, is expected to arrive in this city in less than a week. She will come on the California G. A. R. excursion train but will not return. She went away about 20 months ago and during nearly all the time has been at Omaha, Neb., which city she likes very much. She has enjoyed good health during her prolonged absence, and also enjoyed life firstrate. A great many friends will extend to Miss Grammer a warm welcome back to her home.

—Woburn's City Council has directed that all city offices be closed August 12, in recognition of the G. A. R. Encampment. Malden could do the same with honor to herself. The day should be made a general holiday, and the city can inaugurate the work of making it so by passing an order like that passed by Woburn. Let our business men take hold of the matter of closing their stores on that day for several hours, if not for the entire day, at once, so that none may plead insufficient notice.—Malden City Press.

— Mrs. Robert J. W. Phinney has engaged to sing at a concert to be given at No. Conway on Aug. 12 for the benefit of the free library there. The affair is in the hands of Mr. E. W. Tyler of Boston who is an annual visitor at No. Conway and is this year one of the committee on the coaching parade; and the talent already secured are: J. H. Rickitson, the well known Boston tenor; Mrs. Moran, the widow of Harry Bloodgood, who has a cottage at the Intervale; and Mrs. Phinney. Other artists will be added to what when complete will be a brilliant list.

— Last Saturday evening's edition of the Lynn Item told how near we came to losing Mayor Johnston among the Granite Hills of N. H. It was'nt quite as bad as that, but the Mayor, in company with Mr. George F. Fosdick of this city, had an unpleasant experience at No. Conway last week during the heaviest and most terrific thunder storm that has visited that region in the last 30 years. Happily for them the lightning-charged clouds dropped below the summit of the mountain on which they stood, and although they got thoroughly drenched there was no danger to be apprehended from electric bolts and matters of that kind. They came out of it all right.

— A few days ago J. T. Freeman & Co. of this city shipped to the Loredo Tanning and Leather Goods Co. located at Loredo, Texas, a full outfit for a large tannery and currying plant which they had just completed on an order of the Company, which is composed of English capitalists. They sent with the outfit an improved iron glassing-jack, stoning-jack, a pebbling-jack, a stuffing-mill, a washwheel, a polishing wheel, and a soleleather roller. Also shafting, pullies, etc., for a firstclass tanning and currying establishment. Freeman & Co. have a wide reputation and their brewery, tannery and other machinery stand high for excellence among manufacturers.

— The funeral of Ald. Michael Golden, which took place last Friday morning, was largely attended. Besides a delegation of his fellow employees from the Boston & Maine Railroad, the Woburn Board of Aldermen were present in a body, likewise City Clerk David F. Moreland, City Collector John G. Maguire, City Messenger Edward Simonds, Chairman John Ferguson of the Board of Health, and other members of the city government. The bearers were: Ald. William C. Kenney, City Clerk David F. Moreland, Lawrence Martin, Bartholomew C. Golden, Superintendent of the Glue Works at Montvale, Philip A. McKenna, and Bernard Golden. The floral tributes were numerous and beautiful.

— Thieves undertook to get away with two or three dozen of Mr. C. H. Mentzer's nice spring chickens about half past one o'clock last Monday morning but instead of that he left the premises very suddenly with probably quite a stock of buckshot in his legs. Mr. Mentzer, who is Mr. William B. Harris's son-in-law and lives at the Harris homestead on Lexington street, heard a wagon drive up near the hour named above and thereupon armed himself with his shot-gun and cautiously reconnoitered for game. Presently a man emerged from a henhouse near by with a loaded bag over his shoulder which bag, when the fellow was commanded to halt by the undressed gunner, he dropped and made a dash for his wagon. It was right then and there that Mr. Mentzer got in his charge of buckshot, but the thief escaped. Mr. M. saved his chickens and got a good bag to boot.

— We never appreciated the blessings of poverty more keenly than during the late heated term. We have always regarded poverty as a good friend, but just how good a friend we have never fully realized until this week. Respecting poverty, labor and kindred things our idea has been, ever since arriving at the years of discretion, that that degree of the first named commodity the possession of which compels a constant and steady pull at the second is and always has been a true and complete blessing to the possessor, for labor is unquestionably a panacea for hundreds and thousands of ills that the rich have to endure because they are not poor, and people are so foolish that they will not labor unless poverty compels them to. Now, the men and women who have been obliged to work through all the scorching weather of the last few weeks have been truly blessed. In doing their daily stints they have forgotten the heat, or become indifferent to it, and they who have done that, have been much, very much, happier than the idle folks who had nothing to do but sit round, dawdle, pant, sweat, and complain of the weather. If poverty had obliged these idle people to take hold and do something they would have been saved much of the discomfort of the late hot spell and enjoyed themselves a thousand times better than an abundance of riches has permitted them to do. Aye, give us work, even if we have to take poverty with it.

A Presentation.

Post 33, G. A. R., held its regular monthly meeting last evening. There was a surprise for them, as about 9 o'clock a large delegation of contributing members knocked for admission. Upon arriving in the ante-rooms the officers of the Post were requested to meet the visitors, and they did so, and then all marched into the hall, and after the members had formed a square City Clerk David F. Moreland, on behalf of the contributing members, presented a set officers' swords and equipments, 12 in number, badges of rank, G. A. R. badges, and canes enough for the whole Post, for use at the encampment parade. Past Commander Albert P. Barrett was presented with a staff officer's sword and equipments, he being an aid on the staff of the Department Commander. Commander William P. Warren responded for the Post, and following were short speeches by Comrade Charles A. McDonald, Postmaster Lawrence Reade, Prof. Elmore A. Pierce and Past Commanders James Carton and William C. C. Colgate and David F. Moreland.—Boston Globe, Aug. 1.

The above occasion was one of the happiest that has ever taken place inside of G. A. R. Hall. It was briefly alluded to in the last issue of the JOURNAL, but as there was not sufficient time on hand to give a better account of it the above from the Globe is appropriated.

Following close on the heels of the above generous behavior on the part of the Honorary Members and the good time that followed the presentation, came the following letter from a lady who, with her late husband, is held in pleasant remembrance by Post 33:

"My husband, your late comrade, always felt a great interest in the Grand Army of the Republic, and its members everywhere enlisted his sympathy. If he were living he would spare no efforts for the success of this great undertaking of the coming Encampment. For his sake, and my pleasure, I enclose this small sum of $5.00 to add to the contributions you have need to collect.

"I have not forgotten your great kindness and respect for him at the time of his death and burial, and I would like to do more than this, but as a little is better than nothing, I thought this little would be acceptable.

"With best wishes for pleasant gatherings through the week of the coming entertainment,

I am yours respectfully."

Chief Wadlin's Census Figures.

Hon. Horace G. Wadlin, Chief of the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics and Labor, has prepared the following table of the census for 1890 of Boston and the cities and towns situated within 12 miles of the Capitol of the State. The table is not quite perfect because full and and accurate returns have not been received at the Chief's office, but when all are in and complete the result will stand about the same as the reader will find it set forth below.

The aggregate population of the cities and towns in a radius of 12 miles of Boston was, in 1875, 603,909; in 1885, 731,746; in 1890, approximately, 855,000. Thus the local and suburban population in Boston in another five years will have passed the 1,000,000 mark.

The absolute increase from 1880 to 1890 is greatest in the following order: Boston, 74,406; Lynn, 17,291; Cambridge, 16,677; Somerville, 13,504; Malden, 11,086; Newton, 7,380; Everett, 6,884; Waltham, 6,821; Quincy, 6,696. The table follows:

Boston,	362,839	390,393	437,245
Cambridge,	52,669	59,658	69,346
Lynn,	38,274	45,867	55,565
Malden,	12,017	16,407	23,103
Newton,	16,995	19,799	24,375
Somerville,	24,933	29,971	38,437
Waltham,	11,712	14,699	18,533
Arlington,	4,100	4,673	5,528
Belmont,	1,615	1,939	2,076
Dedham,	6,233	6,641	7,119
Everett,	4,159	5,825	11,043
Hull,	383	451	1,003
Hyde Park,	7,088	8,376	10,279
Lexington,	2,460	2,718	3,056
Lynnfield,	686	766	785
Medford,	7,573	9,042	11,105
Melrose,	4,569	6,101	8,491
Nahant,	808	637	899
Needham,	5,252	2,585	3,030
Quincy,	10,570	12,145	16,666
Reading,	3,181	3,551	4,080
Revere,	2,263	3,637	5,652
Stoneham,	4,805	5,559	6,158
Swampscott,	3,500	3,471	3,185
Wakefield,	5,547	6,060	6,959
Watertown,	5,428	6,238	7,093
Winchester,	3,802	4,304	4,854
Woburn,	10,931	11,750	13,440

It ought to be stated that "estimate" over the 1890 column means something more than it does when a Western "boom" town or city "estimates" its population: the figures in that column are based on an actual count and a true return, and will stand the fire of an official count.

If they go on growing at the rate they have during the last five years the population of the cities and towns named above will be a good deal over 1,000,000 in 1895.

Once a western railroad company laid a rail over a widow's farm at quite a grade, and did not compensate her as she thought they should have done. About once a month she soaped the rails, checking the trains, and finally in this way brought the company to terms. Soap is a power in the world, and the monarch of all soaps is Brussels soap. It delighteth the heart and is a foe to uncleanliness. It's economical.

Scandinavian Notes.

BUILDING. The following named gentlemen have been chosen a Building Committee with full powers to go on and erect a church edifice on the site on the corner of Montvale and Greenwood Avenues recently bought for that purpose: A. J. Simonson, Charles H. Svenson, Sven Froberg, N. C. Olson, August Erlandson, Alfred L. Olson, Charles R. Rosenquist. A photograph of the elevation shows a neat handsome building.

PREACHING. Rev. K. S. Bjork of Waltham will preach in Y. M. C. A. hall next Sunday at 10.30 a. m. The services will be held in the Swedish language.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. Mr. Charles R. Rosenquist started out early this week to secure subscriptions with which to build the proposed Swedish church. He has not made much progress as yet but meets with a kindly feeling for the enterprise that augurs well for the future. Mr. Rosenquist will have charge of the subscription paper and those who wish to contribute to this laudable undertaking may apply to him. It is to be earnestly hoped that the citizens of Woburn, especially members of the evangelical churches, will contribute liberally towards the erection of this Swedish house of worship for it is very much needed by the Scandinavians of this city.

A GENEROUS ACT. Mr. Rosenquist had barely started out for subscriptions to the new church the other morning when he met and was introduced to Mr. M. Greenwood of San Francisco, Cal., by his brother Mr. Curtis Greenwood of this city whom he is visiting. On introducing him Mr. Curtis Greenwood remarked to his brother, who is quite a wealthy man, that it would be a good thing in him to make a contribution to the new Swede church, and the brother accepted the idea as not a bad one at all. He thought he would subscribe to the building fund and, receiving a subscription book from Mr. Rosenquist for the purpose, he at once put his name on one of its pages and opposite the name "$100." He received Mr. Rosenquist's hearty thanks for the very generous gift and passed on. If our wealthy citizens would show proportionately as much liberality towards this Scandinavian enterprise as Mr. Greenwood, the California gentleman, did the Swede church would soon be built and occupied.

In Memory Of.

Last Thursday evening week the Board of Aldermen of this city held a special meeting for the purpose of paying respect to the memory of one of their members, Alderman Michael Golden of Ward 5. At the proper time Alderman Ramsdell of Ward 2 offered the following resolutions which were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, by the death of Michael Golden, late a member of the Board, the city of Woburn has lost a faithful and efficient servant, and an honored, generous and public-spirited citizen; and

WHEREAS, by his death, we, his colleagues, have suffered the loss of a genial, earnest and well beloved associate; be it therefore

Resolved, That in recognition and out of respect to his memory, the members of the Board attend his funeral and cause this resolution to be engrossed on its records and to be published in the Woburn News, JOURNAL and City Press, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to his family as a tribute of respect to his memory.

The Fly.

"How doth the little busy bee improve each shining hour." My experience with bees has been very limited but I can testify that it would be true if instead of "bee" "fly" was used. I believe I have always hated bees since I have known that beautiful poem. It was always quoted to me when I wanted to play instead of being good and working.

But I really do think the fly "improves each shining hour." I am sure it is only in the "wee sma hours" when it is still. Strange to say it doesn't improve folks temper, especially baldheaded gentlemen. Talk of mosquitoes! they are not to be compared to flies. Who ever saw or heard of a mosquito with such a perversity for sticking? The fly well illustrates that line of our school days "if at first you don't succeed, try, try again."

What mosquito would venture to explore and feast upon the contents of the sugar bowl, milk pitcher and butter dish?

The fly is the insect of the day. Give it all the fly powder and paper you want, you may kill some, but the more you kill the more you have. So what can we do but—suffer?—N. M.

A Fact.

To be of any value to the advertiser, the circulation of a newspaper must be among actual readers. A circulation padded on the prize-package plan, where papers are bought, a ticket cut out, and the rest thrown away, is of course, perfectly useless to an advertiser. It will be noticed that the Boston Herald has never been forced to adopt such a plan in order to appear prosperous.

What a host of men have kissed their wives in the dark, supposing them to be the pretty servant girl, and what a host of people still use common instead of Brussels soap, supposing them to be as good and economical.

Burlington.

Mr. G. H. Bennett has recently lost a good horse.

The church is closed for the annual vacation of the pastor. There will be no service until August 17.

A horse belonging to Mr. Nathan Simonds was kicked by another horse, in the pasture last week and was injured so badly that his owner was obliged to have him killed.

Gen. John Eaton, president of Marietta College, Ohio, formerly of the Bureau of Education, Washington, and Col. Lucien B. Eaton, a prominent capitalist of Memphis, Tenn., recently spent a day in Burlington visiting their friend of former years, Samuel Sewall, and recalling memories and acquaintances of long ago. Both gentlemen in their youth were school teachers in Burlington and they still remember that episode with pleasure.

Mr. Richard J. Alley who died at his home in Burlington July 26, had been a resident of this town for many years. As the "village blacksmith," he was well known to people in this region and was seldom absent from his post of duty, until ill health compelled him to lay aside his work and close his shop door, where the fire had ceased to glow and the anvil was cold. Mr. Alley was a man of marked uprightness of life. Quiet and unassuming he earned that "good name which is better than riches." With his life work well done he rests in peace.

"Something attempted, something done,
He earned a night's repose."

What They Have Done.

There are people in the country who are disposed to harshly criticise Congress for what it has not done this session, or in other words for its alleged failure to make laws. Either such people don't stop to consider what they are talking about or else they do not wish to give credit to whom credit is due.

The following are some of the important things Congress promised to do and has done:

1. Pledges kept by the House:
Tariff bill.
Federal Election bill.
Silver bill.
Anti-Trust bill.
Dependent Pension bill.
Administrative Customs bill.
Territorial Admission bills.
Battleships bill.
2. Pledges kept by the Senate:
Silver bill.
Anti-Trust bill.
Dependent Pension bill.
Administrative Customs bill.
Postal Subsidy bill.
Tonnage Bounty bill.
Territorial Admission bills.
Battleships bill.
Original Package bill.

A married man once said: "I would rather hold a currycomb argument with the heels of a mule than to beat my wife three straight games of euchre, or say a word against Brussels soap."

Speaker Reed.

They may attack Speaker Reed in newspapers and reviews, they may lie about him, scold at him and attempt to belittle him, but the sensible men and women of the country applaud him for taking a stand which has advanced legislation and shown up the falsity of the pretence that men sent to Congress were to be be counted as members only when it pleased their own sweet will. To seek by parliamentary subterfuge to thwart the will of the majority is only a shade less than open treason. The people are tired of the boys' play in Congress. Neither party is benefited in the long run by parliamentary trickery. The country demands that the business of the country shall be expedited with all reasonable speed. It is a disgrace to the nation that American Congress cannot discuss business affairs in a business like way. Too many lawyers and too few practical men of business may account for some of the delays. Let us thank Speaker Reed that his shoulder has been at the wheel in the House.—Boston Journal.

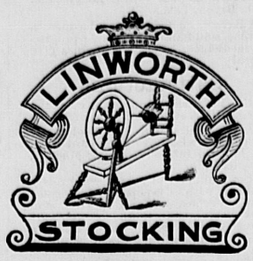
A beautiful woman is, indeed, God's noblest work in nature, but all women will be interested in reading an advertisement on our local page this week addressed to beautiful women. Messrs. Hollander, Bradshaw & Folsom in the thirty-four departments of their Department Store cater for the trade of that class of women who appreciate buying standard goods at cut prices.

"Have you washed your feet?" You think this is a queer question to ask, but it is one that many Mammas have got in the habit of asking the boys and girls as "Have you washed your hands?"

And Why? Because it has been almost impossible to get Stockings that would'nt crock and fade.

But alas! for Pearline.

We have got a Line of Stockings Worth much more than many so called "Fast Blacks," which will please the Mammas and the boys and girls as well, and not cost any more. Sizes to fit everybody from baby to grandmamma.



Pearline has its place but it will not have to be used to wash out the stains left by the "LINWORTH."

Literary Notices.

OUR LITTLE ONES for August looks as neat as a pin. Every page has a fine picture for the benefit of the children, while the literary contents are of the most entertaining kind. OUR LITTLE ONES is published by the Russell Publishing Company, Boston.

THE NEW MOON for August contains many good things—a great many more good things than anyone would think could be furnished for $1 (the subscription price per annum) by any magazine publisher in the country. The stories, sketches, poetry, etc., all make capital hot weather reading, and the Editorial Departments are full of interesting things.

The August number of THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY is a good one. Among its contents are: Common Sense Applied to the Tariff Question, Sanitary Work in Great Disasters, Missions and Mission Indians in California, Mental Strain, Ancient and Modern Ideas of Hell, The Discovery of Invisible Words, Centres of Ideation in the Brain, The Uses of Animal Color, Thunder Storms, Correspondence, etc. Published by D. Appleton, New York.

THE MUSICAL RECORD for August contains, under the head of "Music-Publishing," a skeleton history of the great music publishing house of Oliver Ditson & Co. of Boston from its modest beginning in 1840 to the present time, in which are given the portraits of John C. Haynes, the head of the house since the death of O. Ditson a year or two ago, and of Charles H. Ditson, the oldest son of the founder of the famous establishment and head of the New York branch. The article makes interesting reading. The number contains its usual instalment of new music and several pages of musical reading matter.

ST. NICHOLAS has a charming frontispiece for August. It is an illustration by Birch to the serial story Lady Jane and shows the former dancing-master, who has become a greengrocer, recalling his triumphs in teaching the pretty heroine the elaborate steps in vogue during his youth. The story itself is delightful. Some of the summery features: The White Mountain Coaching Parade, A Lesson of the Sea, A Remarkable Boat Race, The Sea Princess, Cupid and Crab, The Audacious Kitten. The serials are continued effectively, and the African Baseball papers are of the usual interest and value. Besides the features mentioned, there is an account of Miss Olof Krarer, the first native of East Greenland who has visited civilization. The sketch is illustrated by two photographs. The contents are well varied, strong, and, as usual, of a high order of merit.

It is because The Anglomaniacs presents a novel aspect of New-York life with uncommon pitch and wit that the third part, in the August number of THE CENTURY, will be probably that portion of the magazine to which most readers will first turn. In the new chapter of Friend Olivia the heroine sets sail for America with her father. The short story of the number, The Emancipation of Joseph Peloubet, introduces a Frenchman who turns his back in disgust on the Second Empire, starts a newspaper in New York which advocates emancipation of slaves, and collapses, and who then returns to his trade of baking until the breaking out of the war, when he enlists, and his ideals are realized and his life is sacrificed. These are followed by A Yankee in Andersonville, The Case of Miss Carroll, The Autobiography of Joseph Jefferson, Letters from Japan, The Women of the French Salon, The Treasures of the Yosemite, Italian Old Masters, The New School of Explorers, and many others equally fresh and interesting. A large number of the articles are profusely illustrated by celebrated artists.

Winn—Reade.

Dr. Charles H. Winn of Winchester, and Miss Mary Reade of this city, daughter of Postmaster and Mrs. Laurence Reade, were united in the holy bonds of wedlock at the altar of St. Charles (R. C.) Church, at 7 o'clock on last Tuesday evening in the presence of a vast assemblage of friends of the bride and groom, by Rev. M. D. Murphy of Hopkinton, this State, assisted by Rev. Lawrence W. Slattery, Rev. T. J. Murphy and Rev. Fr. Gilday, curates at the St. Charles Church. The tying of the Hymenial knot was performed in a graceful and pleasing manner by the officiating clergyman, who is a close friend of the parties united and of their families, and the act was witnessed with deep interest by the crowds of people who filled every part of the large auditorium of the church. No similar event has ever given rise to so much interest or attracted so many people to the scene of its enactment. The bride is a prime favorite with a great many young people in this city and it was but reasonable that they should want to be present and see her well and safely launched on the sea of matrimony. But the spectators of the nuptial ceremonies were not all from the younger part of society, for Miss Reade had hosts of friends among the older people, scores of whom helped fill the church to its utmost capacity that they might witness the solemn rites that united two loving hearts as one.

Florists had displayed much taste in handsomely decorating with beautiful flowers and plants the Reade residence on Main street, from which sallied out a large and merry company of relatives and intimate personal friends of the families as the hour of 7 o'clock approached. Nearly all of an upper room of this residence was occupied by the wedding presents, of which there was a rich profusion, in form and material of great variety, and in beauty and utility unsurpassed. Miss Mary was most generously remembered by her host of warm friends at home and abroad, and the happy groom was anything but forgotten on this important occasion by his personal and professional associates and admirers. The bridal gifts consisted in part or elegant solid silver vessels for various uses, table and teaspoons, beautiful china sets, rich cut-glass wares, choice cutlery, handsome books, fine oils and engravings, water color pieces, one purse of $500, and another of $100, besides many other appropriate gifts which we have not room enough to catalogue. As freewill offerings they represented warm friendships and high esteem for the bridal pair.

The church was elaborately and beautifully decorated for the important occasion. Mr. McGregor, Superintendent of the Dow greenhouses, and his skilled assistants, did it, as also the floral work in Music Hall, for which they were warmly praised. An ocean of lovely flowers were used in the decorations, besides no end of mosses, ferns, green plants in pots, and other fresh, sweet things. Faultless taste was displayed in the arrangement of the flowers, plants and leaves at the residence of Mr. Reade, the church, and at Music Hall, and the decorations at all these places were pronounced superb. In particular the following are some of the features of the decorations. For the elegance of those at Mr. Reade's residence Miss Celia Reade is entitled to the credit as she arranged solely the flowers and plants furnished by Mrs. Hovey: Music Hall, in which the banquet was spread, was handsomely and tastefully dressed with many different kinds of foliage and flowering plants. The platform was a perfect mass of the latter and from the curtain at the rear were suspended two pure white doves. One of the most beautiful pieces in the hall was a harp composed of asters, pinks and roses, the work of Mr. McGregor. From one chandelier hung a beautiful pendant of ferns and smilax attached to which was a bunch of white peas and astors. Also a bouquet of the same flowers in every arm of the chandeliers. The reception and retiring rooms were also elegantly decorated with choice plants and sweet smelling flowers.

The nuptial ceremonies took place under a huge floral arch, from which was suspended a large wedding bell composed of the choicest products from the hothouses, and which was surmounted by a dove.

The bride's wedding dress consisted of a pearl white heavily corded silk cut decollete, and she wore pearl ornaments, a diamond necklace (a present from the groom), and an elegant bridal veil. The groom was neatly attired in a regulation wedding suit.

The bridesmaids were: Miss Celia A. Reade (sister of the bride), Miss Louise M. Winn (sister of the groom), and Miss Nellie Reade. The groomsmen were: Dr. Thomas Harrington of Lowell, Dr. Frank Gilfeather and Thomas Hurley of Boston. The ushers were: Edward F. Cassidy, Joseph P. Shields, Dr. Murphy, Charles Campbell of Waltham, Dr. Frank Marra of Boston, Dr. T. B. Shea of Boston.

The bridesmaids were charmingly dressed. Miss Celia Reade wore a light handsome silk, cut decolette, with pearl trimmings. Miss Lulu Winn wore a white silk, pearl trimmings. Nellie Reade's dress was a beautiful pink silk, cut decollette. Each of the bridesmaids wore a heavy gold necklace presented to her by Dr. Winn, the groom.

The following were among the more notable of the ladies costumes at the reception: From Milford, N. H., were Miss Mary Ferry in black lace, decollette, with nile green trimmings, headdress a la Spanish; Nellie Ferry, canary colored surah silk, lace and pearl trimmings; Julia Eagan, heliotrope nun's veiling; Mamie Brodrick, flowered china silk; Maggie Brodrick, light blue and pink silk; Katie Hughes, black satin; Lizzie Rooney, black satin, orange trimmings. From Waltham, Mass., were Mrs. Agatha Reade, heliotrope lansdale cut V shape, and en train; Mrs. Michael Burgen, plum colored silk; Kittie Guinen, nile green, with nun's veiling; Mrs. Joseph Guinen, black lace; Mary Guinen, cream colored silk, tulle overdress; Mamie Harvey, black lace; Rebecca Campbell, canary colored china silk; Mrs. William Rooney, tinsel brocade, cut decolette en train, and diamonds; Mrs. Dr. McCormick, gray steel silk, trimmed with point lace, and a handsome evening bonnet. Mrs. Reade, mother of the bride, was elegantly dressed in black silk and Duchess lace. Mrs. McManners of New York City, wore a black and white china silk, with white mull trimmings, a perfectly entrancing love of a bonnet of lavender and white ostrich feathers. She also wore a wrap of Duchess lace and her ornaments were diamonds. Mrs. Dupee of Winchester was dressed in white silk, with white silk ribbon trimmings; Mrs. J. B. McDow of the same place, black lace. From Boston, Alice Murray, in black lace, and diamond ornaments; Emma Murray, figured India silk, pink roses; Annie Barrett, light blue silk and diamonds; Mary Mora, black lace, with old rose trimmings; Lizzie Daley, light brown silk; Margaret Flynn, black crepe deschine; Mrs. T. F. Hegerty, sea foam china silk; Mrs. Lannigan, white watered silk; Annie Glynn, black and white India silk; Mrs. Peter Kenney of Woburn wore a handsome black silk with jet trimmings; Kate Riddley, black silk, lace and jet trimmings, and diamonds. From Cambridge were Mrs. E. Goodrow, in colored silk, lace and jet trimmings; Annie Goodrow, pink silk; Mrs. Charles Goodrow, white silk; Mrs. Josephine DeRosay, light blue silk, white lace overdress; Mrs. Albert DeRosay, white ottorman silk; Mrs. Joseph Dee, white silk. Among those present from this city were Mrs. Mayor Johnson in white silk, entrain; Mrs. John P. Delaney, salmon silk, point lace trimmings, bonnet to match; Mrs. J. H. Parker, black satin, jet trimmings, tulle and white flowers; Mrs. P. Lafferty, white silk, pearl trimmings; Sarah Fuller, nile green silk, tulle overdress; Dora Fuller, pink silk, tulle overdress; Annie Larkin, lemon silk, ostrich trimmings; Mary Moore, white silk; Mrs. Richard Morris, black silk; Margaret Shields, slate colored silk; Rose Maguire, white silk, white brocade trimmings; Carrie Crane, white silk; Mrs. Herbert B. Dow, flowered silk; Mrs. Richard Carton, heliotrope velvet, diamonds; the Misses McCormack, black lace, white mull trimmings; Tessie Kenney, pink and nile green silk; Mrs. W. F. Kenney, garnet plush and pink surah.

While the guests were assembling in the church the organist, Anna Murphy of Boston, played themes from Schumann's Pilgrimage of the Rose, and Beethoven's Mount of Olives. On the entrance of the bridal party the organ peeled forth the Wedding March from Feramossy by Rubinstien; also Creation by a Quartet consisting of Mrs. F. J. McQueeney, Miss Theresa Flynn, Mr. Dillworth, and Mr. Robbins. This was succeeded by a Bridal Song by Cousin, and Wedding March by Mendelssohn. These musical features of the ceremonies greatly enhanced the pleasure derived from witnessing them.

At the close of the wedding ceremonies at the church the large company of invited guests, some 500, repaired to Music Hall in Post Office Block which had been duly prepared for the grand wedding reception. The entire floor of the second story of the block was used for the various purposes of the reception, the banquet being given in the Hall.

Calnan's Orchestra of this city furnished the very best of music for the dancing, which was kept up until nearly sunrise Wednesday morning; and Hicks, the famous Boston caterer, furnished one of his most elaborate and costly banquets for the festive occasion. It was an elegant repast and the small army of guests enjoyed it with a keen relish.

The highly fashionable affair was attended by many prominent people from New York, Boston, Charlestown, Waltham, Cambridge, Somerville, and other cities and towns, among whom were Mr. William O'Brien of Baltimore, Editor of the Catholic Mirror; Mr. Alex. Barrett of Chicago, Editor of the Catholic Review; Dr. D. F. Haskins, Port Physician of Boston; Hon. E. F. Johnson, Mayor of Woburn; and many other distinguished persons for whose names there is not space in this issue of the JOURNAL.

At 1.30 a. m., the bride and groom took a carriage and were driven overland into Boston, but nearly all of the gay party kept up the wedding festivities to a much later hour.

Mr. and Mrs. Reade, and in an especial manner, Miss Celia Reade, the bride's sister, left nothing undone that could contribute to the enjoyment of the guests. The music, the banquet, the brilliant illuminations, the floral display, were the best that money could buy, while the cordial and courteous personal attentions made the guests feel at their ease and quite happy.

In the way of garnishing the church and reception rooms with elegant furniture and rich soft carpets Mr. Edward Caldwell, the popular Main street dealer, was entitled to the credit.

It was the largest and most brilliant wedding that was ever solemnized in Woburn. Everything passed off in the finest style and every guest was delighted with the reception and generous treatment met with from Mr. and Mrs. Reade and their daughter Miss Celia, and when the end came they all felt it was a good thing to have been of the gay and happy party.

LESSON VI, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 10.

19. "There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day." In the margin of the R. V. "faring sumptuously" is translated as "living in mirth and splendor." So that we have before us one who had all that heart could wish, as far as this world is concerned, and he made the most of it, and was no doubt envied and sought after by many. An invitation to his house was something desirable, and perhaps never refused. But in all the wealth and mirth and splendor of his home there was nothing pleasing to God.

20, 21. "And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores, and desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover the dogs came and licked his sores." Perhaps there could not be a greater contrast than the rich man in his luxury and this poor beggar in his poverty and affliction, and no ordinary person would hesitate a moment if asked to choose for themselves the position of one or the other.

But when we consider the whole lesson in the light of here and hereafter, we shall see that it might well be called "The story of the two beggars." The one was a beggar during the short time of his earthly pilgrimage, the other became a beggar for all eternity.

22. "And it came to pass that the beggar died and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom." Those who call this parable take it upon themselves to assume the responsibility of so doing. I am not willing to do so, having no authority, and prefer to accept it as a plain statement of facts by one who knew whereof He affirmed, and was capable of giving us a glimpse of the unseen, with which He was perfectly familiar.

"The rich man also died, and was buried." His wealth could not prolong his life, nor could his many friends and admirers detain him. He, too, has gone from present things, leaving all his mirth and splendor behind him.

23. "And in hell (R. V., hades) he lifts up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom." No escort of holy angels awaited him, nor does he find himself in rest and peace, much less in mirth and splendor. Even while they are weeping over his body, and tenderly caring for it, he is in torment, in that portion of Hades, or the place of departed spirits, where the lost await the resurrection of the body, the great white throne, and their everlasting punishment in the lake of fire (Rev. xx, 5, 11-15; xxi, 8). The word "hell" is found in the New Testament about twenty-three times; twelve times it is Gehenna, or the place of everlasting burnings, and eleven times it is Hades, or the place of departed spirits between death and resurrection. The R. V. makes the distinction. This is a difficult lesson for those who believe that there is no consciousness between death and resurrection, for the facts as stated by the Lord Jesus completely upset such a notion.

25. "Son, remember." Does not this seem to imply that at least part of the agony of the lost will be the unceasing remembrance of past sins, past opportunities forever gone, past ingratitude to God which can never be remedied? Those who in this life give themselves up to pleasure, saying unto God, "Depart from us; for we desire not the knowledge of Thy ways," will in due time know the meaning of these words, "Woe unto you that are rich! for ye have received your consolation" (Job xxi, 13; Luke vi, 24).

26. "Between us and you there is a great gulf fixed." Taking this verse as we find it, the doctrine of probation after death is swept away; for according to this there is no passing from the place of the lost to the place of the blest. Heaven is above all fear, hell is below all hope. Jesus said to the unbelieving of His day, "Ye shall die in your sins! whither I go, ye cannot come" (John viii, 21). "These shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal" (Matt. xxv, 46). The punishment is the same length as the life; for it is precisely the same word in the Greek which is applied to each.

27, 28. "Send him to my father's house, for I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them lest they also come into this place of torment." Here is a lost soul anxious for the salvation of those on earth who are, like he was, indifferent to their eternal welfare. What a wonder this is when saved souls on earth manifest so little anxiety for the salvation of others. Or is it a wonder when we consider that this lost soul knew what it meant to be lost, for he was experiencing their torment; while saved ones on earth too often seem not to believe that it means anything very bad not to be saved.

29. "Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them." The word of God, even the Scriptures of the Old Testament, are all sufficient to guide us into the way of peace, for there is but one way of salvation revealed in the whole Word of God, and that is salvation by a substitute, the innocent taking the place of the guilty. Whether we consider the coats of skins for Adam and Eve, or Abel's sacrifice, or the ram offered in the stead of Isaac, or the constant sacrifices of Israel, all point to Him who was led as a lamb to the slaughter, on whom the Lord laid the iniquity of us all, who was wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities, on whom was laid the chastisement which purchased our peace, and with whose stripes we are healed (Isa. liii, 1-7). For further light on salvation in the Old Testament see the ark of Noah, the Passover Lamb in Egypt, the cities of refuge, and such passages as Isa. i, 18; xliii, 25; Mic. vi, 8; Zech. iii, etc.

30. "And he said, Nay, father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent." So many think today and say, How do we know? What evidence have we? Has any one ever come back to tell us? All who talk thus set aside these words of our Lord as of no value, and despise Him who came from Heaven to Calvary to redeem us. The words of Moses and the prophets are the words of the Holy Spirit of God through Moses and the prophets, yea, the words of God Himself (Acts xxviii, 25; Heb. i, 1). So that if any think they would be convinced by one from the dead rather than by the Word of God, it requires no argument to prove that all such are guilty of despising the Word of God.

31. "And he said unto him, If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." We are apt to think that seeing is believing, but Jesus says, "Blessed are they that have not seen, yet have believed" (John xx, 29). And Peter says by the Spirit, "Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see Him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory" (1 Peter i, 8). We have no proof that this rich man was a murderer or a blasphemer, a drunkard or a dishonest man; he may have been moral, upright and a good citizen; but he evidently was an unbeliever, a rejecter of God and His word, and this caused him to become a lost man.

Specimen Cases.

S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was troubled with Neuralgia and Rheumatism, his Stomach was disordered his Liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured him.

Edward Shepherd, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O., had five large Fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured him entirely. Sold at H. L. Flanders & Co.'s Drug Store.

One of the dancers in a theatre in Berlin was found dead in her bed, and it was supposed that she had committed suicide, but a post-mortem examination showed that she died from heart failure, due to tight lacing. The liver of the unfortunate young woman was horribly deformed and crushed out of shape.

DISDAIN.

In the soft gray dusk of the summer eve,
In the orchard path you met me,
And I grew so bold, tho' I'd not asked leave,
I felt so sure you would let me,
That I raised the bough with its dew wet bloom
(It was almost bent asunder!)
And held it aloft that you might have room,
And laughed—you could but pass under.

On the trees the leaves hung as still as death,
The grass by no breeze was worried;
No tardy bee with a honey sweet breath
Through the tender twilight hurried;
Each bird had finished its lullaby tune,
Hushed was all tremulous calling,
And the mystic spell of a night in June
O'er the still white world was falling.

But you turned away when you saw me there,
(So cold you were, so unwilling!)
With never a word, and all unaware
That my eyes with tears were filling.
Yes, you turned aside and you left the path;
The grass to your knees came sweeping.
Oh! the tasseled heads were crushed in your wrath,
The clover where it was creeping.

I saw the curl of your dainty pink lip,
I saw your eyes full of scorning;
To your cheek the blushes began to slip,
And bid me, forsooth, take warning.
So I dropped the bough to the earth again.
(What reck if it broke asunder!)
Something there was in its burden of pain—
I knew you would not pass under.

Curious Waxworks in London.

The Aquarium now has a new attraction in the shape of a waxworks exhibition representing some of the exciting scenes of the French revolution of 1789–1793. The wax figures, from designs by M. Layeillon, were executed by M. Beguine, of Paris, who gained the Prix de Rome for sculpture at the recent exposition, and were modeled by M. Halle.

Among the most striking scenes are those of Rouget de Lisle singing his composition "La Marseillaise" to an old spinet said to be over a hundred years old; the arrest of Louis XVI and his family at the tavern of Varennes, in Argonne, after being betrayed by the postillion, who recognized them through their disguises. The figures are remarkably well posed and executed and the dresses and furniture are said to be genuine antiques. Another remarkable group is that of the shoemaker Simon browbeating the poor little Dauphin, who has just signed his name, "Louis Capet" in the Conciergerie. The idea of the exhibition is similar to that worked out in the Musee Grevin, at Paris, and the Eden Musee, at New York.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Sense of Pre-Existence.

Every one has experienced the strange tricks that memory occasionally plays You are engaged in reading, in writing, in serious occupation which engrosses your mental powers. Suddenly there bursts into your thoughts some recollection of childhood, some trivial circumstance that happened years ago and was forgotten immediately afterward. Not the minutest analogy need exist between your present thoughts and the unbidden recollection that starts, goblin like, from the sealed up vaults of the past. Does this not indicate that experience in life, no matter how frivolous, leaves an indelible print on the mental organism, and that, though this print may seem to fade, it is still there, like writing in invisible ink, or the effaced manuscript on the palimpsest—only waiting for some exciting cause to bring it out clearly and legibly?—American Notes and Queries.

Puzzled the Secretary.

A short time ago "Tim" Byrnes, appointment clerk in the treasury department, appointed a man, who had long been an aspirant to a position in the treasury department, at $500 a year. The man was on his way to Washington, but was stopped by a wreck on the railroad. He immediately telegraphed Secretary Windom: "Am delayed by a wreck, but will be there tomorrow. Hold things down until I arrive and it will be all right." The secretary puzzled over the matter for some time before turning the telegram over to "Tim," who said the newcomer was one of the many who supposed that when he was selected for a place in the department, and did not arrive on the day designated, the entire treasury machinery would stop.—Washington Letter.

An East Indian Romance.

It would seem that romantic lovers are still to be found on the banks of the Hooghly. In a village called Tangail another case of "Villikins and His Dinah" was enacted a few days ago. A young Calcutta graduate, on being disinherited by his father for marrying a lady of the reformed class against his father's wishes, agreed with his "dearly beloved" to put an end to their existence by poisoning. They bade adieu to each other and swallowed opium. The lady died the next morning; "the young graduate revived," it is said, under the influence of a stomach pump and other medical aid, and is living now, after paying a penalty of forty rupees for his "rash" act.—Times of India.

Better Than Chemicals.

Cousin Lucy—How funny, this thing of a freezing mixture that will turn water into ice in a few minutes, isn't it?

Cousin Tom—Yes; but if I could mix the "good evening" I got from my fiancee and the "good night" I got from her father the day I failed in business I'd have a compound that would convert the Atlantic into a glacier in four seconds.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

To keep tools from rusting, take one-half ounce camphor, dissolve one pound melted lard; take off the scum and mix in as much fine black lead (graphite) as will give it an iron color. Clean the tools and smear with this mixture. After twenty-four hours rub clean with a soft linen cloth. The tools will keep clean for months under ordinary circumstances.

Forced To Leave Home.

Over 60 people were forced to leave their homes yesterday to call at their druggists for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicines. If your blood is bad, your liver and kidneys out of order, if you are constipated and have headache and an unsightly complexion, don't fail to call on any druggists to-day for a free sample of this grand remedy. The ladies praise it. Everyone likes it. Large size packages 50 cents.

At Guthriesville, Pa., a mad dog attacked the little son of Mrs. Gibbons, but before the child was bitten the pet dog of the family rushed upon the rabid animal and put him to flight, but not till after a severe fight, in which the family dog was badly bitten and lacerated. The boy escaped without harm. The dog that so nobly sacrificed itself had to be killed.

"Pretty hard work ditching, isn't it, Terence?" "Sure, it's not the work I moind, but what's breaking me heart is I'm the only American on the job. The rest is all Eyetalians."

NONSENSE ABOUT BLOODHOUNDS.

The Dogs Used in the South to Catch Prisoners Are Only Small Foxhounds.

Bloodhounds are inseparably associated with slavery in the south. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and other stories and dramas of that character would lose half their interest without the horror inspiring bloodhounds. Since the war the bloodhound has been associated with the recapture of escaped convicts. These convict catching bloodhounds are a myth. There are no such dogs in this section of the country. The dogs used in trailing escaped prisoners are very small foxhounds, insignificant and harmless animals.

At Pratt Mines, five miles from this city, there are 1,200 convicts leased by the state to the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad company. To capture those who escape the company keep a large stock of hounds. These dogs are small red foxhounds. A few of them are spotted, but the majority are a solid, dull red color. They are small, slender limbed animals, capable of fair speed and endurance, and they can without difficulty follow a trail five to eight hours old.

The dogs are kept in a large stockade a short distance from the prison, and never taken outside the inclosure except when wanted to trail escaped convicts. To get the dogs on the right trail a coat or hat belonging to the escaped convict is obtained, if possible, and held to the nose of each dog, while Trainer Crosswell by signs makes them understand that it is the scent they are expected to follow. They are then taken to the point where the convict made his escape from the mine or prison, or to the place where he was last seen. The moment they scent the trail they recognize it and give a short yelp. Their leashes are then slipped off; they are told to go, and the chase begins. Guards on horses follow close behind Trainer Crosswell, who rides a fleet horse and keeps right with the dogs.

Trainer Crosswell is proud of his dogs. Once fairly started on a trail they never lose it, unless thrown off the scent by a hard rain or the convict taking to water. They have trailed men through the principal streets of this city, where thousands had passed over the trail, and finally run the fugitive down. They never make a mistake. If they are started on the right trail they follow it to the end. When several convicts escape together and separate in the woods when pursued the dogs are divided and the separate trails all followed.

On several occasions these dogs have done good service in trailing down murderers and burglars. Trainer Crosswell says he can take any ordinary foxhound when young and teach it to trail men. It is entirely a matter of education and not of breed.—Birmingham (Ala.) Cor. Philadelphia Press.

Branded with Curling Tongs.

The shop of a fashionable coiffeur was recently the scene of an alarming battle between women. The veracious history of the affair is the following: For some time past a smartly dressed and elegant lady had been patronizing the artist in hair and his well stocked establishment. She turned into the barber's sanctum three or four times a week in order to have her locks trimmed. There was assuredly no harm in this, for everything was apparently conducted on strictly professional lines.

A young damsel, however, who acted as chief accountant and cashier on the staff of the coiffeur, saw matters in a different light, and she resented the long and frequent visits of the fashionable lady to the tonsorial sanctum. Accordingly the fair cashier lately made an interruption into the room where her rival was seated in the easy chair awaiting the artist, and snatching up some handy curling tongs, which were red hot, she branded the neck of the elegant customer in two or three places with the instrument. The lady after having duly shrieked made a dash at her assailant, who rushed out into the street and was only next seen by her victim in the police court, where the heroine of the curling tongs was condemned to pay £2 as fine and damages for her unwarranted assault on the customer of the fashionable coiffeur.—Paris Cor. London Telegraph.

Repaying the Favor.

Among a people who know no way of canceling a debt except by making payment in kind one is liable to strange experiences. The Maoris of New Zealand are very exact in this respect, as we see from an incident related by the author of "Bush Fighting."

During a skirmish a son of the principal chief fell into the hands of the British. He was badly wounded in the leg, and amputation became necessary, after which the man rapidly recovered.

When the patient was able to be moved the chief was informed that he might send for him. He did so, and next day a cart load of potatoes arrived in camp as a present for the general, together with a message of thanks for the kind treatment his son had experienced. The chief also declared that in future he would not kill wounded soldiers who fell into his hands, but only cut a leg off and send them back!

Ancient History.

A reporter amused himself one national holiday by quizzing "a regular Fourth of July darkey" about the origin of the day. The negro was an old man, a sage among his people. He wore the regulation black suit, second hand and faded, while his head was adorned with a broken down beaver hat that had done service "before the war."

After some preliminary conversation the reporter asked, "Do you know what the Fourth of July is?"

"Who, me? Le course I does. Hit's de openin' ob de watermillion season, an' de folks lays off a day ter git a good taste."

"Why do the colored people celebrate?"

"'Cause de white folks does."

"Well, why did the white folks first start it?"

"Well, dat was 'fore my time. You gwine back too fur fur me, boss. But I'se hear 'em tell about it."

"How was it?"

"Well, of I'se up on de Bible hit wuz 'bout de time Moses wuz 'lected de fust president er dese United States."

"No; you are a little off there; it wasn't Moses."

"Well, what wuz de gemmen's name?"

"Don't you know it?"

"Course I knows it; but I can't 'member de name right now."

"Was it Abe Lincoln?"

"Yas, ser, he de man. My grandpa wuz wid him when he rid across de Chattahooche riber in de batteau, an' grandpa catched de bigges' catfish dat Mister Linkun ebber seed, an' he gib him a silver dollar fur hit, an' my ole lady's got de dollar now. Yas, ser, dat's de reason dey celebrates de Fofe."—Atlanta Journal.

A Nation With Many Holidays.

It was reserved for the new republic of Brazil to institute the most extensive and remarkable series of national holidays ever known.

The provisional government of that country has issued a decree which declares that, "inasmuch as the republican system is founded upon a profound sentiment of universal brotherhood," and as "this sentiment cannot be properly developed without a system of public festivals destined to commemorate the continuity and solidarity of all generations of man," it has seen fit to institute a series of holidays which will commemorate the points of union between the history of Brazil and that of all peoples.

The government, consequently, establishes nine national holidays. The 1st of January is to be devoted to the commemoration of universal brotherhood, the 21st of April to the events which were the precursors of Brazilian independence and the 3d of May to the discovery of Brazil.

The 13th of May also becomes a holiday and is to "commemorate the brotherhood of all Brazilians." The 14th of June "commemorates the republic, and the liberty and independence of the American peoples." The 7th of September is to honor the independence of Brazil, the 12th of October the discovery of America, the 2d of November the memory of the dead, and the 15th of November the glory of the country of Brazil in general.—Youth's Companion.

A Hated Rival Scared Away.

A young man whose ingenuity deserves recording, ascended the front steps of a State street residence, near Henry street, Brooklyn, one night. Through the half closed curtains of the parlor window he saw the young woman upon whom he intended to call sitting in aggravating proximity to his hated rival. He realized how inappropriate it would be to ring the door bell, so he stepped softly and rapidly down the steps, around the corner and sounded an alarm for the police.

In a couple of minutes the patrol wagon, laden with policemen and commanded by Capt. Campbell, prepared for a fray with burglars, dashed noisily into State street. The young man directed them to look for a burglar in the house of his sweetheart, and it was a narrow escape for the hated rival. Half an hour later, after the neighborhood had relapsed into its normally quiet condition, the young lover rang the doorbell and found his sweetheart in a state of mind. His rival had departed and his reputation as a suspicious character will probably interfere with his future visits to that particular young woman.—New York Mail and Express.

Two Answers.

"What made you tell her so many times?" asked a sympathizing bystander, who had heard a railway official answer the same question for an old lady six times in fifteen minutes.

"Why, she didn't understand!" replied he simply, evidently a little surprised at the suggestion that he could have refrained from speaking. In disagreeable contrast to his forbearance stands the speech of the sea captain, irritated by an oft repeated query.

"Is it always foggy off the banks?" asked a passenger, guiltless of a suspicion that he might offend.

"How do I know, sir?" snarled the captain. "I'm not always off the banks."—Youth's Companion.

AN HISTORIC INSTRUMENT.

Leidy's Microscope Through Which Trichinæ in Pork Was Discovered.

In a box of highly polished wood, clasped and bound with shining brass, there reposes at present at the Philadelphia hospital a little instrument that has had an effect upon America's export trade in pork in an opposite ratio to its size, and that effect still lingers. It has brought American pork into bad repute with the German government. It is nothing but a microscope, but it is the microscope by the aid of which trichinæ in ham was discovered.

It was away back in 1835 that trichinæ was discovered by Pagot in the muscles of the human body, and the parasites were afterward described by Owen. How they came into the human system no one knew. That they got there and that their presence worked great harm was proven conclusively, but the source, the first starting point of the parasite—this was what scientific men, puzzle and hunt as they would, were unable to discover. It remained for an American and a Philadelphian to make this discovery, of which the general public has probably never realized the full value, but to which the world of science has always given due credit.

In 1844 Joseph Leidy was graduated as a doctor of medicine. If there has been one thing above another for which this celebrated scientist has always been noted it is his acute powers of observation. Nothing escapes his eye, nothing is too small to rivet his attention. In 1846, just two years after he graduated and when only 23 years old, he made the great discovery which had escaped so many celebrated physicians for so many years. It was one day when he was at luncheon that he fairly stumbled on the discovery, which would have yet escaped him had it not been for his powers of observation. He leaned over a large, luscious looking ham to cut off a slice as the meat portion of a ham sandwich.

Something on the surface of the meat attracted his attention. He looked closer and saw a number of tiny white specks no longer than pin points. What they were he did not know, but he concluded he did not want any ham—or, in fact, anything—to eat just at that moment. He put the ham away where no one else could get at it and carried the slice he had cut off up to his rooms. He placed these white dots under a microscope, and when they were properly focused they stood out plainly as the trichinæ that had been found in the human body just eleven years before. It was a discovery that might well cause a man to feel elated. This microscope, a handsome instrument about eighteen inches high, after doing the work of its celebrated owner for many years is now the property of his nephew and namesake, Dr. Joseph Leidy, Jr.—Philadelphia Times.

A Renaissance.

A Renaissance (re—again, and naissance—birth) means simply a new birth or revival; but the word, as used, is always understood to mean a revival in learning. The period known as the Renaissance, by way of eminence, dates from the taking of Constantinople by the Turks (1453), but long before that epoch the love for classical literature had been reviving. This event, however, gave a decided impulse to the revival of learning in western Europe; the learned men of the Greek or Eastern Empire sought new homes in the Occident and established schools throughout Europe. The revival of learning, the invention of printing (1450 A. D.), the discovery of the new world (1492), the decline of feudalism, the elevation of the middle classes, all contributed to bring about "The Renaissance;" the Reformation followed soon after (1517), ignorance was dissipated and superstition abated.

With the revival of classical literature came a taste for classical architecture, and during the Seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries there existed a distinct style known as the Renaissance in architecture, following that of sculpture and painting, and in time the saints of the Middle Ages gave place to the gods and goddesses of ancient Greece and Rome. The renaissance reached its climax about the beginning of the present century, but the people finally rebelled when window light had to be sacrificed to the reproduction of an ancient portico, etc. — Brooklyn Eagle.

A Magnet for Gold.

That certain substances have an attraction for gold was publicly demonstrated at Truckee in the presence of a large number of prominent citizens. A. W. Chellis, inventor of the electrical mineral ball, having been challenged to prove that the attraction of the ball for precious metals could be mathematically demonstrated, placed gold in one pan of the scales, balanced it, and holding the ball near the pan containing the gold caused the scales to deflect. He proved that the attraction of the ball equaled one grain for each $10 of gold. Small particles of gold, gold dust and gold leaf flew to the ball as iron filings will to a magnet.—Cor. A Tender Chord.

Rev. Dr. Primrose—I'll forgive you this time, but if I ever catch you again in the hen house I'll give you up to the law.

Sambo—Thank yo', sah. Kindness like dat touches a tender chord in dis ole man's buzzum.

Rev. Dr. Primrose—That will do, Sambo. Be sure you don't touch that cord in the back yard on your way out.—Epoch.

"Is that a love letter?" asked one young lawyer of another, who was poring busily over some closely written sheets. "Oh, no," replied the other, confusedly. "It's just a writ of attachment."

New York is said to be full of dukes, counts, marquises and other European nobles who have been compelled to leave home for one reason and another. Girls who have gone to Europe in vain search for a title can now obtain one cheap at home.

From All Parts

Of the country come testimonials to the extraordinary efficacy of Ayer's Pills. C. C. Rock, Corner, Avoyelles Parish, La., writes: "By the use of Ayer's Pills alone, I once cured myself permanently of a case of Rheumatism which had troubled me several months. No medicine could have served me in better stead. These pills are at once harmless and effectual, and, I believe, would prove a specific in all cases of incipient rheumatism."

Miss Eleanor Sherwin, of Plainfield, N. J., a graduate of Wellesley in 1889, has been elected instructor in Greek and Latin at the Robinson Female Seminary in Exeter, N. H.

Miss Mary Coddington left $40,000 to the City Missions of New York, to build a boys' club house. A building in the Bowery will be erected and fitted up for that purpose.

Mrs. Godfrey, postmistress of Whitewater, Kan., single-handed, closed out an original-package house that had attempted to use a building under her charge. Her word was law.

The Voice, of New York, offers a prize of ten dollars for the best three bright and witty sayings, original with a child not over five years of age, which have never before been published.

Mrs. Sarah C. Little, superintendent of the Wisconsin Institute for the Blind, was elected vice-president of the National Association of Instructors of the Blind, at the annual meeting held at Jacksonville, Ill., last week.

Lady Alexandra Leveson Gower, the only daughter of the Duke of Sutherland, well known in the United States, began her probation, on the 10th inst., at one of the most important metropolitan hospitals in London, as a trained nurse.

The women of the Woman's Exchange and the New Century Club in Philadelphia have started a free registry office, where housekeepers and domestics may be brought together and a written contract made as to wages and other matters. The Exchange consults the interests of both sides. Women are allowed to register, who come from a good training school, who have eight months' good reference, and finally, who have never "lived out," but are to be taken as learners at low wages, with especial encouragement to American girls and women.

Much injury is done by the use of irritating, griping compounds taken a purgatives. In Ayer's Pills, the patient has a mild but effective cathartic, that can be confidently recommended a like for the most delicate patients as well as the most robust.

The Swiss Federal Council has about decided to expel Mormons from the republic. Petitions in favor of the expulsion have been signed by tens of thousands of the working people, who cannot tolerate the Mormon doctrine. In several instances the Mormon missionaries have been subjected to personal violence. They have been making numerous converts.

Lunacy is rapidly increasing in England. Last year the Lunacy Commissioners had on their books the names of 84,304 insane persons. This year they began with 86,087, an increase of 1727. The great majority of the insane are found among the lower classes, 77,257 of the patients being helpless paupers.

New industries are springing up so rapidly in the South that it is frequently difficult to obtain labor.

Of all European workingmen, the Englishman has the shortest working day and the highest wages.

An English farm laborer will in ten hours do the work of two Russian laborers working sixteen hours.

Six American railroad companies pension their superannuated employes and also their permanently disabled people.

According to President Smith, of the flint glass workers, there has been a great development in that industry since 1880.

The servant girls at Fort Dodge, Kan., are threatening to strike for more pay and lighter work. The movement is organized.

By the Coal Mines Act of 1872 women and boys under ten years old are not allowed to work underground in Great Britain.

In Vienna and in Venice you may see women working as bricklayers' laborers and climbing with loads of mortar on their heads.

A lady of Bremen, Me., has a parrot and also a cat named Shag. She has taught the parrot to spell c-a-t, cat, d-o-g, dog, and a few such words, and the other day Polly electrified the household by spelling very loudly and plainly, "c-a-t," and then pronouncing it "Shag." Perhaps Polly can't think.

Pianos-Organs.

The improved methods of fastening strings of Pianos, invented by us, is one of the most important improvements ever made, making the instrument more richly musical in tone, more durable, and less liable to get out of tune.

Both the Mason & Hamlin Organs and Pianos excel chiefly in that which is the chief excellence in any musical instrument, quality of tone. Other things, though important, are much less so than this. An instrument with unmusical tones cannot be good. Illustrated catalogues of new styles, introduced this season, sent free.

The Popularity

Of Ayer's Pills has gone on increasing, until now the demand for them exceeds that of all others. The skill with which their purely vegetable components are united, their mildness and efficacy, and their delicate sugar-coating have made these Pills, par excellence, the Peoples' medicine.

"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hess, Leithsville, Pa.

"After many years' experience with pills as a remedy for the large number of ailments caused by derangements of the liver, peculiar to malarial localities, simple justice prompts me to express to you my high appreciation of the merits of Ayer's Pills for the class of disorders I have named."—S. L. Loughridge, M. D., Bryan, Texas.

"I have been in the drug business a life-time, and handle all staple proprietary medicines. Ayer's Medicines give general Satisfaction.

Ayer's Pills sell first of any in the trade."—H. T. Abbott, Barrington, Ill.

"Ayer's Pills take the lead here, and persons who have once used them will buy no others."—A. J. Mackey, Sprague, Ohio.

"For a number of years I was greatly troubled with dyspepsia. I became weak, nervous, had no appetite, and there were but few kinds of food my stomach would bear. After taking a number of remedies, without obtaining relief, I began to use Ayer's Pills, and, at the same time, commenced dieting. This treatment effected a complete cure."—J. W. Styles, Fort Madison, Ia.

"Ayer's Pills are considered a household necessity by my customers, and invariably give satisfaction. Our best physicians use them in their practice."—C. Tilton, Druggist, Allendale, Mo.

"I have taken Ayer's Pills for rheumatism, headache, costiveness, and colds, and have always been benefited. They are the best medicine ever used in my family. My son had a severe cold. He has taken a few doses of Ayer's and now is quite well."—Mrs. G. W. Hester, Brooklyn, N. Y.

LONELINESS.

To be alone? It is not that which sends
The sickening, hopeless ache, the stifled pain
Against my heart. But O, to know how vain
It is to mourn! When dull despondence blends
With all the hourly deeds of every day
And turns the labor, that erstwhile was sweet,
To bitter sadness. Each thing is replete
With some mute thoughts, and haunting memories prey
With sharp insistence on my mind.
To thus drag on, when all life's light is gone;
To miss the daily love, the dear cares;
To hear the dead voice in the moaning wind,
To be with others, yet to know the one
I need is gone; this, this is loneliness.

A MODEL MILL GIRL.

SKETCH OF THE CAREER OF LUCY LARCOM.

Side by side with our best-loved New England poets—Whittier, Longfellow, Lowell and Holmes—her name, hardly less a household word than theirs, is Lucy Larcom. Her poems are as truly the outgrowth and exponent of New England life as theirs, and they have as distinctive a flavor. What he has done for the farm and fisher's boat she has done for the loom and the needle. Where he has interpreted and idealized the life of manhood, she has had a woman's intuition to read, and a voice to tell, the more pathetic story of womanhood.

"Hannah, binding shoes," tells her homely, pathetic story, and all the world listens and is touched by its pathos. And her writings have, too, "a fire of faith" akin to Whittier, the most soulful of our poets. Nor is her life less earnest and inspiring than his own.

In that valuable and interesting book, "Our famous women," there is a sketch of Lucy Larcom, written by her friend, Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney. With such a subject and such an author the result could not be otherwise than charming, as it is. Mrs. Whitney's story of Lucy Larcom and her poems is full of meaning, too. From it we get many a hint of how the beautiful songs grew out of a lovelier life.

Lucy Larcom was born in Beverly, Mass., and lived there till she was ten years old. These ten years, her childlife proper, constituted an almost ideal childhood. Her home fronted a hill which she used to climb, thence looking seaward, and the voices of the sky and sea seemed even then whispering to her the lays she writes out for us.

When she was about seven years old her father died, and this loss involved subsequent changes in the family's life.

The Lowell mills had already begun their beneficent whir, and women of the highest character were wanted to take charge of the various boarding houses, not only, but to exercise a maternal care of the girls.

Mrs. Larcom, the mother of eight children, of whom the poet was the seventh, was such a one, and she moved thither.

It is a pleasant chapter in the history of New England life, though its pages were long ago written and sealed—that story of the Lowell mill and mill-girls; one we like to linger over, one that is told again and again by those who knew it or were a part of it.

Charles Dickens, in his "American notes," gives a chapter to Lowell, because, he said, he remembered it "as a thing by itself." As a visitor, an on-looker, outside all this cheerful industry, he describes the busy town, with its new, shining factories and stores, and the throngs of young women operatives, not one of whom, he said, so uniformly cheerful and modest was their demeanor, and so wholesome was the condition of their work, would he have removed—assuming the necessity that she should gain her daily bread by he labor of her own hands—if he had power. And he further describes the hospital, the savings bank, where not quite a thousand girls had on deposit at that time nearly one hundred thousand dollars, the boarding houses with a "joint-stock piano" in nearly every parlor, the libraries, and not least the Lowell Offering, made up entirely of the writings of girls employed in the mills, "whereof," he says, "I brought away from Lowell four hundred good, solid pages, which I have read from beginning to end."

As Mrs Whitney has pictured it, the homelife of the girls, especially their evenings, with books and work and talk, their friends and their Sabbaths, it seems like a bit from one of her own delightful books, a chapter out of "The other girls," or "Real folks." Yet it is a fact, or was, for all that.

Lucy Larcom, meanwhile, was going to school, and helping her busy mother "between-while." While she was yet a little girl, she began herself to work as a "little doffer," taking off the empty bobbins and putting on full ones. And in the years that followed, she shared, outwardly at least the life of the mill girls. He life was one with theirs, indeed, else, she could not have glorified it as she did in her "Idyls of work." She became, of course, a contributor to the Offering.

At this time she met Whittier, then editing a Free-Soil journal in Lowell, and a friendship, enduring until now, strong, high, helpful, responsive, sprung up between them.

Mrs Whitney says: "Afterward, when she had come to know and love the poet's sister, the three were much together in such intercourse as is rarely enjoyed." And she adds: "It is the pride and thankfulness of Lucy Larcom's life to have so known and been indebted to Whittier."

It is to Elizabeth Whittier, who is known through the devoted love of her brother, again and again finding expression in tender allusions, and known too by the poems he has edited in "Hazelblossoms," that Lucy Larcom dedicated her poems. And between the lines, as in the sentences themselves, one feels the influence that our poet must have felt, and the reverent love in which the memory lingers, still pulsing in the wistful verse.

When Miss Larcom was twenty she went with a married sister to Illinois and remained there some years, at first teaching a district school, then studying and afterward teaching in a seminary. Then, coming home to Beverly, first teaching a class of young ladies, then Wheaton female seminary in Norton, Mass., conducting classes in rhetoric, English literature, and composition, history, mental and moral science and botany.

Then worn with teaching, and after a partial rest, she became assistant editor, and afterward the leading editor of Our Young Folks. Since then, for a part of the time at least, she has lived sometimes with relatives and friends, and sometimes at Beverly by herself, her "dear home-corner of Massachusetts."

She seems to have been writing all along, from the time, when a child, she formed her little rhymes, and from the days of the Lowell Offering, and on through her Illinois life, till her songs come faster and freer in later years.

All her soul was stirred, and her pen was swift and strong and loyal to speak for Boston and Massachusetts and for loyal Womanhood in war times. Her latest book since the "Wild Roses of Cape Ann" is a complete edition of her poems, issued in the Household series, by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston. She has completed several volumes, "Breathings of the better life," "Roadside poems," "Hillside and seaside in poetry," and she has assisted Mr. Whittier in compiling three others: "Child-life in poetry," "Child-life in prose" and "Songs in three centuries."

She is the author of many a little song, full of heart-cheer and heavenly wisdom. She does not always get the credit of them, for like other verses, they are often copied without mention of the author, so the reader misses the double pleasure of knowing that the song he loves was written by the poet he reveres. One such I found once in a newspaper, and learned long afterward its author. It seems to me beautifully characteristic of her, and is entitled "Shared," and begins:

"I said it on the meadow-path—
I say it on the mountain-stairs—
The best that any mortal hath
Is that which every mortal shares."

It is an earnest, noble and womanly life, first of all, that the poems have grown out of. She knew well the lives of toiling women, at the spindle, in the household, in the schoolroom. She enters heartily into the life and joys of common ways and things.—Cottage Hearth.

Birds That Dance.

In his "Pioneering in South Brazil" Mr. Brigg-Wither relates that one morning in the dense forest his attention was roused by the unwonted sound of a bird singing, songsters being rare in that district. His men, immediately they caught the sound, invited him to follow them, hinting that he would probably witness a very curious sight. Cautiously making their way through the dense undergrowth they finally came in sight of a small stony spot of ground at the end of a tiny glade, and on this spot, some on the stones and some on the shrubs, were assembled a number of little birds about the size of tomtits, with lovely blue plumage and red topknots.

One was perched quite still on a twig, singing merrily, while the others were keeping time with wings and feet in a kind of dance, and all twittering an accompaniment. He watched them for some time, and was satisfied they were having a ball and concert, and thoroughly enjoying themselves. They then became alarmed, and the performance abruptly terminated, the birds all going off in different directions. The natives told him that these little creatures were known as the "dancing birds."

Two peddlers met in front of a nine-story tenement house in New York. "How is business, Aaron?" "Very good, indeed. And how is it with you?" "A woman just called me from the top story of this tenement. I managed to get up with my pack, and found her with a baby in her arms. When she saw me she said to the infant: 'There he is now; if you're not good he'll carry you away in his pack.' She didn't buy anything. Business, Aaron, is very bad."

Early in the autumn the Sun, the Times, the World and other New York dailies are to begin the use of typesetting machines. It is also announced that the printer of the Century Magazine is to have his typesetting done by machinery. A syndicate of book publishers has also made arrangements to put fifty or a hundred typesetting machines into a co-operative office, where all the body matter of cheap publications issued in New York will be turned out.

Woman's Column.

Wyoming's Triumphal March.

At Cheyenne, Wyo., on Wednesday, July 23, the formal celebration of Wyoming's admission to Statehood was observed with imposing ceremonies. An immense parade, several miles long, consisting of the State militia, civic societies, trade displays, and the garrison of United States troops from Fort Russell, marched through the principal streets to the new Capitol Building. The exercises consisted of the presentation to the State of a magnificent flag by the women of Wyoming. The presentation speech was by Therese A. Jenkins, who reviewed the history of woman suffrage in the Territory, and predicted for the movement permanency and success in the future. The response was by Gov. Francis E. Warren. M. C. Brown, president of the constitutional convention which framed the constitution adopted by Wyoming, presented the women with a copy of the constitution. It was received by Amelia R. Post, Vice President of the National-American Woman Suffrage Association. The orator of the day was C. D. Clark, of Evanston. Telegrams and letters of congratulation were received from the Governors of Montana and Nebraska, and from the leaders of the woman suffrage movement in the East.

Senator Teller has introduced a bill giving a pension of $2,000 a year to Mrs. Jessie Benton Fremont.

Mrs. Elizabeth W. Champney will contribute from abroad, to the next Harper's Bazar an article on "Country Life in England." The same issue will contain the second instalment of "Exercise for Women," by Emma Moffett Tyng, the subjects being "Bicycles and Tricycles."

The address of Frances E. Willard on "The Sanctity of the Home and the White Cross Movement in Education," before the National Educational Association, was published in full in the St. Paul Pioneer Press, July 10. It occupies nearly six columns, and is worthy of thoughtful reading. It was an eloquent plea for the evolution of pure, noble manhood and womanhood.

The capacity of women for university studies received a striking illustration the other day at Magill College, Canada, when three of the five medals were carried off by lady students. In the department of philosophy one of the ladies was placed first, while another stood second, being only a few marks lower. Morrin College, another Canadian seat of learning, has on its roll of B. A.'s a number of ladies, and the professors testify that these hold their own with students of the other sex. At Trinity University the degree M. A. was conferred on Miss H. E. Gregory, the first lady student to gain that distinction at that institution.

The world moves for women even among the most benighted. The Visa Nagar Banias, of India, have passed resolutions that a widow shall have her head shaved but once, after which she may allow her hair to grow and may also attend caste dinners. They have also resolved not to give their daughters in marriage before the age of ten, and twelve years has been fixed as the lowest limit for the consummation of a marriage. This is an improvement upon infant marriages to be consumated whenever the boy husband or his guardians chose, as well as upon the barbarous cruelties formerly practiced on widows.

A Sailor King.

George Wright, who arrived in San Francisco from the Caroline Islands, brings a queer story of the sudden rise of a sailor to distinction in the largest island of an archipelago seventy-five miles west of the Haweis, where Mr. Wright has a trading stores. "The sailor," said Mr. Wright, "is Carl Benjamin, and he has no less than nineteen wives and fifty-odd copper-colored children. He was wrecked in the schooner Bombazine off the Ladrone Islands nine years ago, and floated at sea on a raft for a couple of weeks before he struck land. If you will look at a map of the Pacific you will find lying midway between the Tropic of Cansor and the equator, 600 miles west of the Marshall group, thirteen dots. On some maps they are marked Thirteen Islands, well inhabited. That is all there is to point out their significance. It is on the biggest of these, called by the sailor Benjamin Island, after himself, that he has taken up his home. It is about ten by twenty miles in extant. Well inhabited means that there is quite a sprinkling of dark-skinned natives there, as well as many more who move two and fro in the archipelago with boats. They eat breadfruit, bananas, cocoanuts, and fish.

They don't work at all. Benjamin has got to be King. He has nothing at all to do but go swimming in the surf, talk the native gibberish, which he has learned, or loll under a palm tree. Sometimes he has wives fan him while he lazily smokes the Kaseba leaf, which grows plentifully there, and which, after one becomes used to it, is liked better than tobacco. Benjamin is capable of doing some work there, however. He carried three or four books with him on the raft, the last thing that you would have expected, and he has contrived to teach the natives English. Benjamin is an American of German or Jewish descent, and is a lover of books. The first thing he did was to select an intelligent native and teach him the alphabet.

The fellow learned rapidly, and soon began to teach it to others, and a number of them can now speak English, while the rising generation immediately around are gradually picking up a knowledge of the language. Benjamin is looked upon as a sage. The chiefs, of whom there are four, come to him for points, and of their own accord they have made him their ruler, the chiefs being a sort of Cabinet. Benjamin has picked out the handsomest women for wives, and they esteem it quite an honor. The King lives in the biggest bamboo house in the village of Ki, a straggling aggregation of native houses on a coral reef. His children are of all ages, and are a sprightly, lively lot.

Nobody bothers much with clothes in the South Pacific, still Benjamin wears a little something, and is gradually prevailing on the natives to do so, too. He keeps telling them that there is no civilization without some clothes. Benjamin is about 30 years old. He was from Newburyport, Mass., but says that he has no desire to return to America. He is the only white man, with one exception, for hundreds of miles around. He has taken to wearing a string of shells around his neck like the natives, and he sometimes imitates them and puts dots of blue paint, got from a native shrub, on his face. The permanent population of his island is given at 600 or 700. The island is indented with beautiful bays, and is dotted with trees and shrubs of a tropical growth covered with fragrant flowers. Benjamin Island is about 600 miles west of the Marshall group."

From letter written by Mrs. Ada E. Hurd of Groten, S. D., we quote: "Was taken with a bad cold, which settled on my lungs, cough set in and finally terminated in Consumption. Four doctors gave me up saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Saviour, determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones above. Newspapers and Magazines.

Where the newspaper offers to the young writer an advantage over the magazine is in its wider field and its larger capacity. Publishing thirty times agaiust the single issue of a magazine, the newspaper naturally absorbs more materiel and and a writer's chances correspondingly better. Then, too, subjects which are out of the range of the magazine fall directly within the scope of the newspaper. This is specially true of timely articles.

The magazines of today with their large circulations, and the necessary slower process of printing, are prepared so far in advance as to make it impossible for them to get close enough to timely happenings to make their discussion of them fresh and interesting. With the newspaper this is, of course, different, and it is precisely in its ability to treat of what is latest and freshest wherein lies its strength, and in these respects the field is necessarily broadened to the writer.

But, bear in mind, this advantage is only one of greater capacity, not of less requirement. Disappointment can be no more certain than when a manuscript is sent to a newspaper editor with the belief that he is less critical, or that his constituency is less exacting than is the case of the monthly magazine.

Marvellous Endurance.

The vast amount of labor performed by the heart in keeping all portions of the body supplied with blood is not generally known. It beats 100,000 times, and forces the blood at the rate of 168 miles a day, which is 3,000,000,000 times and 5,150,880 miles in a life time. No wonder there are so many heart failures. The first symptoms are shortness of breath when exercising, pain in the side or stomach, fluttering, choking in throat, oppression, then follow weak, hungry or smothering spells, swollen ankles, etc. Dr. Franklin Miles' New Heart Cure is the only reliable remedy. Sold by Charles H. Buss.

The London Times had a good correspondent in Buenos Ayres. He was in the midst of the street fighting, and sent off a dispatch amid a shower of bullets. INCREASE OF VALUATION.

The statistics furnished the JOURNAL last week by the City Assessors were full of encouragement. The net gain in taxable property during the year ending April 30, 1890, was $225,843. The gain in real estate, which is the best index to the condition of a town or city that can be found, was $330,529. To partially offset these figures was a loss of $104,696 on personal property, leaving the very handsome net gain above stated.

As remarked, the increase is on real estate where it will always be in a prosperous community, but the Assessors' footings would also have shown a gratifying state of things as to personal property returns for taxation but for some temporary suspensions of active operations among our chief industry, tanning and currying leather.

One of these preventatives of an increased personal property exhibit was the suspension of leather making by Mr. James Skinner, surviving partner of the late firm of James Skinner & Co., for the purpose of settling up the partnership affairs. This is one of the largest and most prosperous leather establishments in this city and its temporary withdrawal from the manufacturing, and having no stock or leather on hand on the 1st of May, produced considerable of a deficit in the returns of personal property for purposes of taxation. The factory is to be re-opened and set in motion at once by Mr. James Skinner who, it is understood, has bought the interest of Mr. John True, his former partner, in the business.

Another large establishment, that of Messrs. Bryant & King, whose product is calfskins, has been doing next to nothing during the last year owing to a continuously unfavorable market for their goods. Up to within a year or two the Assessors usually got handsome returns from this firm.

The factory of Eustace Cummings & Co. has not been employed to its full capacity for a year past and a loss has been here sustained to the city's personal property assessments.

Other concerns of less magnitude have helped to swell the deficit but they will all resume business under a full head of steam very soon and the public finances will be all the more prosperous for it.

But the valuation figures of the Assessors make a first-rate showing for Woburn, and when is added to them an increase of polls, increase of dwellings erected, a big increase of population, and a material reduction in the rate of taxation, all must admit that the future looks bright for our young and go-ahead city.

MORE CANDIDATES.

The rumor is current that Charles F. Spear, Esq., one of Woburn's bright young lawyers, who was a prominent candidate for the Republican nomination for Senator from this District last year, will try it again this fall with prospects brightened rather than dimmed by the lapse of time. He has many influential friends who will put in good work for him if he is in the race, or should conclude to enter it, and any opponents which might see fit to stand out against his nomination would have something more than boys' play to prevent it.

It is reported that a strong force of local Republican leaders are putting in good and effective work in behalf of the nomination of Capt. Ed. F. Wyer for the same position. It has been acknowledged for years that the captain is a power in politics (and not without good reason), and it is the feeling of his numerous personal friends that the party owes him a debt which ought to be paid. Besides having always been a hard, unselfish laborer for the welfare of the Republican organization, he has ever been loyal to its ticket and platform, and zealous for the advancement of its interests. He never sought office at the hands of his party and there is no certainty that he would accept one if tendered to him; but his friends think his services in years past are worthy of substantial recognition and are preparing to present his name at the Senatorial convention, provided the Captain's consent to it can be obtained.

We understand that both parties will insist that the nomination shall come to Woburn—the Republicans will, at any-rate. Fair play would seem to demand that this end of the District be accorded the privilege of naming the Senator this year. And it probably will be.

In connection with the subject it is proper to remark that the Democrats not only expect to renominate Mr. James Skinner but that they expect to elect him. He came within a very few votes of it last fall and his supporters pretend to believe that a fair amount of good, practical work will insure his triumphant success at the polls next November.

It is probable that other names, in due time, will be brought forward by both parties for support, and the contest for the Senatorship is likely to be quite a spirited one.

THE G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT.

Tuesday was a great day in Boston. There were more people in the city than ever before on any public occasion.

Nearly 40,000 Veterans were in the grand parade, representing 43 States, and more than 250,000 strangers viewed the procession.

The parade started at 11.30 from Commonwealth Avenue and was nearly six hours in passing.

President Harrison headed the procession.

Hundreds of distinguished people in military and civil life were present to witness the magnificent scene.

The North Atlantic fleet was in the harbor and attracted the attention of thousands.

Veterans were present from Honolulu, Alaska, and other remote sections of this great country.

The weather was all that could have been desired.

Boston did the handsome thing by the 40,000 G. A. R. men present, and although the city on Tuesday was packed like herrings in a box there were no accidents.

All the railroads centering at the Hub were taxed to their utmost capacity, and all trains were behind time.

The city was magnificently decorated. The State House was resplendent in artistically arranged bunting. All public and hundreds of private buildings were gloriously arrayed.

The floral G. A. R. emblems in the Public Garden and the floral arches, all designed by Forester Dougue, were brilliant and beautiful.

Everything passed off in splendid shape, and everybody appeared to be perfectly satisfied with the grand affair and Boston's reception of the Vets.

THE ORIGINAL PACKAGE BILL.

Last Friday the conference committee agreed to report back to the House the Senate Original Package Bill instead of the one passed by the House, which insures the immediate success of the much needed measure. The following is the Senate bill, the one which the House conference agreed to, and the one, when enacted, that will settle Original Package rumsellers for good and all:

"That all fermented, distilled or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory, or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale or storage therein, shall, upon arrival in such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State and Territory, enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in said State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise."

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Some months ago a report was circulated that Attorney General Waterman of this State proposed to withdraw. It was an idle rumor, without any foundation. Mr. Waterman has never intended to retire, but will remain a candidate. He will have a strong support from the Western part of the State, and is not without friends in all sections.—Boston Journal.

About this time last year nothing on earth could be more certain, according to the statements of a few loud mouthed people, than that Attorney General Waterman was a dead cock in the pit—a goner, so to speak. His renomination, they said, was simply out of the question.

We noticed that Attorney General Waterman "made the riffles" all the same. He got the nomination without opposition and distanced all competitors at the polls.

Attorney General Waterman is a sound lawyer, a straight-forward man, a loyal Republican, and the best thing the party can do is to keep him right where he is. They know it and are going to do it—one more year, at least.

☞ The population of this (Middlesex) county, according to the census of 1890, is 427,642. In 1885 it was 357, 311. In 1880 it was 317,830. Since 1885 it has increased 70,331, and since 1880 it has increased 109,-810. It is the largest county in point of population in the State except Suffolk, and has only 45,960 less than it has. The population of the State is 2,104,586, of which Middlesex county contains nearly one-fifth. It will be seen that its increase of population was considerably larger from 1885 to 1890 than from 1880 to 1885.

☞ We learn from the Chicago Evening Journal that Adam Lieberknecht, Esq., of Henry county, Illinois, has been appointed Consul at Tampico, Mexico, a city on the Gulf of Mexico above Vera Cruz. Mr. Lieberknecht is a journalist of more than 30 years standing and since 1863 has been connected with one of the leading Republican papers of that State. If the President always makes as judicious appointments as he has in the case of the Tampico consulship he cannot justly be found fault with. Mr. Lieberknecht will please accept our congratulations.

☞ There was not a thing lacking in the account of the grand G. A. R. parade which was given by the Boston Journal on Wednesday morning. It was a well written, well arranged, and minute story of the entire affair, and for the purpose of being kept for future use there was no account in any of the Boston papers that surpassed, and few that equalled, it.

☞ The Boston Evening Traveller issued a souvenir number last Monday afternoon which went away ahead of the other Boston papers so far as our observation extended. They all did well in the line of pictures, but the Traveller's production was the most artistic and elaborate of any. It was a good number to preserve.

☞ Gov. Brackett represented Massachusetts in the opening of the G. A. R. Encampment last Tuesday in fine style. He proved himself an honor to the Executive Chair of the old Commonwealth.

☞ No man of the whole immense crowd was greeted more enthusiastically or had more honorable attention bestowed on him than General B. F. Butler.

— There have been lots of G. A. R. blue coats in town this week.

— Mr. W. H. Crocker is the new Master of the Cummings School.

— Mr. Charles French and mother have returned from Asbury Grove.

— A nice good rain fell last Saturday and greatly refreshed the earth.

— Everybody said Post 33 made the finest appearance of any in the parade.

— Mrs. Morong is visiting Mrs. Simonds of Beacon street in this city.

— The next is Labor Day which falls on Sept. 1. It is a State holiday.

— Dr. Frank Graves is talked of for the Democratic candidate for Mayor.

— Mr. Mark Bancroft is visiting here from Minnesota. He is a G. A. R. man.

— Mr. Geo. Kimball is making excellent progress on the new Methodist Church.

— Yesterday was a hot one, but there was a fine breeze going part of the time.

— Mrs. E. A. Kendall's present address is Leominster, Mass., instead of Fitchburg.

— Boody Sherburne of New Hampshire has been visiting relatives and friends here.

— Mr. A. B. Dimmick and Mr. Charles F. Lyford will go to No. Lubeck, Me.

— Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Taylor expect to visit friends at No. Berwick, Me., next week.

— Holdridge has sold a good many oil stoves this summer. He sells good ones at low prices.

— It is suspected that the Republicans would like Ald. Kenney for a candidate for Mayor.

— Mr. Alex. Grant, the merchant tailor, returned yesterday from a fine visit to Pictou, N. S.

— All the trains out from Boston were late last Tuesday night. And weren't they full though!

— J. G. Maguire, Esq., City Collector, and family will take their vacation at Salisbury, N. H.

— Miss Jennie Skinner has returned from the mountains after a month's rest refreshed and invigorated.

— Postmaster Reade will not be Mayor of Woburn next year if Dr. J. H. Conway can help it.

— Comrade John Connolly of Lincoln Post, Newark, N. J., has been visiting this city this week.

— It is reported that Carr Brothers of No. Woburn propose to move their shoe manufacturing to Lynn.

— Late rains have lent more of an emerald hue to the lawns about here than they wore a month ago.

— We have had lately about as much east wind as the ordinary human constitution could cleverly stand.

— Mr. P. W. Foley, formerly member of Post 33, now of Norway, Me., is stopping here for a few days.

— Charles F. Florence and Ralph D. Dyer were arrivals at the Turk's Head Inn, Rockport, last week.

— The G. A. R. boys have had the finest kind of weather for Encampment week and have duly appreciated it.

— The value of personal property in Woburn is considerably larger than in Malden according to population.

— The alarm from box 61 yesterday p. m. was for a fire on the roof of David Clancy's house, Centre street.

— Mrs. Jennie Greenleaf of No. Berwick is visiting Mrs. Charles Taylor and Mr. Marc. Littlefield this week.

— Mr. Abijah Thompson, the oldest salesman at the popular Hammond Clothing store, is taking his vacation.

— Many thousands of Woburn people went into Boston last Tuesday. Some saw the parade and some did'nt.

— Mr. Frederic A. Flint left here last Tuesday for a month's sojourn at his summer stamping grounds, Camden, Me.

— Frank Newcomb has returned and mounted the box of the U. S. Express wagon again. He has been up in Vermont.

— From May 1, 1889, to May 1, 1890, there were built in this city 72 houses. That isn't a bad showing by any means.

— Rev. Fr. McDonald of St. Charles Church attended the funeral of John Boyle O'Reilly at Charlestown last Wednesday.

— Mr. and Mrs. Church of Newport, Vt., are visiting in this city. The former is a Comrade of Baxter Post at that place.

— We looked in vain for the name of Mayor Johnson among those who attended the banquet of the Mayor's Club in Boston.

— Our rustic poet turns on steam this week and gives the reader of the JOURNAL a poetical treatise on berries and garden truck.

— Forest Hooper is doing a good deal of the plumbing business in this city. He is a thorough workman and employs only skilled hands.

— General Secretary Bailey of the Woburn Y. M. C. A. has declined a call to take charge of the Brockton Association as General Secretary.

— Chief of Police McIntosh and wife have gone to Nova Scotia where it is the hope of the JOURNAL they may pass a very agreeable vacation visit.

— Mr. J. P. Bailey, General Secretary Woburn Y. M. C. A., left for Asbury Grove yesterday morning where he and his family will remain two weeks.

— Rev. Mr. Parker, of the Unitarian Church, and family have gone up to Vermont to finish their vacation. The parson took in the big G. A. R. parade last Tuesday.

— An election of Alderman will be held in Ward 5, on Aug. 26, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Ald. Golden. It is a Democratic Ward and candidates will be plenty.

— Everett Haynes, who has been absent from Woburn about 8 years, is visiting his family here. He is a resident of Chicago where he has been in business for the last 5 years.

— Col. John M. B. Reid of Greenville, Illinois, who was Colonel of the 130th Illinois Infantry Regiment, is staying with friends in this city. Woburn was years ago his home.

— Herbert Richardson of Richardson Brothers, laundrymen, started last Tuesday on a Raymond excursion for New York, Pennsylvania, Canada, and will be away about two weeks.

— In the course of two or three weeks our esteemed townspeople who are away on vacation joys intent will be coming back to their homes again. The season is drawing to a close.

— The National Band gave a very fine concert on the Common last Wednesday evening. It was one of their best and was listened to with great pleasure by a big crowd of people.

— A good many out of town G. A. R. men have been seen in this city since Monday last. Some of them are here visiting friends as well as attending the National G. A. R. Encampment.

— Letter-carriers Ed. H. Callahan and J. F. Maguire and druggist Bernard Devlin will start to-morrow for Wolfsboro', N. H., on Lake Winnepisaukee, where they will remain two weeks.

— The Veterans of the 39th Mass. Regt., will hold their annual reunion in this city on Sept. 17 with Co. K., formerly known as the Woburn National Rangers. A refreshing season is anticipated.

— The Board of Aldermen are entitled to much praise for their appropriation of $200 towards defraying the expenses of the reunion of the 39th Mass. Inf. Ass's to be held in this city on Aug. 26.

— Lawyer Allen didn't parade quite as much as he expected to last Tuesday. Dr. Bartlett, his attending physician, could'nt get him over a severe attack of illness in season for the great march in Boston.

A woman who was buried at Oley, Pa., last week, was so large that in order to get the casket in and out of the house it was necessary to remove a portion of several door frames. She weighed 425 pounds.

— We thank Mr. Joseph Kelley for a copy of the Exeter (N. H.) News-Letter. Mr. Kelley has been a subscriber of that paper 55 years, and had the reading of it for three years previously—or since 1831.

— Mr. Joseph Johnson of Pleasant street, this city, carried the same old canteen to the Boston parade that he carried at the Battle of Bull Run in 1861. It attracted much attention and is a relic worth holding on to.

— Chief McIntosh and Officer McDermott swooped down on Hugh McCall's place, No. 18 Main street, last Saturday evening and secured a couple of barrels of the "stuff." McCall was arrested but his friends bailed him out.

The color line is drawn in Nova Scotia restaurants. A colored clergyman of Halifax has sued the proprietor of the railroad restaurant at Amherst, N. S., for refusing to allow him to sit down at the same table with white folks.

— All the Woburn school houses had their flags floating in the breeze last Tuesday. So also had the Liberty pole on the Common, Municipal Building, and other places. It was a day for a hearty display of patriotism all round the board.

— Mr. Owen McCafferty, an old gentleman and paralytic, fell on Main street last Wednesday evening and had to be taken to his home in a wagon. He served faithfully in the War of the Rebellion and draws a pension for wounds received.

— When a fellow is sorter all petered out from the hot weather the best thing he can do for his constitution and debilitated system is to take a bottle of Flanders Tonic. There is nothing like it to bolster up the nerve centres and keep them up.

— A heavy rain accompanied with thunder and lightning was a welcome visitor here last Sunday evening. The day had been, at times, sultry and uncomfortable, but the thunder storm cleared the atmosphere out finely and cooler weather followed it.

— Some of the Comrades entertained at Post 161 hall last Tuesday evening were: William R. Fowle of Chelmsford, John M. Waldron and L. W. McAllister of of Newbury, Vt., H. E. Renfree of Bradford, Vt., and Robert Ward of Reno Post, 4, N. Y.

— The Woburn G. A. R. are well satisfied with the election of Wheelock G. Veazey of Vermont for Commander-in-Chief of the G. A. R. His election is an honor to New England as much as to the Green Mountain State for he was New England's candidate.

— Mr. S. R. Libby of Durham, Me., who served gallantly in the 20th Maine, from there detailed into the Signal Service, and served time in Libby, Andersonville and Belleisle Rebel prisons, and wife are visiting their friends, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Nason.

— Rev. H. C. Townley, who was pastor of the First Baptist Church of Woburn some 20 years ago, will preach in that church on next Sunday forenoon and evening. There are a plenty of his old friends and parishioners here who will be glad to meet, see and hear him.

— The Globe says of the Woburn Democracy that it "is practically a unit." We can't imagine what kind of a "unit" it could be that the Democratic party in this city are like. There was never in the world so much heart-burning and family quarreling among them as there is at the present time. The Mayoralty campaign will develop the biggest intestine war among them that was ever seen, or else "all signs fail in a drouth." "A unit!" So's your grandmarm!

— Last Sunday was a great day for the street cars on both roads. Hundreds went by the East Middlesex to the beaches and horses had a tough time of it all around. The regular travel on both routes has increased a great deal within the last twelvemonth.

— J. Henry McMahon, a graduate of the JOURNAL and a very likely young man, is visiting at his home in this city. His last "sit" was at Kansas City where he picked type in a leading daily for a long time—for him, and where he will settle himself after his vacation.

— Last week Auctioneer E. J. Gregory and family; Mrs. J. H. Conway, wife of the Doctor; Mary Moore; Miss Gregory, Misses Annie, Ella, Ellard and Winnie Larkin—all went to Salisbury Beach for their summer outing. They were anticipating great pleasure.

— The Weston Lumber Company, of which Mr. J. B. McDonald of this city is President, had one of their mills at Groverton burned on Aug. 5. They were fully insured or nearly so. Mr. McDonald's friends may not know this as the newspapers made out the loss to be $40,000.

— "Over ninety different patterns of Chamber Sets" is the latest announcement from Paine's Furniture Co., 48 Canal street, Boston. The number can scarcely be realized unless one visits these extensive warerooms, which contain the largest collection of miscellaneous furniture in this country.

— Mr. Thomas Eaton died at his home in Waltham last Monday. He was an old resident of that city. He was the father of Mr. John F. Eaton formerly of Woburn and of Mr. T. B. Eaton who established the Waltham Tribune a few years ago, and is now the owner and Editor of a daily at Taunton.

— A building at Walnut Hill station filled with hay was burned last Tuesday afternoon. An alarm was rung in from box 42 and the firemen responded, but the building and contents were totally consumed. The former was owned by the B. & M. RR. Co., and the latter by Charles P. Brown. No insurance.

— Among the Vets who have been in Woburn this week is A. B. Prince, a member of Farragutt Post, 125, of Lincoln, Nebraska. He was a Commissioned Officer on the Gunboat Nipsic in the Charleston blockade. Wishing to see active service he was transferred to the U. S. Monitor Nahant. He is a brother of Mrs. J. T. Freeman of Salem street.

— Comrade Jacob M. Ellis is doing the handsome thing by Comrades from Vermont and other places at his hospitable residence on Salem street. No Veterans ever have to go begging when Mr. J. M. Ellis is around, and for those who fought to preserve this glorious old Union of ours he has the warmest kind of a place in his heart.

— William Monahan, who lived on Conn street in this city, in response to the advice of his sons doing business there, started for Titusville, Pa., last Monday and when not far from No. Adams fell between the cars and was so badly injured that he died while being taken to the hospital. Members of his family reside here.

— The JOURNAL Book and Job office is complete in all its appointments and has the reputation of turning out as fine work and as much of it as any printing establishment in Middlesex county. It is fully supplied with presses, all the latest styles of type, stock and men to use them, and gentlemen, your work is respectfully solicited. —tf.

— Mr. William S. Kellen of Sidney, Ohio, is visiting at the residence of Mr. Josiah Leathe. He is a brother of Mrs. Leathe, and has not been here for over 30 years. Having served in a Ohio Regiment in the Rebellion he came on to attend the National G. A. R. Encampment in Boston this week and to visit relatives and former friends at the same time.

— Post 33 entertained in royal style at G. A. R. Hall quite a number of visiting Comrades from Minnesota, Vermont and other sections last evening. There was feasting, music, postprandial oratory and other exceedingly pleasant exercises which the Comrades from abroad enjoyed to the full. It was one of the pleasantest seances Post 33 have ever held.

— There is a fair prospect for lower railroad fares between No. Woburn and Boston. Supt. Sanborn saw the justice of the position of the petitioners at a glance and the encouragement which they received from him was very gratifying. The change in Superintendents of the Southern Division of the Boston & Maine Railroad wasn't a bad thing for Woburn, by any means.

— No Post in the immense G. A. R. procession made a more attractive appearance than Burbank Post No. 33, of Woburn, and no one received more compliments. In their white trowsers, blue frocks, natty canes, and officers with new swords, equipments and badges, they looked as neat as a pin and were a conspicuous mark in the parade. No. 33 acquitted themselves handsomely.

— Mr. Fred Rogers of the First National Bank has been in the habit along back of running down to Newport, the ne plus ultra of fashionable watering places, of Saturday nights and spending Sunday there. Cashier Day's inclinations have run considerably in that direction too and between them both they manage to contribute quite a respectable sized mite to the vast accumulalation of wealth of that favorite spa during the run of the season.

— Mr. E. N. Blake returned from Bar Harbor on Sunday morning. He and his daughter enjoyed their visit at that very fashionable seaside resort—not so much the fashion there—but the sea views, cool breezes, and pleasing landscapes of Mt. Desert. A party of gentlemen stopping at the hotel where Mr. Blake and daughter were chartered a small steamer and took a long sail down the coast which was one of the pleasantest features of the visit. Nature and art together have made an exceedingly attractive watering place of Bar Harbor.

— Rev. Lyman Bartlett, Missionery in Smyrna, delivered a very interesting discourse in the lecture room of the First Congregational Church, this city, last Wednesday evening. He has been at Smyrna about five years and had previously served 17 years in Asia Minor, where he had spiritual charge of the district of country in which were located the "seven churches of Asia" founded by the Apostles. His manner and matter were very entertaining and instructive.

— It is currently reported that Mr. Lawrence Reade will be a candidate for Mayor this fall providing Mayor Johnson absolutely declines a re-election. Mr. Reade would make a good Mayor. He has the business ability, the push, the liberality which would make his administration of municipal affairs a great success. It is currently reported too that Mr. Thomas Salmon will be one of Mr. Reade's strongest and most active supporters. Mr. Salmon is a political power in this city.

— When Janitor John Connolly went into the lodging room of the city lock-up Wednesday morning to rouse Mr. John Rainor he found him dead. He went into the room in a sick, exhausted condition the afternoon before, but what time he died was not known. He was 64 years old, and his home was at Franklin Falls, N. H. His son came from that place on Thursday and took the remains of his father to his home. Medical Examiner March said he died from natural causes.

— The spacious addition to Mr. C. M. Munroe's store is nearly completed and everything is being settled into business order rapidly. The addition is about equal in square feet to the old store and when they come to be made one room of there can't be produced in Woburn better quarters to sell clothing and other goods of the kind at than it is. Naturally Mr. Munroe feels very much elated with his new store. Mr. Webster Woodman, salesman, is also pleased with the material increase of room to do business in.

— Mr. Charles March, son of Rev. Dr. March, came on from Washington last Saturday and is now visiting his father, and brother Dr. Daniel March at Winchester. He is employed in the Pension Bureau of the Department of the Interior, to which he went (without solicitation) from a responsible business situation in Chicago, and with which he is well pleased. Years ago he lived in Woburn and at one time did reporting for the JOURNAL. He expects to remain here and about here until the fore part of next week.

— The Massachusetts Horticultural Society will hold their annual exhibition of plants and flowers at Music Hall, Boston, on Aug. 19-22, beginning on Tuesday next and ending on the following Friday. Their published list of general and special prizes is a large one, and the exhibition is expected to be one of the best ever given by the Society. A great many enties have been made and contributions of rare plants and choice flowers and fruits have come from all sections of the country. The list contains many floral and vegetable products new to the public here. Mr. P. G. Hanson of this city is a member of the Committee on Vegetables.

— Hon. E. D. and Mrs. Hayden of Academy Hill returned last week from a two months trip into the extreme northwestern boundary of Uncle Sam's possessions which of course included Alaska and other semi-polar regions, with all of which they were interested and pleased. They spent consideral time in the National Park which, Mr. Hayden says, will be much more attractive a couple of years hence than now, although it is well worth a trip and visit at the present time. Mr. and Mrs. Hayden were well all the time of their absence and enjoyed their prospecting tour very much; but both were glad to get back home again and exchange hotel for home life and comforts.

— Mr. John P. Delaney is Superintendent of the big leather factory of Loring and Avery in Winchester, while a couple of years ago we could almost have sworn he was a farmer and the most successful cultivator of vegetables on the wild and raging Abberjona. (There were excellent reasons for that opinion). On yesterday morning we received a communication from Mr. Delaney with the contents of which we were delighted. That paragraph marked "V" just fitted into a very empty pocket-book of ours and gave a calm, contented tinge to our feelings which lasted all that day and a part of the next. We thank Mr. J. P. D. for his thoughtfulness, and this is a receipt for the same.

— Yesterday President John R. Carter, in behalf of the Woburn Y. M. C. A., presented to Mrs. Burgess, widow of the late Frank S. Burgess, a "Memorial Token," executed by the famous Burdett Brothers of Burdett's Business College in Boston, in the best style of which they are masters. At the top of the parchment is "Memorial Token," below which is a square space containing the name of the deceased, while on the four sides of the square are wrought the names of the Directors of the Association. Mr. Burgess was an honored member of the Woburn Y. M. C. A. and it was by official authority that the beautiful and appropriate "Token" was made and presented to Mrs. Burgess. It is believed that the Burdetts, who are experts in designing and executing pieces of this character, never did a finer stroke of pen work than the one under consideration.

— The wife and children of Rev. F. W. March of Syria, who are living for the present with Mrs. March's parents at Auburndale, came over yesterday and visited Rev. Dr. March at his home at Deacon G. R. Gage's on Montvale Ave. In the evening a reception, quite informal and neighborly, was given to Mrs. March in the parlors of the Gage residence which was attended by quite a number of friends of the families and people interested in foreign missionary work. Mrs. March and her children arrived from Syria a few weeks ago and look for the husband and father, who is Rev. Dr. March's son, to come over next fall. It is expected that the family will remain in this side of the world a year or so, and at the close of their visit Rev. Mr. March will resume missionary work in that distant land. The reception was a very pleasant affair.

— At a meeting held last week the School Board accepted E. H. Lounsbury's resignation as Master of the Cummings school which put a period to that estimable gentleman's connection with the educational institutions of this city. The salary question was the rock on which the parties split and went apart. Master Lounsbury exacted a certain amount of increase of salary as a condition of his remaining longer at the head of the Cummings school. The Board offered to meet the gentleman part way and allow him an advance of a sum something less than his offer. To make a long story short, the two sides to the question did not come to terms, and result is, Mr. Lounsbury, a most capable and popular teacher with his pupils, their parents, and the Board, has stepped down and out of the Woburn school business. He will begin the study of Blackstone at an early day and diligently prosecute the study of the science until he becomes a firstclass lawyer.

The fashions of washing are many. Some nations pound the clothing; some dip them into boiling springs; woodsmen hang theirs in running brooks, while sailors tow their clothing behind sailing ships, after covering it with salt water soap. None of these methods are really effective. A cleanly and easy wash can best be had with Brussels soap, which, like DeWitt Talmage, is a foe to dirt.

G. A. R. Banquet.

After Post 161, G. A. R., returned from the great parade in Boston on Tuesday evening, in which they took part, a banquet was given at their hall in Savings Bank building, at which Dr. Charles F. Russell of Washington, D. C., formerly of Sharpsburg, Va., who is the personal guest of Dr. Frank W. Graves and Capt. John P. Crane, of this city, was the guest. It was a very pleasant affair, which everyone enjoyed, and was especially so to Dr. Russell.

Commander Pinkham presided at the tables, which were well supplied with an excellent supper by Caterer Patten of this city. After a protracted march over the Boston pavements with but small chance to refresh the inner man with the necessaries of life the viands of which the banquet was composed were keenly relished and the rapidity with which they disappeared was highly complimentary to the caterer.

After the meal there were speeches which helped round out the evening in good shape. The speakers were Capt. Ed. F. Wyer, Dr. Frank W. Graves, Major H. C. Hall, J. Fred. Leslie, J. H. Nason, George Fowle, Comrade Chapman of Hubbardston, Comrade Libby of Maine, who was a guest of Mr. Nason, and Dr. Russell.

Dr. Russell, the Post's guest for the evening, served gallantly in the Confederate army in Stuart's famous cavalry and did his best in some 30 or more pitched battles to beat the Yankees, but when the war was over and the South found they had got the worst of it the Doctor, like any other sensible man, accepted the situation and now rallies under the Stars and Stripes as loyally as any Northerner. That is evidence of good sense.

This is the Doctor's first visit to the North and he is highly pleased with all he has seen since coming to Boston and Woburn. Two or three years ago he entertained Dr. Graves and Capt. Crane at his home in the South, in return for which he is the guest of those gentlemen here.

Dr. Russell is an intelligent gentleman, a good talker, and an agreeable companion at a banquet.

ALDERMEN.

A special meeting of the Board of Aldermen was held Saturday evening, all the members being present. An election for an Alderman in Ward 5 was ordered to take place Tuesday, Aug. 26. The appropriation of $200 for the reunion of the 39th Massachusetts Infantry Association was passed, the same to be expended under the direction of the committee of that body. Chief Engineer Ferrin nominated C. F. Driscoll and Griffin Durgin as members of Hose 6, and William Blaisdell a member of Hose 2. Confirmed. Final action was taken on the relocation of the line of Montvale Avenue near Sherman Place.

"Don't Care to Eat."

It is with the greatest confidence that Hood's Sarsaparilla is recommended for loss of appetite, indigestion, sick headache, and similar troubles. This medicine gently tones the stomach, assists digestion, and makes one "real hungry." Persons in delicate health, after taking Hood's Sarsaparilla a few days, find themselves longing for and eating the plainest food with unexpected relish.

Leather Prices Up.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—A new schedule of prices is to be issued by the Newark leather manufacturers today, increasing prices 10 per cent all round.

The manufacturers say the increase is made necessary by the advance in the duties on green hides and oils.—Despatch.

Leather making is enjoying a boom just now. The face of every Woburn manufacturer one meets is wreathed all over with smiles. They are happy.

BY THE GENERAL SECRETARY.

Tuesday evening, Aug. 19, the Directors will meet.

Have you invested? If not we have a few shares yet, which you can obtain.

Next Sunday afternoon at 4 the men's meeting. Every man in the city invited to be present.

The Young Men's Christian Association is a grand investment for business men. It is worth a great deal for them to know that the young men who are growing up behind their desks and counters, and upon whom responsibility and trust must needs be laid, are surrounded by good influences outside of business hours, that they are not necessarily exposed to temptations to gambling and dissipation. The young man who avails himself of the opportunities offered by the Young Men's Christian Association, who builds up his health, and develops his physical strength by judicious exercise in the gymnasium, and extends his mental equipment by attendance at the classes and lectures, is necessarily a better man, a more valuable man in dollars and cents, than he who dawdles his leisure time over a billiard table in an unwholesome saloon, or sits up all night to study the fitful fortunes of a poker deck. There is the possibility of magnificent manhood in the average young man who is turned loose in our cities, and it is to the interest of all, who are compelled to depend upon these young men, to facilitate in every way the full development of their physical and mental powers, and the growth of their moral nature.

A tramp who stole a box of Brussels soap concealed his identity by washing himself with a cake of it.

A correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat tells how to keep bouquets fresh for several days: "In the first place I put a little salt, a tablespoonful or more, in the bottom of the vase. Then fill the vase with ice broken into pieces the size of a walnut. On this I put the bouquet, the same as you put the stems into a glass of water. I never put any water in the vase, however. Enough comes from the melting ice and salt."

The Death of Mr. O'Reilly.

The sudden death of Mr. John Boyle O'Reilly, the gifted editor of the Pilot, will be a painful surprise to the community, all the greater because Mr. O'Reilly's well known devotion to outdoor life and his rare physical vigor gave every outward promise that he would live beyond the allotted three score years and ten. The picturesque circumstances attending Mr. O'Reilly's coming to this country made him an interesting figure from the first, and it was not long before he demonstrated that he possessed talent of a high order. Besides his exquisite poetry, through which he is best known to the general public, his editorial work in connection with the Pilot has done much to give that journal the wide range of influence which it enjoys among the people of Mr. O'Reilly's race and faith in the towns and cities of New England. Mr. O'Reilly had the true poetic instinct. He knew how to touch the chords of humanity. He was unquestionably one of the most admired of the younger poets of America, and many of his songs hold a position in the popular heart from which the lapse of years will find it very difficult to displace them. His later poems suggested a ripening genius, and a capacity for the most serious kinds of work, with little or no abatement of the poet's youthful ardor. Mr. O'Reilly's sudden and untimely death is profoundly to be regretted.—Boston Journal.

Italy desires a new steamship line between Naples and London, and according to the prevalent European policy it proposes to establish one by means of an annual subsidy of $70,000. That is, this single Italian line is to receive a subsidy almost as large as the aggregate amount expended by our own great, rich and generous Government for its foreign mail service on all the vessels flying the American flag. Yet there are people who profess to wonder that even little Italy should be outstripping us in competition for the world's carrying trade.

To Nervous Debilitated Men.

If you will send your address, we will mail you our illustrated pamphlet explaining all about Dr. Dye's Celebrated Electro-Voltaic Belt and Appliances, and their charming effects upon the nervous debilitated system, and how they will quickly restore you to vigor and manhood. If you are thus afflicted, we will send you a Belt and Appliances on a trial. Pamphlet free.

The Methodist church at Mayville, N. Y., is raising its debt of $600 by keeping a summer boarding house at Chautauqua. One member of the church had charge of the house during July, and another is in care of it during August. The waiters are the belles of Mayville, who have volunteered for the service. Two new ones come every week, and the others go home for a rest. Extra volunteers do the work on Sunday. The cook is the only paid servant. Even the provisions are contributed, and plenty of young men are around to do the "toting" and heavy work for nothing.

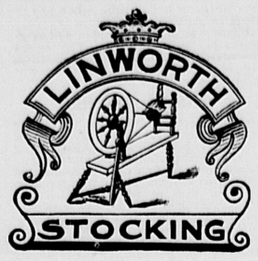
In answers to correspondents in an English paper for ladies, intending travelers to this country are warned not to try to wear out their old clothes while in America. "Ill-made gowns in the modes of a past season are not to be thought of in America, where women dress well. Not only do they buy good, suitable and fashionable clothes, but they understand exactly how to put them on, and make it a matter of consequence to do so well."

"Have you washed your feet?" You think this is a queer question to ask, but it is one that many Mammas have got in the habit of asking the boys and girls as "Have you washed your hands?"

And Why? Because it has been almost impossible to get Stockings that would'nt crock and fade.

But alas! for Pearline.

We have got a Line of Stock-



ings Worth much more than many so called "Fast Blacks," which will please the Mammas and the boys and girls as well, and not cost any more. Sizes to fit everybody from baby to grandmamma.

Pearline has its place but it will not have to be used to washout the stains left by the "LINWORTH."

A good many Winchester people who have been taking their summer outing are beginning to crawl back home tired and pretty well worn out with "resting."

Miss Marston, one of Winchester's most accomplished school teachers, is at Limington, York county, Me. It is a nice quiet old town to do summer resting in.

Mr. William Nelson, a prominent young man of this town and a member of Rumford Hose Co., No. 4, started from here yesterday afternoon for Denver, Colorado, where he intends to go into business for himself.

The pulpit of the Congregational Church will be filled as follows the rest of this month while pastor Newton is away on his vacation: 17, Rev. Dr. J. L. Jenkins of Pittsfield; 24, Rev. Charles H. Percival of Racine, Wis.; 31, Rev. C. B. Rice of Danvers.

Boston Herald: Messrs. Twombly & Sons, the well-known Boston florists, have, in decorating the Presidential suite, done so artistic and beautiful a piece of work as to give them an even stronger claim than before to the title of "Presidential decorators." It will be remembered that Mr. Twombly, Sr., has many times visited the White House and, done very beautiful work there. Hence, it was very appropriate that the house of which he is the head should be given the contract for decorating the beautiful apartments which President Harrison is to occupy during his coming visit to Boston.

There's a peculiar advertisement on our local page this week about "A Fast Black." On first glance we thought it was advertising some horse race, but when we found it was booming ladies' fast black hose at 5c. a pair, we realized that it was indeed an advertisement peculiar unto itself. Read it carefully.

A Brooklyn manufacturer paid a bill without a murmur the other day simply on account of the way it was worded. His engineer found that the hot water pump would not work and sent for a machinist. The latter bothered with it half a day and said it must come apart. This meant a stoppage of the factory for a long time. It was suggested that a neighboring engineer be sent for, as he was a sort of genius in the matter of machinery. He came, and after studying the pump a while he took a hammer and gave three sharp raps over the valve. "I reckon she'll go now," he quietly said, and putting on steam "she" did go. The next day, says the manufacturer, I received a bill from him for $25.50. The price amazed me, but when I had examined the items I drew a check at once. The bill read this way: "Messrs. Blank & Co., Dr. to John Smith. For fixing pump, fifty cents. For knowing how, $25." Had he charged me $25.50 for fixing the pump I should have considered it exorbitant. But fifty cents was reasonable, and I recognize the value of knowledge, so I paid and said nothing.

Jones—"Hello, Brown! See that man going down the street with his pockets bulging out like a balloon?" Brown—"Yes, who is he?" Jones—"Why, that's Jenkins, and that's money that his wife saved for him in economizing by using Brussels soap."

Gen. J. B. Weaver has been prevailed upon to accept the Democratic nomination for Congress in the Seventh Iowa District. There has been a severe drouth in the district and the farmers have been bothered by grasshoppers, and in view of these calamities Gen. Weaver has strong hopes that the district may go Democratic, though it is normally Republican. Weaver is an adept at attributing drouths and grasshoppers and hog cholera and such things to Republican protection.

Having failed to impress his party friends with the power of his oratory, Congressman Enloe now proposes to see what his skill as a pugilist will do. Mr. Enloe has excellent precedents for believing that nobody is quite so much admired as a good bruiser by the Democratic party.

"They are not paying much attention to you, Uncle Pete," said the little girl at the party. "I guess they have forgot you're our relation." "Yes, child," answered Uncle Pete, crossing one leg over the other so as to hide a small patch on the under knee, "no; they seem to be remembering it right along."

The preparation which most closely resembles mother's milk is confessedly the best food for babes, and the preparation which is most grateful and nourishing to the delicate organism of the invalid or convalescent is destined to win the favor and confidence of the medical profession and the public. PROFESSIONAL BOUNCERS.

They Ejected Two Loafers from a Theatre Without Creating a Panic.

"There came near being a riot at the theatre to-night," said a gentleman dropping into the Chicago club the other evening. "A man was annoying people seated near him, and they put him out. The house was crowded, and the row came near creating a panic. Women screamed, men jumped in and the play was temporarily stopped."

"It's a wonder there wasn't a panic," replied an old time first nighter who was present. "Nothing is more dangerous than any sort of commotion in a theatre. But I suppose this row was all caused by reason of the freshness of the men who went to eject the disturber. There's a right way and a wrong way to do such things. The audience needn't have been alarmed at all if it had been properly done. Do you remember Billy Emmett?"

"No, who was he?"

"Billy? Oh, he was the manager at one time of the old Academy and at another of the Olympic theatre. He's dead now, poor fellow! Well, Billy would have had the disturbing party out of that theatre without any trouble whatever. In fact, he'd have made it rather a diversion for the audience.

"You see Billy had a great reverence for women. He never would let a lady stand in his house. If he couldn't give her a seat he wouldn't sell her a ticket. He wouldn't tolerate a tough or a masher. If one ever made the slightest play in Billy's house out he went. No lady could be insulted or even coarsely treated where he was.

"But to come to the question of putting a man out. I remember once at the Olympic a gentleman came out to the box office window and complained to the treasurer that there were two men seated behind him and his wife who persisted in chewing tobacco and expectorating under the seat, much to the damage of the lady's dress. 'I have asked them to stop,' the gentleman continued, 'but they refuse to do so.'

"'What's that?' said Billy, who was in the office. 'Well, they will stop, sir, you can depend on that. They can't stay in my theatre at all. Not a minute. Just wait a second.'

"Billy rushed into the house, located the two loafers and came back to the door, where he summoned his two 'bouncers.' One of 'em, I remember, was a muscular fellow named Thurston. He was an ex-prize fighter and a corker. The other was an all round athlete. He put them on to the two men and gave them their cue.

"A few moments later the curtain fell on an act, and Billy, urbane and debonair, appeared in front of it.

"'Ladies and gentlemen,' he said, 'I regret to inform you that there are two loafers sitting right over there who have annoyed the lady in front of them by expectorating tobacco upon her dress. Now they are going to leave the house. They have declined to go, and are going to be put out. Keep your seats, please, and don't be excited.'

"As Billy finished Thurston and his assistant walked down the aisle, stepped into the row behind the two toughs, leaned over and told them to leave the theatre. Both the loafers were big, husky brutes and they refused.

"'We'll go if yer can put us out,' they said, and clutched the arms of their chairs. That was enough. Thurston and the other fellow just stooped over, reached under the chairs, gave one mighty heave and up came the whole aggregation—toughs, chairs and all—the screws pulled right loose from the wood. They carried the whole lot up the aisle, the toughs struggling in vain, out the door and shot the two men, chairs and all, into the center of Clark street with the force of a catapult. Everybody applauded and laughed and the show went on.

"That showed Billy Emmett's tact. If he had not explained to the audience there would have been danger of a free fight, a panic or what not. People always interfere in a row they don't understand and a crowded theatre where there are women is a mighty dangerous place to have one."—Chicago Mail.

Several Private Secretaries.

The private secretaries of Secretaries Blaine, Proctor and Noble are merely clerks, and do not have the swing that some of the others have. Louis A. Dent, who attends to the correspondence of Secretary Blaine, is a young man, a son of the late Gen. Josiah Dent, of this city. For many years Mr. Blaine had a private secretary who was one in fact. This was Mr. Thomas H. Sherman, who was the right hand of Mr. Blaine for many years. He is now consul general to Liverpool, having been appointed to that office by President Harrison.—Chatter.

Luck in Orchids.

The chance of finding a bit of superbum in a bundle of the ordinary kind lends peculiar excitement to a sale of these plants. Such luck first occurred to Mr. Bath in Stevens' auction rooms. He paid half a crown for a very weakly fragment, brought it round, flowered it and received a prize for good gardening in the shape of £72, cheerfully paid by Sir Trevor Lawrence for a plant unique at that time.—Longman's Magazine.

The Post describes Federal interference with elections as "an innovation." It is an innovation, then, which is twenty years old, as illustrated in the Federal Supervisors law, and we have the word of so good a Democrat as ex-Secretary Whitney for the statement that it has worked wonderfully well.

The New York Evening Post is at its old trick of quoting parts of sentences from the columns of Republican papers and applying them to different subjects from those in connection with which they were used. It is a favorite trick with the Post, but one which long ago forfeited its reputation as a fair disputant.

ELM TREE WORSHIPERS.

For Four Centuries the New Englanders Have Cultivated and Nurtured it.

The elm tree is dear to the heart of the New Englander. No other tree is associated in his mind with the idea of home. It forms the most remarkable feature of the domestic New England landscape, and in no part of the country is there a tree which occupies the same position in the affection of the people as the elm does in that of the inhabitants of New England.

The people who settled the shores of Massachusetts bay brought with them the remembrance of the elm trees, which were such an important and conspicuous feature in the country where they had been bred; and it is not surprising that they sought to reproduce in the new country something of the old by planting by their doors the most familiar of the English "roof trees." So the habit grew of setting an elm tree close by the home hewn out in the wilderness, and these house trees, planted by the early settlers of New England or by their descendants of the early generations, are the oldest and noblest trees which have been planted by man in North America.

The affection for the elm tree, thus early developed in the New England heart, often saved it when the land was being cleared for cultivation; and when roads were made and provided with trees, as they were more generally in New England a hundred years ago than they are now, the elm naturally was selected to shade the traveler from the burning sun of summer. The noble stem supporting the broad head of light and pendulous branches, the delicate spray, indescribably beautiful in winter, and the abundant foliage of summer make the American elm one of the most desirable roadside trees when placed in a suitable situation, and a fitting ornament to stand by the stateliest mansion or the humblest farm house.

The American elm will not live to a great age or develop all its beauty in every situation. It dreads drought and starves in poor soil; its home is on fertile intervales along streams and where plant food is never lacking. The elms which grew to such great size by the farm houses of New England owed their stature to the nourishment stolen from the neighboring garden or to the moisture drawn from the well which its branches shaded. Thus they grew to great size and lived out their span of life, which at best is not very great, for the elm is a fast growing tree and rarely lives during a longer period than two centuries or two centuries and a half. The most vigorous of them begin to show the first signs of decay before they have seen a century and a half go by, and an elm a hundred years old in perfect health is now difficult to find except on some exceptionally fertile river lands like those which border the upper Connecticut.

The elm is one of the best of trees to plant where the soil is deep and rich and where moisture is abundant and constant; it is one of the least desirable of all trees to set by the side of city streets, where plant food is always lacking and where moisture is quickly carried off by the artificial drainage of road bed and service pipes. Give it a fair chance and the American elm will hold its own against any tree in the world in its own peculiar light and graceful beauty; but unless all the conditions favor it there is no tree less satisfactory, and it should not be planted unless these conditions can be supplied.—Garden and Forest.

Normandy Butter Adulterated.

The British vice counsel at Caen in his last report says that, in spite of the special laws adopted very recently against the fraudulent practices of the butter dealers and merchants in largely introducing various fatty compounds to mix with the pure butter, this fraud has been and is still being carried on extensively, and the exporters have for some time past been introducing the hitherto excellent Normandy butter to the English market largely adulterated with the compounds. A syndicate of the butter merchants of northern France has been formed, and it has recently issued an appeal to all the honest butter merchants to endeavor to avert this disaster to the trade through the decrease of the exportation to foreign markets, attributable to the adulteration of the hitherto pure butter exported. The export of Normandy butter in 1882 to the English markets alone amounted to the value of 89,900,000f., while in the year 1887 it had fallen to 58,100,000f., and since the latter year there has been a still further decrease. The syndicate proposes, as a precautionary measure, that a new law shall be passed to oblige the makers of the compound to give it some coloring matter other than the hue of butter in its unadulterated natural state, so that it will then be impossible to mix it with the pure article without showing some trace of margarine. This adulteration of butter is extensively carried on in Caen.

New Use of Tinfoil.

A novel treatment of ingrowing toenails has been introduced in France. The medium employed is tinfoil, such as is used for enveloping chocolate and other food products. A single or double sheet of the tinfoil is introduced between the nail and the ulcerated tissues beneath by the aid of an instrument with a thin blade. The tinfoil is kept in place by wax, which is moulded over the parts. The beneficial effects produced are attributed to the chemical rather than to the mechanical action of the tinfoil.—Exchange.

OUR GARDEN BERRIES.

Strawberries are the first comes ripe,
And truly are the best;
Their flavor is so very fine
They far excel the rest.
The juicy rasp comes next along,
And truly they are fine;
They may be used for common sauce
Or turned into good wine.
Of currants we have different kinds;
There's black and red and white;
But cherry currants are the best;
On them all do unite.
Gooseberries should not be forgot
For they are also good;
And they come of a noble race;
Their character has stood.
We need not to the market go,
Nor call on him who carries,
But we can to our garden go
And get a mess of berries.

July, 1890.

AN APPENDIX.

We now are using from the place
Some very fine potatoes,
And very soon we hope to pick
Some juicy ripe tomatoes.
Of peas and beans we've had enough,
And still we have them growing,
Though some of them are fully ripe
There's others only blowing.
Our corn is also growing fast,
And soon we shall be able
To get some sweet delicious ears
For food upon our table.
There's many other things we raise
We wish not here to mention;
To give a lengthy full report
It is not our intention.—"

A FAST BLACK.

The essential difference between a fast black horse, and our fast black Hosiery is, that while both travel fast, the one costs $500, while the other only costs 25 cents, although one is as fast a black in color as the other. Our Fast Black Hosiery at 25 cents we guarantee to be permanently black, and they are a representative bargain at that price.

In all of the regular lines of Hosiery our prices range from 5 cents a pair upwards.

These 5-cents-per-pair hose are wonderful sellers, as they represent superlative value.

THE TEN LEPERS.

LESSON VII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 17.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xvii, 11-19. Commit Verses, 15-17—Golden Text, Luke xvii, 17—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

11. "And it came to pass, as He went to Jerusalem." The time draws nigh for Him to be offered up, and "to Jerusalem" is His daily thought, for He Himself said, "It cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem" (chap. xiii, 33); "When the time was come that He should be received up He steadfastly set His face to go to Jerusalem;" "He went through the cities and villages, teaching and journeying toward Jerusalem;" "Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of Man shall be accomplished" (chap. ix, 51; xiii, 22; xviii, 31). At Jerusalem He was to finish the work which the Father had given him to do, and He was pressing on to finish that work. His grand and faithful follower, the apostle Paul, had the same spirit when he said concerning bonds and afflictions, "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy" (Acts xx, 24). We do not know just where our work shall end, nor when it shall be finished, so that the only safe way is to be always found doing unto Him, and with our might, what our hands find to do.

12. "And as He entered into a certain village, there met Him ten men that were lepers, which stood afar off." Utterly unclean, dwelling alone, without the camp (or village, or city), how sad was the condition of these poor men (Lev. xiii., 44-46). Afar off from human help, and sympathy, and friendship; living and yet dead to all the ordinary relationships of life. Consider the leprosy of Miriam, Naaman, Gehazi, Uzziah and the four men at the gate of Samaria (Num. xii; II Kings v, 7; xv, 5). Perhaps there is no more forcible representation of sin and the sinner in the whole Bible than that of the leper and his leprosy. Let the teacher who would, with the greatest profit, present this lesson study carefully Lev. xiii and xiv and read Mackintosh's notes on the same.

13. "And they lifted up their voices and said, Jesus, Master, have mercy on us!" They made no profession; they made no promises; they knew they had nothing but leprosy, and as poor, unclean, cast out lepers they could only beg for mercy, and this they did. What a happy day it was for them when Jesus came their way. They had heard of Him; they heard of the healing of other lepers by His gracious powers. This was their opportunity, and they seize it. How wise they were. What a contrast to the man in our lesson who, like many today, believed in a larger hope—a possibility of salvation after death—and so after he died cried, "Father Abraham, have mercy on me!" How vain was his cry.

14. "Go shew yourselves unto the priests. And it came to pass that as they went, they were cleansed." Thus He spake unto them, not disregarding nor setting aside the law, for He came not to destroy but to fulfill the law, but told them to do as commanded in the law (Lev. xiii, 2; xiv, 2). They might have reasoned and argued and have said: Master, the priests cannot help us, the law cannot heal us; we do not need to find out whether we are lepers or not; we know we are; it is mercy we ask for from Thee, who alone canst heal us. But they did not argue, they obeyed and went; His word was sufficient; and as they went they were cleansed. Reasoning and arguing would have only hindered; obedience brought the blessing.

15. "And one of them, when he saw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God." As obediently he went at the Lord's command, he finds himself a new man as to his body; he is clean, he is whole, he is no longer a leper; no longer shall he be cut off from home and friends; that very day he becomes a part of the world again, with its pleasures and employments, instead of being an outcast. And what is now his first thought? Gratitude to the Lord who healed him. The goodness of God has led him to repentance (Rom. ii, 4), and with a loud voice he makes it known. His heart is full, and with his voice he utters its abundance. He seems to believe that Jesus is God, and he gives God the glory. He is neither afraid nor ashamed to make it known with a loud voice that God has wrought a great work on him.

16. "And fell down on his face at His feet, giving Him thanks: and he was a Samaritan." Here is humility, gratitude, reverence and worship. Here is the proper place for every penitent sinner—"on his face, at Jesus' feet." And the proper place for every saved sinner who is teachable is "at the feet of Jesus, hearing His word" (chap. x, 39). The fact that this man was a Samaritan reminds us of the statement that "The Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans" (John iv, 9). But that, no doubt, refers to self righteous, moral, clean Jews. When a Jew found himself a leper, he saw himself no better than a Samaritan leper; they were all in the same sad case, with nothing to boast of but their leprosy, nothing to make one think himself better than another. A deep conviction of sin is one of the grandest things to take away all pride, and makes us see that in God's sight all are sinners together.

17. "And Jesus answering said, Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine?" Is it possible that with returning health there came also old prejudices and Jewish pride of birth, and as they saw this poor Samaritan glorifying God did they despise him as they kept on their way to their priests? It certainly looks that way.

18. "There are not found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger." He came unto His own, and His own received Him not, but as many as received Him to them gave He the right or privilege to become the sons of God (John i, 11, 12). Out of all the multitudes upon whom He conferred healing of the body we are not told how many or how few truly received Him and gave glory to God, but when we remember that only about 120 of all those gathered in Jerusalem at the passover waited together for the baptism of the Holy Ghost (Acts i, 15) we are compelled to think that not even one in ten of the multitudes He healed ever became His true disciples. And as we read of "this stranger" alone returning to glorify God, are we not reminded of the Roman centurion of whom Jesus said, "Verily, I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." And of the woman of Tyre and Sidon to whom He said, "O woman, great is thy faith" (Matt. viii, 10; xv, 28).

19. "And He said unto him, Arise, go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole." Or, as in the margin of the R. V., "Thy faith hath saved thee." Happy man! He has now not only a clean body, but a clean, blood washed soul. Oh! how much the others missed by their ingratitude.

Eupepsy.

THE KISSING HABIT.

What can be purer, tell me, or so trustful and true as this—
The fluttering kiss of a baby meeting its mother's kiss?
Kisses that leave a memory enduring through after years,
Embodying love and tenderness, unfettered by doubts and fears.
It is on her baby's kisses the heart of the mother lives,
Lavishing on its rosebud mouth the love she so freely gives;
Wasting a wealth of tenderness that only a mother knows,
The past and future united in the kisses she bestows.

What is more blissful, tell me, than the kisses that love has blessed,
The kiss of a youth and maiden, his lips upon her lips pressed?
When they kiss for their love's sake only, simply its sweets to taste
And waken their throbbing pulses, in the luxury of waste,
Till they'd barter the world and its riches, think all well lost, for this—
To know the passionate sweetness that is merged in a lover's kiss,
One kiss that is longer than twenty, twenty than one more brief,
Making their lives all sunshine—unshadowed by dread or grief.

What is more sacred, tell me, than the kisses so softly pressed
On the lips of an aged mother by those her heart loves best?
Her children gathered about her, to woman and manhood grown,
The kiss of filial affection, hers always, and hers alone.
A mother's love of a lifetime, its devotion she deems repaid
In kisses of reverence holy, on her trembling lips thus laid;
They brighten and cheer her pathway that leads to eternal peace,
And comfort the heart so faithful, till its throbbings forever cease.

Say not kisses are out of fashion or that they have been tabooed;
Take back the sweeping assertion and all that the words include.
The kisses of sister and mother, the kisses of lovers true,
The kisses of father and brother, think what they may mean to you.'
—F. H. Curtiss in Good Housekeeping.

Death to Insects.

Professor Lintner, New York state entomologist, has made a microscopic examination of the insect collections of a single electric light, and estimates that the debris which he inspected represented 33,000 insects. As many of the smaller forms of insect life probably constituted the larger portion of those attracted to destruction by the light, he believes that the average number of insects destroyed in a night by a single electric light is nearly 100,000.

The larger portion of Professor Lintner's specimen collection from one light consisted of minute gnats, midges, crane flies and similar small two winged insects. No mosquitoes were discovered among the victims, as they are not attracted to the lights. There were, however, large numbers of plant bugs, which are injurious to vegetation, particularly of one small species of a handsome green gassid, which feeds upon our grasses. A number of the moths and one of the leaf rollers which have made such havoc in our fruit trees were found, as well as other species of the same family. Professor Lintner in speaking of his examination said:

"I was sorry to see quite a number of the beautiful gauze wings among the heaps of the slain, as their larvæ are the aphis lions, which aid in keeping down phides or plant lice."

"The electric light," to quote Professor Lintner, "will undoubtedly prove an active agent in the reduction of insect pests, and also furnish entomologists with many rare specimens and with many species never before seen."

Memorial to Wendell Phillips.

The proposition to erect in this city a memorial hall of such a size and character as to appropriately indicate the extent of Boston's veneration for one of her most eminent citizens—Wendell Phillips—will undoubtedly call forth a quick and generous response. It is the intention to dedicate the hall in 1893. The building is to be essentially a "Cooper institute" for Boston, with memorial features that will make it stand to the period it commemorates as Pilgrim hall and Forefathers' monument to the first settlement of New England and as Faneuil hall and Bunker Hill monument to the revolutionary era.

The work of collecting the necessary money is in the hands of a legally corporated body, of which Gen. Benjamin F. Butler is president and Gov. J. Q. A. Brackett is treasurer, with a representative and efficient board of directors. There is already quite an amount assured toward the building and the advisory board having the matter in charge is now moving to secure the additional means, with particular and immediate reference to money for the land on which the building is to be erected.—Boston Herald.

Technical.

The technical speech of people in various trades and callings has an interest for others than dictionary makers. Even the most uninviting vocations have a language which attracts by virtue of its individuality. The freshest illustration of what I mean comes in this form: "Aren't you going to have a new dress for the ball?" was the inquiry addressed to the wife of an undertaker. "I can't afford it," was the dispirited reply; "you know it's between seasons." "What do you mean?" "Why, the pneumonia season is over, and the cholera infantum season hasn't begun."—Christian Union.

CURIOUS MAINE FISHING.

Nearly 200,000 Squirming Little Alewives Are Captured in a Day.

Damariscotta Mills, a small village about midway from the cities of Bath and Rockland, is one of the busiest places in Maine during the last of May and the first part of June. The cause of this unusual activity is the appearance of that migratory fish, the alewife.

I am informed that nowhere in the New England states are there as many of that kind of fish captured as here. There have been taken from the stream in one day upward of 200,000, and 150,000 in a day is not a rare catch.

This bony fish generally makes itself visible from May 1 to May 10 annually, and the run lasts about three weeks. There are three streams issuing out of the Damariscotta lake from a fall of sixty feet, and in these streams are arranged stout locks for the reception of the fish.

The fish come from the sea up the Damariscotta river, thence into a large bay, where on a bright sunny day millions of them may be seen "schooling," preparatory for making a run for the stream. Upon their arrival within the locks they are taken out of the water in dip nets and thrown into large square boxes—called traps—holding from 3,000 to 5,000, and then sold to the "smackers" for fifty cents a hundred, and carried by them in hods holding 200 to their carts to be transported to the smoke houses.

The hods are made from flour barrels by sawing off about one-third of the top and nailing two poles, one on each side, with cleats of board connecting to strengthen them. During a pleasant day, when there is a large run and a good many "countrymen," as the boys call them, are in, it is very amusing to watch the barefoot urchins follow up the hods to pick up the squirming fish as they flop off to the ground.

Two or three of these young Americas will be after one hod at a time, and the way they'll scramble to pick up the fallen fish will make the most sedate dyspeptic laugh, for they'll push, punch and fight like two dogs after a bone, stringing them on their fingers as fast as they gather them in. The young kids will stock more than 1,000 in this way some days, with the assistance of purloining a few from the traps and carts of the countrymen.

The smokers do not buy all of the fish, however; the surplus is sold to a Boothbay Harbor firm, which has a large salting and packing platform about 150 yards from the fishways.

Wooden aqueducts in which there is running water are erected, and connect the fishways with the packing establishment. The surplus fish are thrown into these aqueducts, and carried by the water to the packing platform, landing on a large wooden strainer, where they are salted and packed in barrels.

A barrel of salted alewives brings from $3.50 to $6 in the market, and the fish are, I am informed, shipped to Africa; also South America.

The smoking of the alewife is another process. As soon as they arrive at the smoke house the fish are placed in tubs holding 1,000, salted, and remain in that state usually three or four days, according to the temperature of the weather, after which they are washed and strung on sticks holding from 10 to 12 in number, and then hung on poles placed in the upper part of the house. Large holes are dug in the earth (there is no floor in the smoke house), around which large stones are placed, a fire is built out of logs and banked with sawdust, and the alewife is now prepared to receive its red coat in a few days.

When ready for market the first fish bring as high as $2 a hundred, but later in the season get down as low as 75 and 80 cents.—Cor. Boston Herald.

The Omnipotence of the Spoils System.

From the second election of Jackson, in 1832, down to the present time the doctrine that "public office is a party prize" has been the controling factor in the administration of the national government. The limited and imperfectly executed civil service act, so far as its effect on the great body of the common people is concerned, constitutes no exception. Every boy of 15 who hurrahed because his father voted for Jackson in 1832 had, if alive at the election in 1888, passed the age of threescore and ten. Every voter who cast a ballot in 1832 and lived to cast one in 1888 was then 77 or more years old. Even among this little band of aged men the administration of government upon any other plan was but a dim reminiscence of boyhood. Practically they were in the same condition as their younger fellow citizens.

The people of the United States, then, have no practical knowledge of any other method of administering government. The spoils system is like one of those customs which the common law declares equivalent to a statute, "a custom so old that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary." It is a part of the unwritten law, an unexpressed but understood provision of the constitution. It is interwoven with all their modes of political thought; it intermingles with all their motives of political action.—Walter M. Ferriss in Forum.

Salmon P. Chase's Industry.

No one can succeed without great labor. The question of men achieving prominent positions in the service of the country without hard work was the subject of a conversation engaged in by some old citizens of Columbus, and among the number was one who had served the state in the field and in the councils of the national congress. He maintained that no one could rise to eminence without putting to use all time at his command and employing himself as faithfully as if engaged in a profession or trade. He cited the case of Salmon P. Chase, and in his reference to this great man said the famous chief justice led a very simple and regular life. He was systematic and methodical in his habits. For many years it was his habit to rise at 6 o'clock in the summer and 7 o'clock in the winter.

Before he ate his breakfast he usually took a walk, returning home in time to meet his family at morning prayers. The breakfast hour was 8 o'clock, during which he conversed with his family and looked over the newspapers. At 9 o'clock he was ready for his private secretary in his library. Here he spent an hour in reading and dictating letters. At 10 o'clock he went to the Capitol and took his seat on the bench at 11 o'clock. Here he worked until 3 o'clock in the afternoon. After the adjournment he walked home and ate his lunch, which was nearly always crackers and tea. Then he worked on his opinions until 6 o'clock, when the big meal of the day was served. This meal was not like the one of the present day, but consisted of only three courses and dessert. After dinner he would amuse himself by some simple game of cards, but more often chess. At 8 o'clock he was at work again, which lasted far into the night.—Columbus (O.) Journal.

Eccentric Artemus Ward.

"I first met Artemus Ward in 1858," said J. Minor Griswold, the lecturer. "He was at that time city editor of The Cleveland Plaindealer. Ward was a long, lanky young man, with one eye and a hatchet face. He was then known as Charles Brown, but when he became famous he added an 'e' to his name. I think he was the most eccentric man I ever met, and his fear of death amounted to a monomania. He would get up in the night, disturbed by an awful fear of death, and wander around the house half clothed. I remember his knocking at my door at 3 o'clock one morning and asking if I thought that Shakespeare would have made a good city editor.

"Ward had a habit of guying everybody he met. Even his intimate friends were not safe from this habit. One evening we attended a country school exhibition together. The play was 'Pizarro.' In the course of the play one of the actors came upon the stage and exclaimed, 'How now, Gomez? On yonder hill we found an old Peruvian!'

"'He's right!' exclaimed Ward, leaning over toward me. 'I can recognize the old Peruvian by his bark.'

"On the way home Artemus wanted to drive the horse off the bank into the canal. He would have done so but for the fact that I grabbed the lines and prevented him from carrying out his design. He explained his action by saying that the horse was warm and needed cooling off."—New York Press.

Women as Talkers.

"Have you any idea how many words a person talks a minute?" said a stenographer. "There is so much individual difference," he went on, "that it is difficult to strike an average. But I should say that from 150 to 175 words per minute would be a fair average. A person who speaks 300 words a minute is talking very rapidly indeed. To give you some idea of the fearful rate of speed represented by 300 words in sixty seconds figure out how many columns of an ordinary newspaper would be needed to report an hour's talk with such a voluble speaker. You will find that such a talker, were the speech given in full, could fill from ten to twelve columns solid type. On an average, women talk faster than men. But there is little to commend in fast talking. If a person has anything worth saying, there is certainly time enough to say it well. It is a better art to be a good listener than a good talker. Silence and thought are inseparable. In business matters 'only fools and magpies prosper.'"—Detroit Free Press.

Betrayal.

The presence of children should serve to restrain any quarrelsomeness that parents may possess, and when it does not restrain it the parents generally have cause to regret their want of reserve.

A gentleman called at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Huffy, and their little daughter, 6 years old, answered the bell.

"Are you papa and mamma in?" he asked.

"Yes, but I'm afraid you can't see them," said the little girl.

"Why not?"

"Oh, they're having a scene upstairs!"—Exchange.

VAN FRESHLEIGH'S TALE OF WOE.

A Young and Innocent Girl Destroys All His Chances for Happiness.

The moment that Chappie Van Freshleigh entered the club rooms of the Society for the Promotion of Veracity you could see that something was the matter with him. The mustache, that pride of his life, the one goal in the wild whirl for fame he has managed to kick, was all wrinkled, and looked as if it hadn't been pressed for weeks. There was an ugly bag at his knees. In fact Chappie looked all broke up. He sat down, sullenly smoking cigarettes. He rang for a waiter, who brought him a bowl of hot water. Then he took his watch out and put the back of it into the hot water, and in a few moments a little round photograph was in the cuspidore and Chappie had taken a second photograph from his vest pocket, had gently licked the back, and had stuck it to the back of his watch. Then he went on smoking. Clarence De Peyster, who had been watching him, grew every minute more nervous. He placed his hand on Chappie's shoulder.

"What's mattah, dear boy?" he asked.

"Girl. Remember Miss Anita Peachblow. Pretty southern girl met on steamer. Howwid deceiver! Have a cigawette.

"'Member Miss Anita? Pretty little thing. Venus five foot high. Lips red as Pontet Canet. Built like a what-do-you-call-it, one of them things you blow to find out what time it is. Girl of my heart. Loved her passionately. So innocent, so unsophisticated, above the vulgar slang of the girl of the period. Became engaged. Take another cigawette. Just to see how she would like it took her to see ball game. Knew I'd be bothered all to death with questions, but wasn't prepared. Second inning, Buck at the bat. Hit a ball, rolled foul. Heard some one say, 'Rank.' Buck got first base. Some one called Buck a good boy. Buck chased for second. Got there—great slide. Somebody said, 'Yi, yi.'

"Buck ran for third. Great chorus of shouts. Some one said, 'Play ball,' and 'You've got to slide,' and then when ball went over third baseman's head same somebody yelled like mad, and I could feel the moisture from the tears of joy somebody was shedding. Buck came on to home. Third baseman picked up ball, threw it, catcher caught it. Umpire said out. Somebody yelled 'Rank!' again and helped cheer Buck when he kicked. All time girl at side seemed awfully quiet. Not a word. Looked round to ask if she was tired. Saw her down in front, yelling in voice of same somebody cheering Buck, howling 'Rank!' and offering to 'wipe the earth up with the umpire for a two cent postage stamp. Waving umbrella in air excited——. Exeunt delusions. Break off engagement. Howwid deceiver. Have a cigawette?"—New York Sun.

Baptizing and Branding Slaves.

We were seated on the veranda of the residence smoking when there arrived a Catholic priest and an assistant, who passed on to the inclosure. Shortly after came a wagon filled with clothing, and being curious to witness anything else connected with the negroes I followed. Inside the inclosure the negroes were drawn up in rows. Their brands were examined, and they were separated into lots representing each mark. The priest, assisted by his young man, passed along in front, the young man registering the name the priest had given each as they were baptized.

As the priest finished one lot they were at once furnished, the women with a sort of loose gown of coarse cotton cloth and the men with a long shirt and then sent off in different directions. Dinner being called we returned to the residence. After dinner I returned to the inclosure, but there was not a negro there, and visiting the fields with the proprietor I did not see one that I thought had made the voyage with us. Don S. B—— said that there were but twenty-five of the new arrivals on his plantation, the others having been delivered to the planters who had already contracted for them, paying $350 for each.—George Howe, M. Wrestling with Spelling.

Not long ago a citizen of Austin had a small house to rent, and he got a paint brush and a board and hung out a sign reading: "To Wrent." Everybody who passed by had a smile at the orthography; but it was three or four days before the owner ventured to ask of a butcher:

"Say, what on earth makes everybody grin at the sign?"

"Why, it's the spelling that gets 'em!"

It was explained that the word "Wrent" was not exactly in accordance with Webster's "latest," and the speller went away mumbling:

"Well, if they are so very particular about it I can change it." And he did. Within two hours there was a new sign reading: "Two Let."—New York Ledger.

A new idea embraced in Ely's Cream Balm. Catarrh is cured by cleansing and healing, not by drying up. It is not a liquid or snuff, but is easily applied into the nostrils. Its effect is magical and a thorough treatment will cure the worst cases. Prices 50c.

With Ely's Cream Balm a child can be treated without pain or dread and with perfect safety. Try the remedy. It cures catarrh, hay fever and colds in the head. It is easily applied into the nostrils and gives relief with the first application. Price 50c.

It is said that France was about to claim its pre-emption right to the Congo over Belgium, when King Leopold's action decided the Ministry to abandon any such claim, and thus avoid a cause of serious dispute in the future.

"Penelope," said the Boston mother, "tell me truly, did Charles kiss you last night?" "There was a slight labial juxtaposition as Charles took his leave, mother, but I assure you it was only momentary, and therefore innocuous."

When Feeling "Out of Sorts"

Is a common expression, indicating a slight derangement, usually of the nerves, though it is difficult, sometimes, to locate the exact seat of the complaint. It may be taken for granted, however, that the blood needs to be invigorated, and that a bottle or two of Ayer's Sarsaparilla would soon restore the system to its normal condition.

"I have lately been a sufferer from nervousness and dyspepsia. After taking two bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, I feel as well and strong as ever."—Wm. C. Rose, North Dighton, Mass.

"My wife has been in poor health for a long time. After having tried almost all the medicines prominently advertised, I bought Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has proved its superiority to all others by producing a marvelous improvement in her health."—Lorenzo S. Ruggles, Auburn, Me.

"Last winter, in consequence of overwork, my system became very much disordered. I suffered from debility, loss of appetite, and indigestion; was nervous, troubled with lost flesh rapidly, and, before the winter was over, manifested every symptom of a decline. Early in May I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and seemed to improve from the first dose. I continued using this medicine, regularly, for nearly two months, at the end of which time my weight had increased over twenty pounds, and I was in perfect health."—William N. Bowker, Erie, Pa.

Sleeplessness,

"Through the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla by the younger members of my family, I believe, and so do they, that their health has been improved. It has also made their complexions clearer through its effects on the blood. This is the simple truth, and it may gratify you to hear it. I have no hesitation in recommending Ayer's Sarsaparilla either in public or private."—Morris Phillips, Editor The Home Journal, New York City.

"About two years ago I was prostrated with nervous debility, so that I was hardly able to do anything. Nothing did me any good. Finally, I tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and was soon restored to health."—J. B. Mohn, Shiloh, Ohio.

Price $1: six bottles $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

Discouraged.

I read Ayer's Almanac, and thought, if Ayer's Sarsaparilla helped others, it would me. I took it, and it did all that is claimed for it, and has permanently restored my health. I take every opportunity to tell those who are afflicted, of my cure."—James R. Tyng, Lithographer, 27 and 29 Ann st., New York.

"I have found great relief from many ills by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood-purifier yet discovered."—H. D. Johnson, Jr., 382 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Some time ago I found my system entirely run down. I had a feeling of constant fatigue and languor and very little ambition for any kind of effort. A friend advised me to Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did with the best results. It has done me more good than all other medicines I have ever used."—Frank Mellows, 162 Broadway, Chelsea, Mass.

Try

"I have none but good words to speak regarding Ayer's Sarsaparilla. All during the winter I was languid, tired, and without any appetite, until I commenced the use of this remedy. I took three bottles, but did not think it was in the power of medicine to produce such a wonderful change, as saparilla has in my case."—Mrs. C. Johnson, 310 Hicks st., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

"Hold It to His Nose."

An English medical man who was sent out to Bulgaria to look after the health of English workmen on a railway had occasion to take a few stitches in the eyelid of his horse. To secure quiet on the part of his dumb patient he proposed to administer chloroform, and called upon one of the engineers to assist him. The result of the experiment is told by the assistant:

"It was settled that we should take the horse into a shed thickly strewn with hay, and that I should administer the chloroform. This was quickly done, or rather commenced. The chloroform was poured on a thick cloth, and I held it to the horse's nose. At first he objected and tossed his head, but presently a contented look came over his face and he stood stock still.

"At this I said, 'It's all right, doctor; get ready, he will soon be off.' To which the doctor replied, 'I am rather astonished that he has not gone through the excited stage.'

"Just as he said this the horse gave a sudden plunge which knocked me over on my back in the hay, and then he commenced the most eccentric unhorse-like proceedings. He sat up on his tail and tried to reach the roof with his feet. Failing in this he jumped up and rushed into the corner, where he did his best again and again to run up the wall, tumbling over on his back at each attempt. Then he tried to put his head through between both his front and his hind legs, and so went head over heels forward.

"I bolted, but will it be believed that the unfeeling doctor held the door against me, and only answered to my entreaties to be let out, 'Hold it to his nose! hold it to his nose! Look sharp and hold it to his nose!" and when at last I succeeded in bursting the door open and making my escape I was greeted with contemptuous looks and words!

"A Rarey might have liked the situation. I am not a Rarey, and was very cautious how I went up to the beast, even after he had got over his flurry and stood stock still, looking very much astonished, as well he might."—Youth's Companion.

The Original Buffalo Bill.

There is probably no better known name throughout the entire length and breadth of this country than that of Buffalo Bill, and there are but few who do not know that William F. Cody is the bearer of the title. Mr. Cody, however, is not the original Buffalo Bill. There is nothing underhanded nor illegitimate in his bearing it. He is fully entitled to it, but, for all that, he comes by it second handed. The original Buffalo Bill is now living, an aged, wealthy, prominent and highly respected citizen and the president of a savings bank at Wichita, Kan. His name is William Matthewson. He is high up in the order of Oddfellows.

Years ago Mr. Matthewson was a bold frontiersman on the plains, engaged in hunting and trapping for a living. He supplied the forts in Kansas and Nebraska with buffalo, and his success in this work was so great that he was given the title of Buffalo Bill. During this time he engaged a boy to work for him, and the lad was so diligent and faithful that he remained in Matthewson's employ until the latter quit the business to settle down to a more quiet life. As a reward the employer turned over the hunting contracts to the employe, who then followed in his late master's footsteps. That he was successful, that he earned honor, fame and wealth for himself cannot be denied when it is told that his name is William F. Cody. With the business rights he was given the title his former employer had borne. The world knows he has kept it bright and that neither stain nor tarnish has touched it.—Chicago Herald.

The Winds of the Mediterranean.

The winds of this sea, though generally regular and periodical, have local characteristics which give rise to various names: "The Birazones of the southeast coast of Spain; the Vent de Bize, or Mistral, of the southern French coast; the Raffiche of Corsica and other mountainous islands; the Gregale of Sardinia and Malta; the Saffanto and Bora of the Adriatic; the Tramontana, generally over the Levant, and the Levanters and Sirocco of the whole Mediterranean." In strong contrast to the frequent blasts of the well known Sirocco are the calms of this deep sea, the bonaccia of the Italian mariner, which in the days before the advent of steam compelled a loitering and weary voyage.—J. N. Hallock in Christian at Work.

Value of Soapstone.

A writer in a London journal calls attention to the unappreciated uses and preservative qualities of soapstone, a material, he says, which possesses what may be regarded as extraordinary qualities in withstanding atmospheric influences, those, especially, which have so much to do with the corrosion of iron and steel, and from experiments made it is said that no other material is capable of taking hold of the fiber of iron and steel so readily and firmly as this. In China soapstone is largely used in preserving structures built of sandstone and other stones liable to crumble from the effect of atmosphere; and the covering with powdered soapstone in the form of paint, on some of the obelisks in that country, composed of stone liable to atmospheric deterioration, has been the means of preserving them intact for hundreds of years.

Fifty Spasms a Day.

Had Mrs. H. A. Gardner, of Vistula, Ind., lived two thousand years ago she would have been thought to be possessed by evil spirits. She was subject to nervous prostration, headaches, dizziness, backache, palpitation and forty to fifty spasms a day. Though having been treated by eight physicians for years without success, she was permanently cured by one bottle of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. A trial bottle of this new and wonderful medicine and a finely illustrated treatise free at Charles H. Buss' Drug Store.

A highly circumstantial story has been in circulation, describing how Congressman Morgan of Mississippi, in order to relieve himself from the ban under which the Farmers' Alliance places all lawyers, had had his license as a lawyer annulled. Mr. Morgan denied the whole story on Monday in the House, and it is rather pleasant to know that he had not been guilty of so abject a surrender.

The Democratic papers seem to be highly delighted with the courage of a raging Bourbon from Arkansas who, in the absence of Speaker Reed from the Chair, devoted himself to a tirade of abuse against him. It was a characteristic performance, gauging pretty accurately the character of Arkansas civilization and the standards of the Democratic party.

Miles' Nerve & Liver Pills.

An important discovery. They act on the liver, stomach and bowels through the nerves. A new principle. They speedily cure biliousness, bad taste, torpid liver, piles and constipation. Splendid for men, women and children. Smallest, mildest, surest. 30 doses for 25 cents. Samples free at Charles H. Buss' Drug Store.

The Adirondack hotels have been severely overcrowded this season. The district has been quite the range for tourists this year. There is as much display of costume at the dinner tables in these woodland hotels as at the seaside.

NEATLY TRAPPED.

A PRIMA DONNA'S ADVENTURE.

Madame Pauline Lucca usually resides in the Victoria Strasse, Berlin. Last spring, however, she occupied temporarily, at some distance outside the city, a country house consisting only of one spacious rambling story, surrounded by a verandah.

One night about 10 o'clock she was sitting there in a bedroom. Her chair was placed before her toilet table, which was lighted by a wax taper on each side of the glass. The two tapers were not sufficient to illuminate the room very brilliantly, and the farther end lay buried in a sort of semi-obscurity.

Madame Lucca was busy reading some letters concerning engagements, when suddenly she imagined she heard a noise. She looked round, but seeing nothing, concluded she had made a mistake, and resumed the perusal of the letters. She had forgotten the noise when she heard it again.

This time, instead of looking round, she happened, without moving her head, merely to raise her eyes to the glass. She beheld reflected in it the face of a man peering cautiously from out a cupboard behind her.

At first she fancied she was dreaming. She quietly looked again. No, it was no dream. There was a man, whom she now recognized as having been formerly in her service, whence he had been discharged for general bad behavior. She had also suspected him of purloining several objects which she had missed from time to time but not being certain on that point, she had kept her suspicions to herself. Yes, there he was, there could be no mistake.

Madame Lucca's first impulse was to start up and give the alarm. But there was not another habitation within a mile or two, and she recollected that the only person besides herself in the house was her maid, who, though a very good girl and extremely attached to her mistress, was by no means celebrated for her nerve. The other servants, including the gardener and coachman, had been granted permission to attend a friend's wedding, some few miles off, and were not to return until the next day.

It flashed across her mind that the man who, as she knew, had been loitering about the neighborhood for two or three days, had learned that she would be alone, and meant to rob the house, and perhaps murder her, if his project of robbery could not be executed without the perpetration of the greater crime.

What was to be done? Again she glanced toward the mirror. The eyes were still there, glaring on her through the gloom. All at once she remembered that a revolver belonging to her husband, the Baron von Rhaden, ought to be lying on a shelf in the dining-room, but she was not sure. "If it is there, and I could only get it," she thought, "I should not mind!" While she was reflecting, a knock was heard on the door of the room. She saw the dark man instantly draw back into the cupboard and close it after him. She felt relieved that those two horrible eyes were taken off her; they seemed to pierce her like daggers.

"Come in," she said. Her maid entered.

"I thought you had gone to bed," observed Madame Lucca, in a tone of unconcern.

"I was going, please your ladyship—but I—I thougot you might perhaps want something."

"I told you I would be my own lady's maid to-night. No, the only thing I want is to stretch my limbs a little, for they are cramped from long sitting."

Speaking thus, Madame Lucca arose with an air of admirably acted indifference and took a turn or two across the room, passing close to the cupboard as she did so. She afterward declared she thought she could hear the man breathe in his place. He, on his part, might have heard her heart beat when, on looking at the keyhole, she found that the key had been removed. She was foiled in her plan, which had been to lock him in. Still her presence of mind did not desert her.

"Ah, dear me!" she said, yawning. "I feel very sleepy."

"Sleepy, your ladyship! I wish I did," replied the maid. "I don't feel sleepy. I am too frightened."

"Frightened! What are you frightened of, you foolish girl? Nonsense!" replied Madame Lucca.

"O! begging your ladyship's pardon it is not nousense, and that's just it. How can you be sure that some villain, some good-for-nothing fellow, hearing that you and I are alone in the house, may not murder us in our beds? But he shan't murder me in mine; for, with your ladyship's permission, I will sit up all night in your ladyship's easy chair."

Madame Pauline Lucca glanced at the cupboard.

Her blood ran cold. She dared not give her maid the slightest hint of the real state of matters; she felt the girl would go into a fit then and there, and thus bring on a crisis. Scarcely knowing what she was doing, Madame Lucca replied at random:

"Murder us? What for?"

"What for, your ladyship? Why, for your money—for your jewels, to be sure; nearly everybody knows you have plenty of them." The girl must have been unconsciously sharpening, so to speak, the knife by which she and her mistress were doomed to die.

"What absurdity!" said Madame Lucca, with a forced laugh. As she spoke her eyes wandered from the key-hole of the dreaded cupboard to that of the adjoining room. In the latter there was a key. Her face flushed, and a smile, as it were, of proud inspiration lighted up though only for a second.

"Jewels?" she replied. "Why, every one with a particle of sense must know that I would not take them about with me as a rule. They, of course, are generally safe under lock and key at Berlin. It is a strange thing, though that today is an exception. I expected the Countess Von Wartenstein to call, and I brought down all the jewels presented to me at my last visit to St. Petersburg, to show her."

"Your ladyship did! Oh, but supposing a thief——"

"Well, if a thief did know it he might easily make his fortune," she observed, interrupting her companion.

"By murdering us, and running off with the jewels."

Madame Lucca glanced at the cupboard; then raising her voice, she continued:

"Oh! there would be no necessity for murder. The door which leads from that room to the garden is unlocked; I forgot to lock it. A thief would merely have to walk in from the garden, and take my jewel-case from the table near the window. He might make his escape richer by 60,000 or 70,000 thalers, and never be detected. That's better than murdering people, is it not?"

"Oh, yes—your ladyship. And he might get over to England or America."

"Nothing easier," replied Madame Lucca. "However that reminds me, may as well lock the door leading into the garden. Run to the dining-room. You'll find the key on the table. Do not be long."

"No, your ladyship, I will not. Trust me for that."

"Editha! Editha!" cried Madame Lucca, an instant afterwards, "I have made a mistake. The key is on the baron's study table. Pshaw! she does not hear me," she continued, speaking aloud. "I must go and get it myself."

With these words she left the room. No sooner had she done so than the door of the cupboard cautiously opened. A man put his head out and glanced round. Perceiving no one, he darted into the adjoining chamber. The next instant the door was shut and locked behind him. But not by him. By Madame Lucca. When she left the room she did not proceed two paces; she stood outside listening. As she was in the darkness, she could, without being visible herself, see all that was passing in her bed chamber. She beheld the stranger leave his hiding place and dart into the adjoining room. She glided after him with the steathiness of a tigress and the courage of a heroine. The reader knows what followed.

"Caught!" she cried, running across the room with the key in her hand.

"I can't find any—" began Editha, entering the chamber. But Madame Lucca, pushing her on one side, disappeared. Editha looked after her with mute astonishment, and remained as though rooted to the spot, till her mistress re-entered, revolver in hand.

"Oh! your ladyship, what's that?" inquired her maid, with a strong presentiment that all was not right.

"The Baron's revolver, thank goodness!" replied Madame Lucca.

"Why thank goodness, your ladyship?" inquired the maid.

Madame Lucca pointed to the door. Some one on the other side was turning the handle. Editha turned deadly pale, and dropped the lamp she was carrying. Presently there was a knocking, and a voice exclaimed:

"Open the door directly, or—"

The rest was inaudible. Editha's screams drowned all else. Madame Lucca waited until the girl's first stock of breath was exhausted, and her second not yet arrived; she then said with comic severity:

"Editha, if you are not quiet, I will begin by shooting you."

Editha thought apparently, that her mistress was in earnest, for the poor girl immediately rammed a large portion of the nearest towel into her mouth and restricted herself to swaying to and fro and sobbing violently. The knocking recommenced, but the door was massive and immovable.

"My friend," cried Madame Lucca, in a loud voice, "you are caged. The garden door is fastened as tightly as this one, and the window is secured. Do not attempt to open the latter, for I am going into the garden, and the instant that I see you trying to escape, you are a dead man."

Flinging open the door which led to the verandah, she went out, followed by Editha, who, in her despair had succeeded in pushing more of the towel into her mouth. The noise of a bolt being drawn was heard.

"Stand aside, my friend!" said Madame Lucca, "or you are a dead man."

A sharp report followed, accompanied by the sound of crashing wood and splintered glass.

"There! that is one barrel out of six. That is merely to show that I am armed. You had better remain quiet."

The visitor also was seemingly of this opinion, for he did not renew the attempt.

When the servants returned next morning they found Madame Lucca quietly reading under the verandah before the window. They were rather surprised, however, on perceiving that she had a six-barrelled revolver in her hand, and Editha with what appeared to be the end of a towel sticking out of her mouth. A few words explained the whole affair, and in about an hour afterwards the would-be-thief, who, as it was proved, would have been ready to turn assassin as well, was safely at the nearest police station.

"Talk of generalship," said my friend, as he concluded the story, "was not the stratagem of the jewels, by which Madame Lucca lured the thief in the room destined to be his dungeon, a magnificent idea? Moltke himself never did anything to beat that."—Chatter.

DID YOU EVER
Look on the Label
of your favorite baking powder to see if all the ingredients are published?

Ammonia, a substance injurious to health, is an adulterant of some high-priced baking powders advertised and generally believed to be "absolutely pure." Cheap, prize, and gift powders contain alum, terra alba, &c., as well as ammonia.

Housekeepers who desire pure and wholesome food should refuse to buy ANY baking powder, no matter what its reputation, unless all the ingredients are frankly made known.

For many years all the ingredients used in Cleveland's Superior Baking Powder have been published on every label, and the analysis as stated is verified by Official Reports, the highest testimony in the land.

A Wonder Worker.

Mr. Frank Hoffman, a young man of Burlington, Ohio, states that he had been under the care of two prominent physicians, and used their treatment until he was not able to get around. They pronounced his case to be Consumption and incurable. He was persuaded to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds and at that time was not able to walk across the street without resting. He found, before he had used half a dollar bottle, that he was much better; he continued to use it and is to-day enjoying good health. If you have any Throat, Lung or Chest Trouble try try it. We guarantee satisfaction. Trial bottle free at H. L. Flanders & Co. Drug-store.

Edison's Ways.

Edison is a count, a millionaire and the most famous living inventor. His present wealth, which amounts to many millions, is as nothing compared to what it will be in the next few years, but he still works away in his laboratory, and comes forward to meet you in just such a suit of clothes as he wore twenty years ago. As compared with Edson's dingy little shop of twenty years ago, out at Menlo Park, in which he used to eat his bread and cheese seated on an old packing-box, talking over the work in hand with his two or three workmen, the present surroundings are fabulously luxurious. Everything shows unbounded means, which may be the case when we remember that his famous laboratory costs $200,000 a year to maintain. But the master mind is still the same. When he works it means work for his men. In the old days at Menlo Park it was no uncommon thing for him to remain at the bench for forty-eight hours at a stretch, sending one of the boys for crackers and cheese when he felt hungry, and not giving up until his assistants had actually fallen asleep standing up. To-day he is just as interested.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Hold It To The Light.

In the preparation of this remarkable medicine for coughs and colds no expense is spared to combine only the best and purest ingredients. Hold a bottle of Kemp's Balsam to the light and look through it; notice the bright, clear look; then compare with other remedies. Price 50c. and $1.

Chief of Police Crowley of San Francisco, who has been at the head of the Police Department for eighteen years, says the Chinese there commit more crimes in proportion to their number than any other race, and are the most difficult of detection. They have no regard for the obligations of an oath and are becoming more vicious and immoral every year.

The birth rate in England and Wales has been decreasing ever since 1876. The last quarterly report shows no diminution, the rate being only about four per 1000 above the French average.

Fashionable entertainment have been enormously extravagant in London this season. Several have cost between $30.000 and $40,000. The flowers for a bachelor party cost $5,000.

A Good Custom Dying Out.

The excellent custom of having the children and young people of our church to commit portions of Scripture and hymns to memory seems to have utterly died out. It is true they are asked for the golden text at Sabbath school, but even that is rarely ever thoroughly committed. It is more often read from the lesson paper. Some people discourage the practice, claiming that the child should not be filled with what it cannot understand and digest, etc. This is certainly a mistake. We fully believe the custom of having children commit portions of the Bible, and choice hymns of the church, to be wholesome mental discipline, as well as spiritually profitable. The youthful mind, stored with living truth so tersely expressed in the English Bible, has a storehouse of comfort to draw from in time of need.

These verses are the weapons of the Holy Spirit to combat Satan. Should misfortune or sickness overtake an individual whose mind is stored with precious truth, how comforting to have such to meditate upon, when perhaps his strength will not allow a friend to read to him! A man is frequently in situations where he has no reading, no one to converse with him, nothing but his own thoughts. How happy if, like David, he can have the truth of God to meditate upon in the watches of the night.—New York Evangelist.

They All Failed.

The following letter from Mr. W. A. Thomsom, of Columbus, Wis., is peculiarly interesting: "My wife," says he, "has been treated for her head, stomach and nervous prostration by three doctors in New York, two in Chicago, one in Philadelphia, one in Cincinnati, and at the large institute in Buffalo for 16 months. They all failed. But one bottle of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine helped her wonderfully." This should be used in all headaches, backaches, changes of life, nervous disturbances, fits, rheumatism, etc. Ask at Charles H. Buss drug store for a free trial bottle and Dr. Miles' new book on the Nerves and Heart.

The French and Italian artillery maneuvres this year took place near the boundary of the two countries, in Savoy. The officers met and fraternized, but as they had no leave to depart from their respective countries they set up a long table, one-half in France and the other half in Italy, with a red cord on the dividing line, and had a jolly good time and good dinner.

Miles' Nerve & Liver Pills.

An important discovery. They act on the liver, stomach and bowels through the nerves. A new principle. They speedily cure biliousness, bad taste, torpid liver, piles and constipation. Splendid for men, women and children. Smallest, mildest, surest. 30 doses for 25 cents. Samples free at Charles H. Buss' Drug Store.

A census taker at Danbury, Ct., encountered the wife of an Irish hod-carrier, who tried to conceal her husband's humble occupation by stating that he was an "ascender and descender."

"While We Have Time."

Once there was a man who had been made a minister, and he wanted to go as a missionary to some far off country, that he might teach poor heathen people all about the Lord Jesus Christ.

He was not very strong, and his friends were afraid he might soon die in the heathen land, which was hot and unhealthy, so they tried to persuade him to say at home.

He asked his physician how long he thought he might live in India.

"Perhaps," said the doctor, "you may live seven years."

"Then I will go," said he, "for in seven years, by God's help, I may do much work for him."

So he went, and, as he knew that his time must be short, he tried to spend every moment of it in serving God.

Even before he sailed away for India his friends used to call him "the man who never lost an hour," because he was so careful not to waste any of his precious time; but now he felt it to be still more precious.

In those seven years he did a great work for god indeed.

He preached to the poor heathen people and taught them about the Lord Jesus; and he wrote the prayer book and the new testament in their language so that they could read and understand it.—Young Christian Soldier.

"The great majority of people," writes President Eliot in his Century article, "even in the worst American towns and cities, live comfortably and hopefully." This is not new nor a startling truth, but it is a good deal of an acknowledgment to proceed from an avowed free trader. If President Eliot doesn't look out, somebody will be accusing him of treason to the Democratic party.

The camphor tree flourishes at Tampa, Fla., and its cultivation is said to be more profitable than any other business in the State. Camphor oil can be distilled at any season of the year, and the tree is not affected by heat or cold. It grows very rapidly. The process of distillation is very simple.

A new department store to be erected in Chicago will have a front of 190 feet on State street, 350 on Adams and 190 on Dearborn, will be sixteen stories high and will cost $3,000,000. It will be constructed of steel. The ground rental of the location is $154,000 per annum.

"Say, Bronson, lend me a fiver, will you?" "Why do you use slang, my dear fellow? Why do you say 'fiver?' Isn't the word nickel good enough for you?"

The Natural Bridge of Virginia has not been sold to Northern capitalists, as reported. It is held in trust for the benefit of the family of the Col. H. C. Parsons.

Both Better and Cheaper.

The Royal Baking Powder, as an actual fact, is the most economical in use of any made, because of its greatly superior strength.

Both the United States and Canadian Governments in the reports of their investigation of baking powders have published this fact officially.

The other baking powders known in this vicinity are shown by chemical tests to contain from 20 to 80 per cent. less leavening-gas than the Royal. So the Royal, even should it cost more than the others, would be much the cheaper.

In addition to this the superior flavor, sweetness, wholesomeness and delicacy of the food raised by Royal Baking Powder would make any difference in cost insignificant.

When the Royal makes finer and more wholesome food at a less cost, which every housekeeper familiar with it will affirm, why not discard altogether the old-fashioned methods of soda and sour milk, or home-made mixture of cream of tartar and soda, and use it exclusively?

The Woburn Journal

FRIDAY, AUGUST 22, 1890

SPECIAL NOTICE.

All Advertisements, to insure insertion in this paper, must be handed in as early as 10 o'clock on Thursday forenoon.

IT DIDN'T PAY.

The Peabody Press, like many other papers that have tried it, finds that a semi-weekly does not pay and will come out this week as an eight page weekly.—Newton Graphic.

To halve a good weekly, or to divide it up into six or seven daily parts and give it out to the public in instalments, cheapens it in public estimation and in reality, and in nine cases out of ten proves a disastrous operation for the publisher.

It is confidently predicted by the wisest in such matters that the Weekly is to be the coming newspaper. It stands higher and is considered more valuable now than 15 years ago, and it is rapidly regaining its old place in the good graces of the more enlightened classes.

To the sensational and unreliable character of the metropolitan daily and lack of literary and mechanical merit of their country imitators is largely due the change of sentiment in favor of the bright, well conducted, Weekly. The Weekly possesses more character, a more stable air, is more reliable as to the correctness of its news and views, and is also, when at its best, a more respectable appearing paper than the hastily and ofttimes carelessly made up city daily, and many fold more so than the daily productions which a very few country publishers are forever hankering after until the bautlings compass their financial ruin—and it is mainly because this is thus that men who think are firm in the conviction that the Weekly is destined to supplant, in the near future, the daily and become the principal public newsmonger as well as the true representative, if not the maker, of public opinion among the better and more intelligent classes of people everywhere.

HURRY UP, GENTLEMEN.

There are two important measures now pending before Congress which the Republicans want to see passed, and that too without any unnecessary delay. They are getting tired of waiting for that body to make a final move and put through the two measures referred to, namely, the Tariff and the Federal Election bills and unless some action to the purpose is taken at once members may hear something not to their advantage before a great while.

There is nothing to hinder the bills going through with a rush if the Republicans in Congress have only a mind to say so. The Democracy can't block their progress and the fact of their being held back is inexplicable on any other hypothesis than that a considerable member of Republicans of both branches do not want to have them passed.

It is by no means certain that either the Tariff or Election bill will be enacted this session, and quite certain that only one of them can be, at the best. This is not what the Republican members have been promising us all along, but within a week a change has come over the spirit of their dreams and they are not entirely sure that any thing at all can be done towards mending the tariff laws, or giving the country a wholesome satute on Federal Elections. There seems to be too many conflicting interests among the Republicans to render it any where near certain that the two bills named, or either one of them, will ever come to a vote.

THE 5TH DISTRICT.

Gen. Banks will be a candidate for re-election, while there is a general feeling among the Republicans of the District that a younger and more active man is necessary in order to save the District. But they are not agreed on any one, and it will be a hard thing to throw the General over. Yet many believe that his nomination means defeat. If he is re-nominated, whether elected or not, it will mean Gov. Brackett in 1892. If some one else is chosen this year, it will be either Mr. Hayden of Woburn or Col. Tower of Lexington.—Boston Record.

There are many prominent men in every town and city in the District who would like to be able to procure Mr. Hayden's consent to be returned to Congress, but the JOURNAL is able to say on the best of authority that he is "out of politics" permanently, and would not under any circumstances accept of the nomination this fall.

A TERRIBLE RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

In another column of the JOURNAL may be found an abridged account of the frightful railroad accident which occurred near Quincy on the Old Colony last Tuesday afternoon in which 22 persons lost their lives and thirty more were injured. It was more fatal in its results than any that has happened in the vicinity of Boston since the Bussey Bridge one.

☞ It is with much surprise and equal pleasure that we learn from the North Anson (Me.) Advocate of the nomination of Hon. and ex-Rev. Joseph O. Barrett for Lieut. Governor of Minnesota by the Farmers Alliance of that State. As he had previously received a nomination for the same office from the Prohibition Party it looks as if our old schoolmate and fellow-townsman might possibly make connections and secure the seat; and if he should do so nobody would rejoice more heartily over his good fortune than the Editor of the JOURNAL. Barrett was cut out for leadership in parties, political and religious, made up of things uncommon, unique, bizarre, and not overly practical, and the unsolicited situation in which he finds himself out there in Minnesota must have enough of instability, impracticability, and "rainbow chasing" in it to fill his soul plum full of peace and joy and rest. We rather hope Hon. J. O. B. will be elected even if it should be at the expense of a defeat to our own political friends and messmates, for men of his integrity and ability are not put forward for high places in State councils any too often, and besides, Barrett is a worthy gentleman all the way up and down and would do honor to the exalted position for which he is stumping the State.

☞ The comparatively youthful but very vigorous Somerville Citizen is rapidly lengthening the gap between itself and its neighbor the Somerville Journal, and bids fair very soon to get so far ahead as to be entirely out of sight of it. About all that keeps the Journal afloat anyway is its alleged funny column which for laughter-provoking qualities is as doleful a failure as it is easy to concieve of. We are right glad to see the Citizen forge ahead and prosper as it has been doing for the last couple of years.

☞ The admirable oration delivered by Samuel W. McCall, Esq., at the great Winchester celebration last 4th of July has been issued in pamphlet form, a copy of which found its way to this office last Tuesday. The sender will please accept our thanks.

☞ We have lately received from the Home Market Club several valuable documents on the tariff question, including speeches by McKinley, Rice and Lawrence.

— Leather manufacturing is looking up smartly in this city. The bosses have all they can do and are getting good prices for leather.

— Mr. A. A. Fowle, Managing Editor of the Boston Globe, and family are living with Mrs. Munn on Pleasant street just at present.

— Mrs. Lockard has returned to her home in Michigan after a visit of six weeks with her father, Mr. B. B. Brown, and friends in this city.

— Mr. E. A. Lounsbury, ex-Master of the Cummings School, will probably enter Harvard Law School at an early day. Law is to be his profession.

— At 2 o'clock, Wednesday next, Aug. 27, Auctioneer Gregory will sell the household furniture of Matthew Henchy, at No. 14 Sturgess street.

— It is pleasant to see Mr. Walter Wyman on the streets again after a long illness. For a man 85 years old Mr. Wyman is very smart and active.

— Miss Lottie Wyman, Assistant City Treasurer, has returned from a pleasant visit at Antrim, N. H., and is at her post in Municipal Building once more.

— It is reported that the Johnston Electric Company at the old Sun Company building are having more orders for their electric Train Signal than they can fill.

— Sparrow Horton represents some of the best insurance companies in the country. It would be a good plan to give him a call when looking after fire insurance.

— The Republicans of this city will hold caucuses in the several wards to choose delegates to the State and other conventions on Wednesday evening, Sept. 10, next.

— Lightning struck and totally used up a 50-year old apple tree on the Richardson place corner of Main and Ash street during the heavy storm on Tuesday night.

— J. Grafton Murdock is with the boys at Sebago Lake, Me., and a right good time they are having. Wobegon Camp is a jolly home and the boys are first class cooks.

— The Republican who would poll as many votes and make as good Mayor as any man in his party is E. E. Thompson, Esq., President of the Common Council.

— Mrs. Dr. Sheppard, formerly Mrs. Eckley Stearns, of Plainfield, N. J., has been visiting Mrs. William M. Rand and Charles E. Cooper in this city the past week.

— Judge Converse will resume the "judicial ermine" on Sept. 1. Judge Littlefield of Winchester is presiding at the Fourth Middlesex District Court in the mean time.

— From 9, p. m. Sunday to 8, a. m. Monday there occurred a very refreshing rain. It began with a brisk thunder storm after an intensely hot day. Monday was cooler.

— Col. W. T. and Mr. Samuel A. Grammer entertained relatives by the name of Grammer and others during G. A. R. week. Some of them were from as far away as Illinois.

— Dr. Frank Graves would, on no account, go into a fight for the Mayoralty nomination, and it is very doubtful indeed if he would accept the honor under any circumstances.

— The Woburn Brass Band gave a most excellent open-air concert on the Common last Wednesday evening. They will give another and the last of the season on the evening of Sept. 3.

— John G. Maguire, Esq., went to Lewiston, Me., last Wednesday in response to a business summons. He will return to-morrow to Salisbury, N. H., where his family are now stopping.

— The family of Mr. F. B. Dodge, the jeweler, are still at the Sea Shore House, Old Orchard, and expect to remain there a couple of weeks longer. Mr. Dodge will go down again next Sunday.

— Mr. Cyrus H. Mentzer of Lexington street entertained in the most hospitable manner during the Encampment week George Allen of Northboro, formerly a member of Co. C., 24th Mass. Volunteers.

— Mr. A. C. Wheeler of Colfax, Iowa, and his sister Mrs. Rufus R. Whitten, met for the first time in 40 years last week. Mr. Wheeler went West in 1850, and went to war in the 67th Indiana Inft.

— One car on the East Middlesex goes straight to the Soldiers Home in Chelsea each trip. This is a nice, handy arrangement for which Supt. Wentworth is entitled to the thanks of the Woburn people.

— Comrade James F. Lillie of Orwell, Vt., who served in the War of the Rebellion in Co. H. 5th Vermont Regiment, was an esteemed guest of Mr. John Duncan at his residence on Canal street last week.

— The Red Men will hold a picnic at Shady Side Grove, Haggett's Pond, Andover, on Sept. 1, Labor Day. It will be a union one composed of several neighboring Councils in which the Woburn one is included.

— Dr. H. E. Chase, Woburn's popular dentist, has leased the appartments owned and formerly occupied by Dr. Dodge at 391 Main street and will remove his dental office to that place about September 1.

— Mr. William P. Symonds, reporter on The Cabinet, Boston, who recently married Miss Simonson, an estimable young lady formerly of Woburn, has gone to housekeeping in a pleasant residence in the Highlands.

— Mrs. Maria Welch of Cleveland, Ohio, one of the persons injured in the great Quincy railroad accident last Tuesday afternoon, was before her marriage Miss Oliphant and lived here in Woburn. Her son James was also hurt.

— Hall & Jaquith, proprietors of the Main street grain mill and feed establishment, have arranged to employ electricity for a motor to run their machinery with. They are doing a big business which is all the time increasing.

— Rev. A. B. Whitney, Pastor of the So. St. Baptist Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, has been visiting his uncle, L. L. Whitney, in this city during the past week. He was a member of the 11th Mass. Battery during the late Rebellion.

— The first prize dance of the Blue Clyde Association will be given this evening at Armory Hall. E. F. Haggerty is to be Floor Manager; W. H. Reddy, Assistant; J. H. Conway, Edward Harvey, M. Costello and H. McDermott, Aids.

— Mr. David F. Moreland, City Clerk, was offered a unanimous reelection to the office of National Grand Master of the National Assembly of Leather Workers at the convention in Boston last week, but respectfully declined the honor.

— There was a meeting of the Park Commissioners last Monday evening at which Hon. E. D. Hayden was elected Chairman and Joseph F. DeLorica was elected Secretary. The next meeting of the Board will be held on the evening of Aug. 27.

— A great deal of furniture in city houses nowadays is made in combination; two or three different articles being united in one piece of furniture. The best place to see Combination Furniture is at Paine's Furniture Warerooms, 48 Canal street, Boston.

— There is no public thing in this city that is more highly enjoyed every hour in the day than those seats on the Common. Loungers use them, so do people waiting for the street cars, and others who are making short stops among us, by all of whom they are duly appreciated.

— Hon. John Cummings raised, so it is reported, 8,800 bushels of potatoes on 22 acres of land this season, which is 400 bushels to the acre. We do not know whether that is a large, a small, or just about a middling yield, but in the aggregate 8,800 bushels make a big heap of murphies.

— An article concerning the Cemetery in Wilmington signed by a Committee of Arrangements, of which France B. Hiller is one, is one that should excite interest outside as well as inside of that town. It is a step in the right direction, but that circular speaks for itself. Read it.

— The Knights of Labor expect to hold their annual picnic at Oak Island to-morrow. A big time is anticipated. The annual picnic of the Knights is always a gay and happy affair, and if the weather should be all right that of tomorrow will be no exception. Great preparations are on foot for it.

— A day or two ago we recieved a newspaper from L. Thompson, Esq., published in British Columbia, which gave a list of the excursionists with which Mr. Thompson is traveling over that vast northwestern region, and also announced that the party were all well and very happy. Thanks.

— A heavy thunder storm occurred late Tuesday night which gave an extraordinary exhibition of lightning followed by big crashes of thunder. There was a smart rain at 8 o'clock the evening before, and from the hour of the midnight storm to breakfast time there was a brisk and steady downpour.

— The Foresters of this city went to Nantasket in strong force last Wednesday for their annual picnic. Fine weather was vouchsafed them and a day of genuine pleasure was spent by them. All sorts of athletic sports were indulged in, the dinner was a fine one, and everything passed off in the very best manner.

— Mr. Frank Dodge and wife have got back from their European tour and have settled down to every-day life again. They had a pleasant voyage each way and a delightful visit on the other side. Mr. Dodge went over cheifly on business for his father-in-law, Capt. John P. Crane, one of our principal leather manufacturers.

— As late as Wednesday last Capt. John P. Crane was seen escorting his guest, Dr. Charles Russell of Washington, D. C., around on our streets and introducing him to our citizens. Dr. Russell is highly pleased with his first visit to the North and especially with the courtesies extended to him by his hosts Capt. Crane and Dr. Graves.

— The JOURNAL Book and Job office is complete in all its appointments and has the reputation of turning out as fine work and as much of it as any printing establishment in Middlesex county. It is fully supplied with presses, all the latest styles of type, stock and men to use them, and gentlemen, your work is respectfully solicited. —tf.

— Mr. Cyrus Lamb is the boss carpenter who is changing, enlarging, and revamping Mr. C. M. Munroe's store, and he is making a good job of it. Lamb understands the use of carpenter tools as well as the next man, and what speaks mighty well for his skill and industry is that he is never without a job. He will give Munroe a very fine store when it is done.

— Errors have been made in stating the date on which the reunion of the old 39th is to be held in this city. The true date so Mr. Abijah Thompson informs a JOURNAL reporter, is Sept. 24, 1890. Co. K., of which Mr. Thompson was a member, will do the honors of the occasion and furnish the necessaries for one of the very best reunions the Regiment has ever held.

— Mr. O. F. Bryant of Salem St. returned from his Western trip not many days ago. It is fair to presume that he visited and had a good time with his son Edward at Pullman, below Chicago, while away. We have not as yet heard him express his ideas concerning the West, but being an eminently sensible gentleman it would be natural to expect that he thinks very well indeed of it.

— Speaking of what the JOURNAL said about rushing into local politics this early in the season the Winchester Star says: "But then the JOURNAL and the Star have made most judicious selections, for we consider Mayor Johnson and J. Henry Norcross two of the brightest lights in this section. Business and ability is the happy combination that has made these two gentlemen so popular."

— Dr. Charles H. and Mrs. Winn (nee Reade) are expected home to-morrow and will immediately set up housekeeping in a home in Winchester which Mr. L. Reade, the bride's father, is now furnishing for them. At last accounts they were at Saratoga having come there from principal Canadian cities and a visit in the Catskills, and were to take in Newport, thence to Winchester, their future home.

— About the finest programme of exercises for an entertainment or anything of that sort was the one issued by the George G. Meade G. A. R. Post of Lexington for the entertainment of visiting comrades during the National Encampment, for a copy of which we were indebted to Librarian Cutter of this city. In design and execution it was about as near perfect as anything of the kind could be.

— City Treasurer John C. Buck was taken very ill with inflammation of the bowels early on last Sunday morning and on Monday his case became so alarming that a consultation of physicians was held, from which very little encouragement was derived by his family. He was considered almost hopelessly sick, but on Tuesday he was better although not out of danger and the last news from him was more favorable still for his speedy recovery.

— At a special meeting of the Woburn School Committee, last Friday evening, W. H. Crocker was elected Principal of the Cummings School in place of E. H. Lounsbury, resigned. Ling's system of physical training was adopted for the Misses of the High School, who will receive one hour's training a week, and there is to be a lecture each week to the teachers by the instructor. The salary for this instructor was placed at $250 per annum.

— A few days ago Librarian Cutter received a photographic view of a great Alaska glacier from Mr. Leonard Thompson who was privileged to get a sight of the monster the other day. A piece of solid ice 120 feet high, 500 feet deep under water, 1 1-4 miles wide on the watar edge, and extending back as far as human vision could reach, and how much farther nobody knows—a chunk of ice like that we should think would rejoice the heart of any well-regulated dealer to look at.

— Mr. Chester R. Smith, salesman and advertising manager of the C. Willard Smith's dry goods establishment, went to Lubec, Maine, some days ago for a fortnight's vacation and is supposed to be at the present time trying to emerge from a State of Maine fog in which it is surmised he has been wandering about ever since he made land at L. When he gets out he may be interested to learn that the store is prospering, and the people in it are as bright and lively as ever.

— Frye, the upholsterer, brought up from the New Hampshire home occupied by his mother before her death a year ago, an old fashioned bellows which had been in the family over 60 years and is at the present time as good as new. The bellows was a necessary household utensil in the old days of fireplaces, wood fires, and absence of stoves, and one of them always hung up just over the shovel and tongs in every well arranged family chimney corner. Frye feels quite proud over the ancient piece of furniture.

— Mrs. E. C. Colman, Mistress of fair "Woodside," very wisely concludes that she wants no blistering beaches or laborous mountain climbing in her vacation so long as she can have the pure air, the sweet water, the invigorating sunshine, the quiet and calm repose of her own charming home. On these home comforts and delights Mistress Colman has grown to be a healthy, hardy, happy matron, hence no beaches, nor New Hampshire lanes and pastures, nor "forest aisles," nor even granite hills, in hers, if you please, but "Woodside" every blessed day in the week, year in and year out, and always.

— The house of Mr. Charles A. Sweetser on New Boston street was seriously damaged by fire about 9 o'clock last Saturday evening. The fire started in a store-room in the rear of the main structure and was supposed to have originated from a flatiron-holder that had been wrapped up and put away with fire in it. A strong smell of smoke aroused Mr. Sweetser soon after he went to bed, and when the cause of it was discovered by him the flames, which finally did much damage, had gained a good deal of headway. There was an insurance on the house which was damaged about $1,000, but none on the furniture, a portion of which was saved.

— A colony of the United Order of Pilgrim Fathers was instituted here last week by Supreme Governor Moses P. Brown and suite, and the following officers were elected: Ex-governor, Eliot L. Packard; Governor, Lawrence Reade; Lieutenant-Governor, Thomas J. Fox; Secretary, Charles K. Conn; Collector, Edward J. Gregory; Treasurer, Thomas F. McCormick; Chaplain, William H. Henchy; Sergeant-at-arms, Timothy Calnan; Sentinel, Inner Gate, John J. Callahan; Sentinel, Outer Gate, William H. Jones. The name selected was Abajona, and the number of the colony is 131. The next meeting will be subject to call by the officers.

— As to seaside resorts Mrs. E. C. Cottle is as competent a judge as there can be found anywhere. She has just returned from Kennebunkport where she took her summer outing and Mr. Cottle says it would be a difficult undertaking to convince his wife that there is another spot on the coast equal to it for comfort and pleasure. Kennebunkport is a quaint old place—more so before the ravages of a disastrous fire there a few years ago than now—quiet, retired, breezy, fine ocean views, fat clams, and the annual resort of several famous authors and many of the best people that travel. Mrs. Cottle pronounces it nice, therefore we say Mrs. Cottle is a good judge of seaside resorts.

— Oliver Green & Co. of 164 Tremont street, Boston, are among the leading piano dealers in New England. Mr. O. Green was not long since a resident of Woburn (as also was Mr. Joseph R. Green, his son, who has been connected with the business four or five years) and of course it is gratifying to the old friends to hear his business success mentioned. The house, which is well known all over the country, deal only in the very best instruments made. Their storerooms contain only the products of well known and universally approved manufacturies. Besides these, the Greens sell pianos at fair prices and deal honorably by everybody. This statement of facts accounts for their excellent business success.

— The Hartwell Family Association will hold their 7th annual reunion in the Town Hall at Concord (Mass.) on Thursday, Aug. 28, instant. The first settlement of the family was at Concord and it was near the home of the pioneer Hartwell that the first family reunion was held six years ago and the Association formed. The exercises of the 7th meeting will include the banquet (of course), addresses, historical sketches, poems, genealogies, music, etc., and unless something unforseen turns up to prevent it this will be the largest and most interesting gathering of the family that has been held. Mr. Frederic A. Hartwell of this city, who is an offshoot of the parent tree, and wife and children will attend this 7th reunion.

— Frank A. Hosmer of Great Barrington has been elected President of Oahu College, the principal educational institution of Honolulu, and has accepted the position. Mr. Hosmer is about 35 years old, a graduate of Amherst College and was for many years Principal of the Great Barrington High School, becoming well known as an educator of marked ability. He resigned the Principalship of the school to become editor of the Berkshire Courier, but has for some time been preparing to again engage in educational work. He is a member of the Great Barrington School Committee. Mr. Hosmer is a brother of Miss Marion Hosmer of this city and a nephew of E. E. and other Thompsons of the same family, and is well and favorably known by many people in Woburn who will be glad to learn of his good fortune.

— Miss Bell Menard, a prominent member of Woburn's Pedagogical Corps, and a young lady of fine intellectual gifts and acquirments, can be reached personally, or by letter, now and for a week hence, at Wood Lawn House, Fryeburg, Me., a spot which has a history, and not only that but possesses charms of scenery unsurpassed by any other anywhere in beautiful New England. Not many days ago she left these parts with a party of Boston friends for Portland, No. Conway, Mt. Washington, thence to the banks of the Saco and Fryeburg aforesaid. The three weeks immediatly prior to her flitting away to the Mountains our schoolmarm spent in the delightful task of sampling boiled clams at Beachmont and sporting in the cool and invigorating surf there, and in enjoying such other delights as are only to be found on the sands and in the breakers of Chelsea Beach and "along shore." But the tale of the "wild waves" began to grow just the least bit monotonous to her so away went Miss Belle to the Mountains where, we suspect, she is enjoying things highly, and dreading the day when she must resume the birch rod and labors of the little Commonwealth (or is it a Monarchy?) over which she daily presides during about 40 weeks in the year here in staid, old Woburn.

— The State Inspector having decided that Woburn school houses must be remodelled for sanitary reasons an expense of $25,000, some say, will be necessary to complete the changes. It is better ventilation that the health of the children demand, so the Inspector says, and therefore better ventilation it must be. It was well the discovery was made before all the children in Woburn were in their graves—poor things! How they have managed to exist all these years without ventilation is a conundrum. It is the greatest wonder in the world that there are any children left in this city to tell the sorrowful tale. But an expenditure of $25,000 for ventilation will straighten them out, if there is any straighten out left in them. Innocent weaklings! how they must have suffered, especially those who are members of those unfortunate families who have to sleep every night 6 in a room 8x10 in dimensions, and come out every morning as chipper and gay as larks, no matter now hot the night may have been or morning is. Yes, indeed! It is pitiful to contemplate the condition of the rising generation. But they are all going to have some of the new kind of ventilation as soon as it can be got. It comes high, but Woburn must have it. There is no ventilation going that is any too good for Woburn school houses, and the only question worth considering is, "how can it be got here the quickest?"—not what it is going to cost—for how can we expect our children to survive any longer without some of the latest improved?

— Last Monday Hon. John Cummings placed in the care of Librarian Cutter, to be held on exhibition pro bono publico at the Public Library, specimens of the very destructive, much dreaded, and recently imported enemy to fruit and foliage, the Gypsy Moth, for the extermination of which the General Court made an appropriation and provided for a Commission. The specimens left by Mr. Cummings include the moth in its various stages of existence—the grub, the caterpillar, the perfected butterfly, or moth—a brief examination of which will tell the observer at once whether he has seen the "animal" at or near his home or not, and having the knowledge may enable him to prevent as much damage as would otherwise be done. It was for the sole purpose of instructing the people as to what the Gypsy Moth really is, and thus affording the means of guarding against its ravages, that Mr. Cummings went to the trouble to procure the collection which he left on exhibition at the Library, and which he asks the people to examine. If owners of orchards, ornamental trees, choice shrubbery, etc. will come to the Library and examine these "Gypsys," which Mr. Cutter will take pleasure in showing, it is more than probable that much damage by the destructive insect might be prevented. The Moth is at work at Medford (where first discovered), Malden, Arlington and elsewhere in that section, and there is no reason why it should not put in an appearance here. Mr. Cummings deserves the thanks of this community for having done so much to guard against their ravages in this vicinity.

Ward and City Committee.

The Republican Ward and City Committee of this city met last Monday evening. Capt. Edwin F. Wyer was elected Chairman and Fred J. Brown, Secretary.

Revised by-laws were adopted, a Finance Committee of one from each Ward Committee was chosen, and the Secretary instructed to issue a call for caucuses in all the wards, to be held Wednesday evening, Sept. 10, to choose delegates to the different conventions.

Ward committees were instructed to fill vacancies in their numbers and report their action to the Secretary.

Lasts twice as long as cheap soap for laundry use—Brussels.

A CARD.

We hereby return sincere thanks to our friends and neighbors for their kindly aid and sympathy extended to us last Saturday night at and after the fire at our house, and also to the firemen for their hearty efforts to save our property.

C. A. SWEETSER,
ABBIE W. SWEETSER.

After all, the best way to know the real merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla, is to try it yourself. Be sure to get Hood's.

Settle It Right Here.

Some people have a system, and through it are enabled to avoid many vexations in this world. When they see a good thing which must needs enter into their daily life, they adopt it, and ever after cling to it. All desire that which is best, yet cheapest, and many a good housewife, by settling on Brussels soap, for household use, finds her every need supplied in this direction. Brussels soap has as yet no successful competitor. It's economical.

Woburn Co-operative Bank.

There has lately sprung up a livelier interest in the business of this institution and the demands for its funds are much more numerous than they have been for some time past. At the last meeting there was a spirited contest over the sale of shares, so we are informed by Secretary Whitcher, and indeed the premiums at which they were sold clearly demonstrated the fact of increased interest and demand. Since the last meeting one application at least for shares has been received from Boston, and previously other out of town parties wanted to become purchasers.

At the meeting of the officers of the bank last week $2,600 was sold—$1,800 at a premium per share of 15 cents; and $800 at a premium of 5 cents. As to amount this was regarded as a very satisfactory sale, and as to the premiums paid it was gratifying. Nearly all this money was wanted for building purposes, although not all of it was for building in this city. There was a sharp demand and brisk bidding for it.

The next meeting will be held on Sept. 11, and on Oct. 1, the 8th series of shares will be issued limited to 100.

The Bank has been admirably managed from the beginning and has proved of great benefit to those people, especially young men, who have been trying to make for their families and themselves comfortable homes. The terms on which the money of the bank is bought are cheap and easy, and while its shares are good for investment purely, the real benefits of the institution are secured chiefly by the comparatively poor.

In planning your vacation don't forget that a trip through the great lakes, enabling you to visit Niagara en route, is inexpensive, compared with a few weeks in the country. Special rates on application to J. A. Flanders, agent, 322 Washington street, Boston.

Suicide of a Young Woman.

Mary Darmody, a domestic in the employ of Mrs. Charles Lamb in Winchester, aged about 32 years, committed suicide by drowning in Horn Pond, nearly opposite the residence of Mr. James McDonald on Canal street, some time last Sunday night or early Monday morning. She had intended to commit the deed on the Thursday previously and wrote a note to that effect, but for some reason or other failed to carry out her design. On Sunday afternoon she came to visit her aunt, Mrs. Michael Bowe, on Buckman street this city, and when the time arrived in the evening to return home it rained so hard that she concluded to remain all night at her aunt's. Before 10 o'clock she retired to sleep on a lounge, and that was the last she was seen alive by any of the family. Finding she had left, Mrs. Bowe made search for her and found her clothes, a wallet with money in it, the note above mentioned, etc., under the lounge on which it was supposed she slept. Alarmed at her discovery Mrs. Bowe's family sent out word and the missing girl was searched for in the Pond, in which she proposed to end her life and elsewhere. At 11 o'clock Monday forenoon Officer McDermott found the body of the unfortunate girl only a short distance from the shore at a point nearly opposite the McDonald residence aforesaid.

No doubt Miss Darmody was induced to commit suicide from homesickness. She came from her home in Ireland to this place last May and had been low spirited and melancholly ever since she arrived, although she had many near relatives living here, the Darmodys of Commingsville being among them. The letter stated that her troubles were great and no doubt they unbalanced her mind and led to taking her own life. It was a sad case.

Y. M. C. A.

The 4 o'clock meeting next Sunday will be in the charge of our No. Woburn friends.

Next Saturday evening there will be a prayer meeting for men in the parlor at 8 o'clock.

The 4 o'clock meeting last Sunday was conducted by one of our own members and was well attended.

Quite a number of our members and friends are enjoying life at the Y. M. C. A. summer encampment at No. Labec, Maine.

The Board of Directors held their regular monthly meeting last Tuesday evening. There will be an adjourned meeting the 2nd of Sept.

Frightful Railroad Accident.

A railroad accident took place at Quincy, on the Old Colony Railroad, at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon, by which 10 persons were instantly killed, 12 died within a short time at the Quincy Hospital, and 30 or more were hurt, the nature of the injuries varying from fatal to mere cuts or bruises.

According to the best information obtainable, workmen engaged in repairing the roadbed near President's Bridge, about one eighth of a mile north of Quincy station, in a deep cut and at the end of a sharp curve, had neglected to properly protect themselves by flags, and fled from their work at the whistle of a train approaching round the curve, and either had not time, or else forgot, to remove a "track jack," an instrument 3 or 4 feet in height, used in the repairs. The train was the express from Woods Holl, due in Boston at 1.10 P. M. Its engine struck the jack and was derailed and thrown upon its side against the cut. Three cars passed the engine, but the fourth left the rails, its truck was forced through the floor, one end was torn to pieces, and the car overturned upon the engine. To the damage of the crushing of the car was added the horror of escaping steam from the engine, and most of the killed were actually scalded to death. Eleven bodies were removed from this car alone. The three rear cars remained on the rails. Their occupants were nothing worse than scared and slightly shaken up. Surgeons and ambulances were at once summoned from Boston, the people of the vicinity hastened to render aid and the work of the removal of the dead and wounded from the wreck was at once begun, the injured being nearly all cared for at the Quincy Hospital. Preparations were made for their reception at the Boston City and Massachusetts General Hospitals, but their accommodations were not needed.—Boston Journal, 20th.

Every home-keeper in New England should read with care the advertisement of "Mason's Fruit Jars" on our local page this week. It seems too good to be true, but it's the story of a reliable house which always fulfills its agreements. If you live within 100 miles of Boston you can more than save your carfare by purchasing your supplies of them.

Montvale.

On the evening of August 14 the Republicans of this Ward held a caucus to nominate a candidate for Alderman to be supported at the polls on August 26, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Alderman Golden. It was held in Kendall's Hall at Button End and was well attended.

William T. Kendall was selected as the candidate by a vote of 11 out of 19 ballots cast, and the choice fell on a worthy man. So meritorious a gentleman is Mr. Kendall and so popular is he in this part of the city that it is believed the Democrats will make no nomination, and that all hands will turn in and give him the unanimous vote of the Ward.

The Advance Movement.

The leather market continues to strengthen under the favorable influences resulting from curtailed production. After a long depression the tanners are again afforded an opportunity to profit by their industry. So far, fortunately, the advance movement has been gradual and logical and entirely free from speculation. For several years the leather traffic has been in the main unremunerative. Such a condition from the very nature of things could not endure. It is misleading to characterize the present state of the market by the unauthorized word "boom." The great leather industry is simply emerging from a serious period of over-production and assuming its rightful position. Many tanneries were wiped out, and the output of numerous others was greatly diminished during the era of burdensome stocks and low prices. The trade is now healthful and vigorous. Stocks are small and the receipts barely suffice to meet the requirements of consumers. The advances already secured are quite enough to seriously affect the cost of all manufactured articles of which leather is a component part. It is many years since the market presented such a generally promising complexion.—Shoe and Leather Review.

The Purest and Best

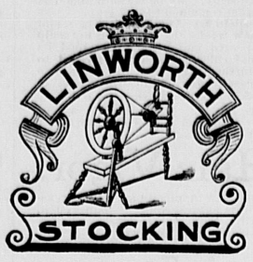
Articles known to medical science are used in preparing Hood's Sarsaparilla. Every ingredient is carefully selected, personally examined, and only the best retained. The medicine is prepared under the supervision of thoroughly competent pharmacists, and every step in the process of manufacture is carefully watched with a view to securing in Hood's Sarsaparilla the best possible result.

"Have you washed your feet?" You think this is a queer question to ask, but it is one that many Mammas have got in the habit of asking the boys and girls as "Have you washed your hands?"

And Why? Because it has been almost impossible to get Stockings that would'nt crock and fade.

But alas! for Pearline.

We have got a Line of Stock-



ings Worth much more than many so called "Fast Blacks," which will please the Mammas and the boys and girls as well, and not cost any more. Sizes to fit everybody from baby to grandmamma.

Pearline has its place but it will not have to be used to wash-out the stains left by the "LINWORTH."

Burlington.

Dr. C. E. Estabrook of London, England, has been in town this week.

Rev. C. H. Washburn preached at the church last Sunday. He has been enjoying a vacation.

The officers of the Agricultural Society held a special meeting Tuesday evening. It was voted to hold the annual fair Wednesday, October 1. A pamphlet containing the constitution and by-laws of the Society and the rules and regulations of the next fair has been printed and copies will be distributed among residents of the town. The society will hold a meeting next Tuesday evening.

Mr. S. S. Shedd, who died at his home in Burlington, Aug. 14, was born in this town and was among our best known residents. He had filled several important town offices, having served on the Board of Selectmen and on the School Committee. He was always faithful in the discharge of the trusts committed to him and performed his duties to the satisfaction of his townsmen. During the last months of his life he was called aside from active work and confined to his home by the wasting agonies of an incurable disease, but all his sufferings were endured with patient resignation. He was always glad to see his friends, pleased to receive flowers or other little tributes of their sympathy, and especially glad to see his pastor who often came to comfort him with views of "things unseen." So, through the dark clouds of suffering and death he was led to see the light which is invisible. Mr. Shedd's funeral was held at the church Sunday afternoon. The floral tributes were especially beautiful. The services were conducted by Rev. C. H. Washburn.

To all Persons Interested in Improving and Beautifying the Cemetery of Wilmington.

LET NOT THE DEAD BE FORGOTTEN.

"For in our turn, we too shall lie in the quiet grave until the judgment."

Regretting the low state of the fertility of our Cemetery and the lack of interest shown by people generally in its improvement, and in order to awaken that interest, Mrs. Dr. Henry Miller proposes to give a grand entertainment to all those who will assist her towards this object.

To all those who will contribute stable dressing, or its equivalent in money (to be used in the purchase of the same), the conditions are: That any person who own lots, or have relatives and friends lying in the Wilmington Cemetery, who will contribute one load of dressing, will receive two tickets, or if they contribute two loads, will receive five tickets to an Entertainment consisting of Music, Singing, Refreshments, etc., to be given in the Town Hall, on Friday Evening, Sept. 5, 1890. All contributions in dressing, or money must be forwarded to Mr. Edward Nichols, on or before August 25, from whom all parties will receive a check for the same.

N. B.—For the accommodation of friends and contributors who reside out of town, or are far from Wilmington Centre, contributions of Money can be sent, or given to the undermentioned gentlemen of the Committee, who have interested themselves in this worthy undertaking.

Woburn Record of Deaths.

His Honor Mayor Johnson will accept our thanks for a copy of Part Two of "Woburn's Records of Births, Deaths and Marriages." It is a most valuable book and one that must have caused deep research on the part of His Honor. This volume gives a complete record, or as near complete as it will ever be possible, of the deaths that have occurred in Woburn from 1640 to 1873, alphabetically and chronologically arranged. Mr. Johnson in his preface calls attention to the fact that "We spend large sums of money to perpetuate in polished marble the lineage and virtues of a departed friend: yet it is only a question of time when this single record will become obliterated and forever lost. How important it is then to have those memories duplicated by being spread on the printed sheet, thus making a record and the only record which can defy the 'tooth of time.'"—Winchester Star.

"Mellin's Food and I are old friends, it having fulfilled all the conditions demanded of it at my hands," is the testimony of a well-known physician.

From the Other Side.

London, Aug. 3, '90.

Today I took a trip to New—yes, to the famous New Gardens. Went by boat, returned by Four-in-Hand. While the Gardens do not surpass Central Park in natural and picturesque beauty yet they are attractive and interesting. But the crowd! Coney Island not to be compared. And everything orderly, albeit Sunday, and this with every Public Bar (called "Pubs" here) in full go.

Yesterday we went to the justly famous Zoo Gardens. They are interesting to a degree. Space will not permit only a meagre description even had I the power to give it. But one who has the slightest sentiment for nature would enthuse.

But Friday was our Red-Letter-Day. Why? I found an intelligent guide. A former attache of the American Legation and an old newspaper man withal. And I went at his invitation, which means he was interested and not a mere automaton.

First, we went through The Temple and rested in the chambers formerly occupied by the late Judah P. Benjamin, whose record as an American in England is unsurpassed. The Savage Club, the house where Gerrick lived, the Book Stalls, the veritable "Old Curiosity Shop," the house where "David Copperfield" was written, the hotel where "Nellie" stopped on her return. We rested at "Ye Old Cheshire Cheese," the rendesvoux of Johnson, Coolidge, Bosworth, Goldsmith, et als., and I sat in the veritable and favorite seat of Johnson's. The place is unchanged, and I hope it will so remain. In my most egotistic hour I never can begin to express the pleasant sensations of the day.

However fresh the memory, however warm the impulse, however ardent the admiration, however strong the desire, ink could never properly tell the joy one has when so near such old, old friends. In this case realization is better than anticipation.

But is it?

I'm not clear. I'm not sure but I'd prefer the day for the future rather than feel it is an actual past. I may go again and often but the first visit is gone!

It is said: "When good Americans die they go to Paris." I amend: All lovers of English classics should visit London. If death then comes—well, they are better prepared. Lotta did a clever thing while here by having for her Drop Curtain in "Little Nell" an accurate and artistic picture of "The Old Curosity Shop."

Did I tell you I had been associating with Kings, Queens, and Knaves—per a sixpence to Madam Tussuad? Interesting? Very. Artistic? Rather. Realistic? In objectional cases too much so. Washington, Adams, Clay, Arnold, Webster, are not there. And Grant has forgotten his cigar. And Lincoln is handsome. And Garfield wears his hair a la pompadour. And O'Connell has a pudgy face. And Blaine, Cleveland, Curran, and Burke, are absent. Voltaire amazes you. You consult again your catalogue and are in despair if not in doubt. And when Mrs. May Crick steps out of her niche you are sure somebody has erred.

But altogether your day is agreeable and you've seen nothing so grossly bad as to disturb your sleep and so—

Good Night,

J. F. B.

ANOTHER.

Hotel Victoria, Northumberland Ave., London, W. C., August 6, 1890.

With charity I have tried to discover a reason for the existence of the London Edition of the New York Herald. No reason is discoverable except vanity and an inordinate desire to affront the American Colony, and, indeed, Americans en transit. It publishes no American news. It goes out of its way to pick up disagreeable items and when hard pushed probably manufactures them. It elevated a stick to the disaster at South Lawrence, and half a stick to the severe storm about Boston and Providence, and two lines to the brave woman who saved a train of lives; but columns to abusing Blaine and the American Government. In politics it is Tory, which means it toadies to the "powers that be" regardless of right or wrong. But, happily, it has no influence, a Lombard Street broker told me. And Americans deny it. A member of the American Legation put it about right when he said: "the Herald is not half as bad as it used to be because it is only half its size." Bennett has money and he seems to take pleasure in spending it to inflict his compariots.

This brings me to say the American Government is nearer in touch with the people than any government in the World. While Italy is dubious of the Pope's powers, and Germany is making faces at Bismarck (but captures Heligoland as a pastime), and France is quarrelling with its ministry and thinks it can be a Republic and preserve titles (which is impossible), and Belgium in doubt about Leopold, and England fighting its House of Lords, and just passed through the Police Strike, the Postmen's Strike, the Militia Strike, not to mention numerous strikes of the wage earning class, America goes merrily on attending to business at the old stand.

By the way, if you wish news you must read the Editorials. It would seem as if the English paper had no news Editor for you never find any news (except local) in the news columns. The English idea of a newspaper is unique, to say the least. The Pall Mall is the brightest paper, while the Star is the newsiest. Editorially all, except the Herald, are strong and, from observations, are as fearless and outspoken as those in America. And this fact covers many lapses.

You will notice from this clipping the Prince of Wales has offended some titled brutes (or brutes willing to be titled), but the P. of H. is indifferent to the attacks and does as he as a man and a gentleman considers proper. Results, apparently, do not disturb him.

I opine the House of Lords will be abolished unless the Queen abdicates in favor of her oldest son; which she ought to do. In this opinion I am supported by every "peasant" with whom I have talked. By this means the House of Lords may be maintained as an irresponsible body but not hereditary. Fancy Lord Dunlo representing anything but his own imbecility! He did not secure a divorce from his Concert-hall singing wife, and all the common people of England rejoice.

Home Rule!

Ah, yes, Home Rule will come when the Irish members of Parliament will argue rather than abuse. The Irish, stinging under past and present wrongs, are led to intemperate speeches. They are hardly blamable but it is not the winning game. Placate, conciliate! Make a friend of an enemy! Don't butt your head against a stone wall! The English cannot be driven but they can be coaxed. And this applies to every white-faced being. Sugar will catch more flies than vinegar! Parnell made the hit in his recent speech on the Estimates Bill. He was conciliatory. He sees Home Rule in the near future but he wishes a representation in the Imperial Parliament; hence he wishes the I. P., to delegate the powers. I think he is right. The Irish have the Gladstonites, partly the Radicals, the Conservatives, with them, and diplomacy will win the trick. May Robert Emmett's epitaph be written before 1890 dies!

To pass through a kitchen and imagine you have had a meal is not only unsatisfying but ridiculous.

I've merely given my impressions from a two month's observation.—J. F. B.

Winchester.

There was a very fine rain here Sunday night.

Selectmen's meetings have been temporarily suspended.

Letter Carrier Walter Plummer is spending his vacation in N. H.

J. M. Marshall and family are at Cotuit and having a good time.

Mrs. Daniel March, Jr., was a guest at Pigeon Cove House last week.

Mr. David Fullam was registered at the Samoset House, Plymouth, lately.

L. C. and F. L. Patten have been staying at the Nanepashmet, Marblehead Neck.

The Common looks better than it did before the late application of the lawnmower to it.

Mr. W. S. Walbridge's brother-in-law, S. B. Libby of Toledo, Ohio, is visiting him.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Redfern and Miss H. E. McLellan were at Hyannisport a few days ago.

General and Mrs. J. M. Corse were among the distinguished arrivals at Bar Harbor a short time ago.

The people at the Highlands have been enjoying some private picnics this summer. They are a jolly crowd.

The Y. P. S. C. E. have sent a great many flowers to Boston sick beds this summer and thus done a great deal of good.

The funeral of Mr. E. P. Johnson, wife and son, who were killed in the Quincy railroad accident last Tuesday, took place here on Thursday. Mr. Johnson was a native of this town.

General Sherman visited General and Mrs. Corse here during Eucampment week. You remember it was General Sherman ordered Gen. Corse to "Hold the Fort for I am Coming."

Mrs. Dr. Hiller is having a good deal of work done to her lot in Wildwood Cemetery. The magnificent family mausoleum is in this Cemetery, or is to be when completed. It is the rarest thing of the kind in America.

Miss Lavinia Farnham celebrated her 84th birthday last Saturday at Sunnyside, Winchester, at the residence of her nephew, Mr. George H. Gilbert. Miss Farnham has hosts of warm friends and was the recipient of many beautiful and costly gifts.

Mrs. T. P. Wilson and Master Price are enjoying themselves at Locke's Mills, Me. While at this place last summer Mrs. Wilson did some very clever writing for more papers than one. We hope to hear from her through the columns of the Star this season.

Boston Theatres.

On Monday, Aug. 25, there will be presented at the always popular and well-patronized Grand Opera House in Boston, Proctor and Mansfield, Proprietors and Managers, "My Jack" by a company of the first quality of dramatic talent especially selected for the presentation of his powerfully realistic play. It will be found to be one of the most attractive entertainments offered by any Boston theatre for years. Matinees will be given at 2 o'clock on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday afternoons.

Dissolution of Co-partnership.

The firm of Moore & Morris is this day dissolved by mutual consent, Mr. Richard Morris withdrawing from the firm.

PREVAILING PRAYER.

LESSON VIII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 24.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xviii, 1-14. Commit Verses, 13, 14—Golden Text, Luke xviii, 14—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "And He spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint." The Kingdom of God and the coming of the Son of Man in power and glory, and the cross as the only way to the Kingdom, were the topics constantly in the mind and on the lips of the Lord Jesus. All the miracles of healing were foreshadowings of the health that shall be when the Kingdom comes, and His discourses were full of the righteousness of the Kingdom.

2. "There was in a city a judge, which feared not God, neither regarded man." The eyes of the Lord which run to and fro through the whole earth (II Chron. xvi, 9; Jer. xxxii, 19; Zech. iv, 10) had seen many such. He sees many such today both in high and low places among men.

3. "And there was a widow in that city; and she came unto him, saying, Avenge me of mine adversary." Many are the widows and fatherless that in this world are poor and oppressed, and yet God sees and cares for each one, though He may not always seem to. See His special relation to such in Deut. x, 17, 18; Ps. lxviii, 5. In Jas. i, 27, we learn that part of pure and undefiled religion before God is to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction.

4. "And he would not for a while: but afterward he said within himself, Though I fear not God, nor regard man."

5. "Yet because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me." No regard for God or man, and no desire to do justly for this oppressed and persecuted widow, but simply through desire for his own personal comfort, he will finally attend to her. Let us ask ourselves if there is any of this spirit in us. When we see it even in the disciples we have cause to fear for ourselves (Matt. xv, 23). Am I doing good works simply from a sense of duty, or to quiet my conscience? Do I help the poor just to get rid of them? Is my comfort the main thing?

6. "And the Lord said, Hear what the unjust judge saith." What a contradiction there is in these two words "unjust judge" when we remember that it is written, "He that ruleth over men, must be just, ruling in the fear of God"

7. "And shall not God avenge His own elect which cry day and night unto Him, though He bear long with them?" The word "elect" in Scripture refers sometimes to the believing remnant of Israel (Isa. lxv, 9, 22); sometimes to the church gathered out of Jews and Gentiles (Rom. viii, 33; Col. iii, 12), and sometimes to Christ Himself (Isa. xlii, 1). Inasmuch as in the Gospels Christ is dealing only with Israel (Matt. x, 5, 6; xv, 24), with but a hint here and there of the church (Matt. xvi, 18; John x, 16). He must refer here to the elect of Israel as in Matt. xxiv, 22.

8. "I tell you that He will avenge them speedily." When Jesus came in His humiliation as a servant to suffer and die, He read from the prophecy of Isaiah concerning the acceptable year of the Lord; and He closed the Book. When He comes again to Israel it will be to fulfill the next sentences, which He did not read that day.

"Nevertheless, when the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" The time when the Son of Man shall come in power, and great glory (Matt. xxiv, 30; xxvi, 64) is the time when He will avenge speedily; and this question implies that at that time the faithful remnant in Israel will be very few in number. In fact He tells us in Matt. xxiv, 21, 22, that the tribulation of those days just before His return shall be so great that it shall be shortened for the elect's sake.

9. "And He spake this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous and despised others." We shall now learn who constitute the true elect, and whether they are the elect remnant of Israel or the elect church, the same spirit is necessary in each.

10. "Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a Pharisee and the other a publican." Outwardly the two are alike in this, that they both go to the temple, and they both go to pray.

11. "The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself." He trusted in himself (vss. 9) and prayed with himself. It was self all the way through with him, and in his own eyes he was A No. 1. He knew nothing of Paul's motto, "Not I, but Christ."

"God I thank thee that I am not as other men, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican." The man did not think that his prayer would be reported and handed down to posterity as a specimen of self righteousness, any more than we think that we must give account of our words. But let one of man's latest inventions, the phonograph, remind us how easily God can record all our words and even our thoughts.

12. "I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess." The law of Moses required but one fast in the year (Lev. xxiii, 27-29). During the seventy years' captivity, however, they had four yearly fasts (Zech. viii, 19), but this man with his two a week was away ahead of all requirements; he was very religious. And then he gave a tenth of all to religious purposes, and according to Mal. iii, 10, that was the right thing to do. He does look like a good man. But observe, he only prayed with himself; he did not ask for a single thing.

13. "And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner." Here is a man despised by others; like the lepers of the last lesson he is an outcast; he stands afar off as if confessing his great distance from God, morally; he has not one good thing to say about himself; he is a sinner and he knows it, and he feels it, and that is his plea, and on that ground he asks for mercy. His "be merciful" has in it the idea of mercy through atonement. It is like saying, "Be propitious," "Make reconciliation." He recognizes the need of a sacrifice for his sin. He thinks of the mercy seat sprinkled with the blood of atonement. He is one of the truly penitent, bringing the sacrifice of a broken spirit, a broken and a contrite heart (Ps. li, 17), and he looks for forgiveness through the bloodshedding of a substitute. If he does not see all this the Lord sees it in his "God be merciful to me a sinner."

14. "I tell you this man went down to his house justified, rather than the other." The Pharisee's goodness was in God's sight only as filthy rags (Isa. lxiv, 6), for it came from a sinful, deceitful and desperately wicked heart (Jer. xvii, 9); and a corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit.

FIGHTING CANADA JAYS.

Two Birds Have a Desperate Encounter Over a Dead Sparrow.

In his Cambridge museum Mr. William Brewster has two live Canadian jays (Perisoreus canadensis) which he caught while encamped at Umbagog lake, Me.

I will call one of the birds Jack, a name by which he is locally known in the lake region, and the other Bob. Both are now kept in one large, roomy cage and appeared to be the best of friends, possibly owing to there having been no cause for a falling out, but recently they had a regular "set to," which I witnessed.

Both birds being naturally fond of flesh and having had none for several days I shot an English sparrow with which to feed them. Cutting off the wings, feet, head and tail, and removing the feathers, I approached the cage with the body in my fingers. Immediately Jack came to the wire bars to receive my present, which he undoubtedly believed was meant entirely and solely for him. He grasped it in his claws, and hopping to a perch began tearing off pieces of flesh and swallowing them with apparent relish and in great haste, while Bob looked on, evidently astonished at Jack's appetite and wondering whether enough would be left to "swear by" when his turn came. Jack was at last forced to rest from his greedy efforts, and when the lull came Bob, who had been watching from the corner of his eye, made a dash at his companion and the food fell to the bottom of the cage.

Bob was there, however, evidently intending to make the most of the situation, but Jack could not stand by and see Bob thus enjoying himself without making some effort in his own behalf, for like the dog in the manger he did not intend to let Bob have it all, even though he could not eat it himself. So he "jumped on him" and fastened his claws as firmly in Bob's back as he had previously done in the body of the sparrow, and began pecking him in the top of the head. At first no attention was paid to this annoyance beyond an occasional shake or flutter of the wings, either made to dislodge his enemy or else to regain his balance or keep from falling over backward, but Jack pecked viciously, occasionally turning his head to one side after taking a good hold, as if endeavoring to tear out a piece between Bob's ears, and this, too, every time just as the latter raised his head to swallow. At last Bob could not stand this any longer.

The tremendous pecks received in the back of the head, and more than all the griping pains in the small of his back where Jack's claws were planted, caused him to forget his appetite and raised his "dander," and turning partially over on the right side he caught Jack a "left hander." This wrung from his victim a cry of pain and landed him sprawling on the bottom of the cage, where he tipped over the dish of drinking water, which soaked them both. Neither would let go his hold, but kept clawing, pecking, scratching, rolling over and over, all the while uttering loud, discordant notes, which plainly indicated they were not only furious but under great stress of pain.

At length, fearing the birds might in their anger destroy one another, thus ending the whole affair with a tragedy, I took the cage down from where it was hanging in order to separate them; but only with considerable difficulty could this be accomplished, it being actually necessary to pull them apart. They finally resumed their accustomed places on the perch, while the "bone of contention" lay upon the floor.

Both birds, with soiled and dripping plumage, were pitiful looking objects. Jack, who had the best of the fight up to receiving the left hander, appeared in the better condition of the two, but looked as though the food so hastily swallowed had become slightly displaced. As for Bob he seemed to feel the abuse and shameful treatment keenly, hung his head, and half closing one eye, as though that member had been injured, refused to be comforted. —Forest and Stream.

They Were Live Princesses.

A short time ago an amusing incident occurred at Freiburg, in Germany. Two ladies were standing in front of a shop window, examining the wares exhibited for sale, when the owner of the establishment, impatient at their not entering his premises, told them sharply that they had been there long enough and requested them to move on. The ladies walked away without a word of remonstrance. Half an hour later a footman in court livery called at the shop and asked the ill mannered tradesman, on behalf of the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Baden, how much she owed him for having looked in at his shop window. The man's feelings on receiving the message can be more easily imagined than described.—London Telegraph.

Practical Education.

An admirable provision has been made by the magistracy of Breslau, which will tend in more ways than one to the improvement of the pupils in the public schools. A botanical school garden has been instituted for the regular supply of plants to the schools of the place and for enabling teachers to make observations on the spot with their pupils.—Exchange.

Sisterly Sympathy.

Maud—No, dear, the worst they can say is that you look old.—Epoch.

A Fortunate Woman.

Mrs. Mary L. Baker, of Ovid, Mich., has reason to be very thankful. She was a great sufferer from heart disease for years. Was short of breath, had hungry spells, pain in her side, fluttering, faintness, etc. After taking two bottles of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, she says, "I am better than for 20 years. My mind and eyesight have improved wonderfully. I advise all peasons thus afflicted to use this great remedy. Sold by Charles H. Buss druggist. Dr. Miles' work on Heart Disease, containing marvelous testimonials, free.

Forced To Leave Home.

Over 60 people were forced to leave their homes yesterday to call at their druggists for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicines. If your blood is bad, your liver and kidneys out of order, if you are constipated and have headache and an unsightly complexion, don't fail to call on any druggists to-day for a free sample of this grand remedy. The ladies praise it. Everyone likes it. Large size packages 50 cents.

LITTLE WRECKS.

I saw a dainty violet
In bloom upon the hill,
Close by the bubbling streamlet
That turned the village mill.
One day a naughty urchin
Came wandering 'long that way,
And plucked the dainty violet
And dropped it on the clay.
The plant that bore the blossom
Died for its stolen child,
The leaves in sadness bent their heads,
The restless stream grew mild;
But what is that to you or me?
Such little griefs must always be.

I knew a little maiden,
Who was so kind and true,
But sorrow met and claimed her,
And how, I'll tell to you.
I know you'll call her foolish,
And say she might have known;
But let me tell you, reader,
The blossom bud was gone;
And now I think my story
I scarcely need to tell.
For if a maiden's heart can heal
Flowers can rebloom as well.
But what is that to you or me?
Such trifling griefs must always be.

And what is it to this great world
If we are grave or gay?
It will not vanish when we're gone,
Or tarry when we stay;
Our easy sail will doubtless cease
And ill winds drive ashore
And leave us there a stranded wreck—
It cannot harm us more.
The violets by the bubbling stream,
The maiden in her prime,
They both return unto their dust—
Likewise my idle rhyme.
But what is that to you or me?
Such trifling wrecks must always be.
—Lillie Binkley in American.

Reflex Nerve Action.

Why is it that upon taking an imprudently large mouthful of ice cream one is apt to feel a sensation of violent pain in the temple? The ice cream, when such a big mouthful of it is incautiously swallowed, produces a chilling effect upon the nerves of the larynx, or "voice box," and of the pharynx, in the throat. The sensation shoots back to the center of those nerves in the brain, but there it finds a side connection with the great facial nerve that starts from in front of the ear and extends its branches over the side of the face.

One branch of this facial nerve extending across the temple is a nerve of sensation, while the other branches are nerves of motion, governing chiefly the play of the mouth. The pain from the chill is side tracked along the nerve branch that traverses the temple, and the feeling is likely to be quite agonizing in that locality for a moment or so, very likely involving the eyeball sympathetically. This feeling of a sensation in one nerve when another nerve is attacked is what is called "reflex action."—Washington Star.

The Editor of Punch.

The most important and popular citizen of Ramsgate, England, is Mr. Francis C. Burnand, the editor of Punch. He has a fine roomy old house, with a splendid lawn in front, on the great cliff to the west of the town. From his windows he can see the white breakers on the Goodwin Sands. Mr. Burnand spents part of nearly every week of the year in his seaside house. He leads a regular, quiet country life, riding for one hour in the morning. As is known, Mr. Burnand has a large family. Both his daughters and sons are pictures of robust health. Close to Mr. Burnand's house are the monastery and the chapel of the Benedictines. The chapel is one of the elder Pugin's masterpieces. Mr. Burnand and his family are among the regular worshipers. The eager friendship the celebrated editor of Punch always shows for Ramsgate has made the townspeople look up to him as a benefactor, and he and his family are much esteemed accordingly.—Toronto Globe.

Boiling Water Not a Guarantee of Purity.

It is the custom to believe that the most impure water will be rendered pure by boiling, and that an absolute safeguard against the danger of water containing disease germs is thus afforded. While it is true that boiling will kill the germs of disease, yet the fact has been pointed out by the very highest authority that while boiling kills the germs of a particular disease, it yet, in reality, renders the water more impure than it was before, because by the very death of these germs dead organic matter is allowed to remain in the water, which is shortly polluted by putrefaction. Hence, while boiling is a most excellent precaution against the occurrence of typhoid fever or similar diseases, it must be borne in mind that the water is not necessarily purified, but that simply the power to produce a specific disease is removed.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

European Pottery in Africa.

A strange discovery was made at one of the towns on the upper Niger by Commander Davoust and his comrades. They found a piece of evidently very old European pottery. It was fixed upn the summit of a mosque, and the Mohammedan natives told the travelers that it had been given to them near the beginning of this century by a white man who was going down the river. From all the information the travelers collected they could reach no other conclusion than that the donor of this little vase was Mungo Park, the pioneer of African exploration in the past hundred years.—Exchange.

A Most Wonderful Baby.

In 1721 there was born at Lubeck, Germany, one of the most remarkable characters ever known in the history of the world, or, perhaps, that will ever be known in all times to come, little Christian Henry Heinecken, who could pronounce every word contained in the German language when but 9½ months old. When 1 year of age he knew all the leading events in the world's history and was as familiar with Pentateuch as most modern professors are supposed to be with their first text book. At 14 months he could give a complete history of every book in both the Old and New Testament; at 2 years 6 months he could answer any question in geography and ancient history. He could hold conversation with the learned savants in German, French, Latin and Dutch when ending the third year of his life, which terminated a few months later by his death in 1725, in the fourth year of his age.

In the few short weeks allotted to him, little Henry was baby, boy, youth, man and gray beard; learning more in that short time than many of the world's greatest personages have been able to learn in the years of a long life. Just a little while before his death he was called before the king of Denmark, who showed the little prodigy every mark of respect. Returning to his native city he set about studying the religions and learning to write, which, added to his other acquirements, was too much for his delicate health, resulting in his death as above mentioned.—St. Louis Republic.

Civilization of the Peruvians.

In architecture the Peruvians reached a high state of perfection, and the remains of one of their works of art, at Lake Titicaca, are truly wonderful. Their temples were covered with extensive bas reliefs, representing, as it is supposed, certain astronomical figures. They were skilled in making stone implements, but very few arrow heads have been found, which leads to the supposition that they made very little use of bows and arrows, and that their chief weapon of defense was the sling. Besides this, they used war clubs and javelins.

The country abounds in extensive copper mines, and the inhabitants were evidently well acquainted with certain metals, their agricultural implements being chiefly of bronze. They were also skillful gold and silver smiths, and excelled in the manufacture of all kinds of pottery, while the art of spinning and weaving was also not unknown to them.

The tombs that have been found in Peru are very numerous and remarkably well preserved. This is due to their belief in the immortality of man and the superstition that unless all his members were kept together, he would not be resurrected.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Ribbons Instead of Sleeve Links.

Apropos of the things men wear, you must drop your sleeve links and substitute for them a very narrow ribbon, which is tied in a stiff little bow through the two button holes.

This is le dernier cri in Paris, and no end of surmises come up as to how the fashion arose. Most fashions have their birth from accidents, and it is fair to conclude that Alphonse, in a spirit of gallantry, gave his sleeve links to Therese, Elise or Marie, and that she, returning the compliment, drew the pretty little ribbon from her lingerie and fastened together, in a feminine fashion, the cuffs that were linkless.—Philadelphia Times.

The Value of Kangaroo Skins.

Up to 1869 kangaroos were killed and eaten in Australia, and their hides were cut into shoestrings. But an Englishman named Brown in that year discovered the remarkable character of the leather and brought several thousand skins to this country.

He tried to sell the hides to tanners, but they were shy of the novelty, and he had to sell them at a sacrifice to a bookbinder. The bookbinder made triangular corner pieces in ledgers and commercial books out of the skins, and so ascertained the good quality of the leather. It was in this way that the large leather factories were first attracted to kangaroo hide.—Nature.

Shirt for an Ensign.

CHINA'S GREAT WALL.

A Missionary Describes the Structure That Was Built 1,000 Years Ago.

The Rev. William P. Sprague, of Kalgan, North China, writes as follows to The Missionary Herald:

If any one doubts the existence of China's great wall let him come with me to Kalgan and see for himself the identical wall built by the first Emperor Chin, in 200 B. C.

Take a steamer across the Pacific to Tientsin, then a native boat up the Pei Ho river three days, then pack saddle or mule litter five days more, through mountains and plains to Kalgan. Before you reach the city you see a dark line along the hill tops just beyond the town, and by the time you enter our compound you see the wall stretching away over the mountains as far as the eye can reach, both east and west, with towers on all the prominent elevations. As we pay it a visit for closer inspection you find it a windrow or ridge of reddish brown porphyry rock broken, not cut, into irregular blocks. These are so well fitted to each other that the outer surface is tolerably smooth and has somewhat the appearance of crazy patchwork.

It is about 10 feet broad at the base and 15 feet high, the sides sloping to a sharp ridge, like a steep house roof. You may follow this wall eastward to the sea and westward to the Kansuh, the northwestern province, and so doing you will have traversed the entire northern frontier of China, 1,500 miles. Though you find several hundred miles of adobe sun dried mud wall, yet other hundreds of miles are of good brick and higher than at Kalgan. By the time you have traced its length you will be willing to concede not only that China has a great wall, but also that the ruler who could conquer so vast a country, drive out the invading Tartars and build a fortification 1,500 miles long to keep them out was worthy to be called the first emperor and to give his name (China) to the country.

If any one laughs at the folly of spending so much labor on such a useless defense let him remember that it was a defense only against horseback riders, armed with nothing but bows and arrows. A few guards on the watch towers could, with their signal fires on the mountain tops, easily rouse the villagers far and near to the defense of their homes. And this well accomplished its purpose for over a thousand years, when the great Ghenghis Khan, with his brave Mongol followers, broke his way through.

This section of the great wall becomes for half a mile the city wall of Kalgan. A beautiful temple is built on this wall to celebrate Ghenghis Khan's victorious passage.

This two thousand year old wall is little known to the world at large, because there is another wall much oftener visited and described by visitors from the western world. It is near Peking, and a far more imposing structure. This is only an inner arm of the great wall, but 500 miles long and not so old by 700 years. It is built of cut granite and good brick, and is 30 feet wide at its base, 25 feet wide at the top and 30 feet high. It is a fine sight as it winds over the highest mountain tops.

How Rothschild Got Rich.

The late Baron Charles Rothschild was one day asked by a friend whom he had taken with him on 'change at his request to tell him the secret of getting rich by speculations on the bourse, as the same people always did business with each other, and it was therefore natural to suppose that the profits and losses would be equalized in the long run.

"Just count the number of gentlemen who are now making the biggest noise," said the baron.

"There are fourteen of them."

"Very good; we will come and count them again in a fortnight."

They did so, and this time there were only eleven.

"You see," said Rothschild, "the three that are missing have been swallowed up by the rest."

"Then how must you go about it if you want to speculate successfully?" inquired the inexperienced stranger.

A Diamond Shortcake.

A wealthy jeweler of this city, while dining in a restaurant, emphasized a remark by striking the table with his fists. A valuable diamond he wore on his finger disappeared with the blow, and though the place was carefully searched the stone could not be found. Soon after the hunt had been abandoned a customer named Spencer was served with a piece of strawberry shortcake, and as he passed his knife through it it struck something hard. With a jocular remark to the waiter in attendance the obstruction was removed, and proved to be the lost diamond. It was returned to the owner. —Providence Journal.

After the Shower.

"I see no resemblance unless it be that they make our milk sour," replied Jack, who had "heard it before."—American Grocer.

A writer in an English magazine gives the particulars of forty-two royal marriages, and shows that in each and every case policy and not love brought about the match. No prince or princess has any right to fall in love. They have enough good things without it.

The breath of a chronic catarrh patient is often so offensive that he becomes an object of disgust. After a time ulceration sets in, the spong bones are attacked and frequently entirely destroyed. A constant source of discomfort is the dripping of the purulent secretions into the throat, sometimes producing inecterate bronchitis, which in its turn has been the exciting cause of pulmonary disease. The brilliant results which have attended its use for years past properly designate Ely's Cream Balm as by far the best and only cure.

A Forecast of Pacific Commerce.

The newer west, if it can have no interior water traffic, will nevertheless have—indeed already has—a commercial position of vast importance. Years since a great Russian publicist, Alexander Herven, wrote of the Pacific ocean as destined to be the New World's Mediterranean. It was pointed out that nearly one-half of the globe's inhabitants were on the Asian side thereof, and were therefore its commercial tributaries. The American shores of the Pacific are to be first considered in all forecasts of commercial progress and power. The people who are making Puget sound alive with their activities are surely bound to grasp the traffic of the North Pacific. The men of the Oregon and California coast are not likely to be limited in their industrial ambitions. One of their "captains" holds the Sandwich Islands in his hands, and Samoa will yet, despite the triple protectorate, fall easily under American control—not necessarily governmental, however.

No matter what action British or Canadian statesmen may take, and however vast the sums they expend, it will soon be seen in our national councils that the newer west will demand, and that its growing business activity will compel, the absorption not only of the whole coast from Washington to Alaska, but of at least the northwestern portion of the Dominion. British Columbia and all the rest east of Winnipeg will ere long be looking toward a continental union. The same law of physical unity which has been considered as immediately affecting the newer west and its internal polity must control in the extension of our republic to the northwest. The peninsular of Lower California will finally follow the same directive impulse.—Col. Richard J. Hinton in Forum.

An Easy Victim of Swindlers.

Strangers should be wary of the intimate approaches of a class of smooth tongued swindlers who always infest the river passenger precincts. In Caroline street, a quiet little thoroughfare a short block from the Catskill steamboat pier, No. 33, North river, Wasi Lohi, a Hungarian farm workman of Stockport, N. Y., was drawn into conversation the other day with a well dressed elderly man, who asked where he was going. The Hungarian, who speaks fair English, answered that he was on his way to Stockport to resume work after a visit to the city.

"Stockport?" said the other with an emphasis of delight and surprise. "Why myself and family all go there this evening, too—on the boat now—just sent my things aboard."

At this moment a young man came up, and with a dramatic heaving of his chest and vigorous wiping of his forehead, as if he had been working with a rush, said, "Trunks and everything put on the boat, sir; I'll take my pay now, please."

"Certainly," said the presumed employer, "take whatever it is out of this," handing him a twenty dollar bill.

The young man could not change it; the Hungarian was asked to do this. He supplied two fives and a ten out of his purse of $21. The young man went away as soon as he was paid. Then the old man said he must go and look after his goods and family. And after promising to see Lohi on the steamer went away at a quick pace. It then occurred to the possessor of the twenty dollar bill to see if it was a good one. He showed it to a reporter. It was merely a Confederate note. The man gave way to tears, oaths and other paroxysms of rage and loss.—New York Tribune.

Composes Waltzes, but Never Dances.

Herr Eduard Strauss gave the following interview to a reporter of The Cincinnati Times-Star: "Do you waltz, Herr Strauss?" "Nein! Nein!" The waltz king doesn't waltz. "Any of your remarkable family ever waltz?" "Nein, nein. None valz." None of the Strauss family from Johann, the elder, down have waltzed. "Why don't you learn to waltz, Herr Strauss?" "I do not see how people can go to balls and valz and valz, and sweat so. I would not do it. I don't like it. I no valz. No." The waltz king doesn't like the idea of sweating and winding himself for a little dizzying whirling and the fun there may be in it. This was Herr Eduard Strauss, the conductor of the great Strauss orchestra. He laughed heartily when the reporter asked him if he waltzed. "You are the first one in America to ask me that question. I play so much valz music that people must think I valz. But no, no."

Woman's Column.

Several lady Sunday School Superintendents are winning laurels in Maine, while three sisters are making successful supervisors of day schools. One lady superintendent closed her career with a surplus of $30 in the treasury.

Miss Andrea Hofer, a girl of 20, is editor of the McGregor (Ia.) News. She carries on the paper herself, doing all the editorial and nearly half of the mechanical work. She has worked in the office since she was 10 years old, and has graduated out of every department. Her helpers, a boy and a girl, both younger and herself, set the correspondence and clippings. The editorials, notes, reviews, etc., Miss Hofer sets in type as she thinks them out, her time being too precious to write them.

The New York Commercial Advertiser says that the item going the rounds of the press to the effect that Mrs. Christine Terhune Herrick, "Marion Harland's daughter," is the principal "reader" at the Century office, is not true. The Advertiser says the mistake was easily made, as the principal "reader" at the Century office is a Mrs. Herrick. Mrs. Sophie B. Herrick, who is no relation of Marion Harland's, but who is an exceedingly clever woman, and what is more, a scientific woman of unusual attainments.

Mrs. Alice Shaw, the American belle sifflleuse, as she is called, first discovered her remarkable facility in whistling in attempting to teach a favorite bird to improve its voice. A southern friend presented Mrs. Shaw with a brilliant specimen of the far famed mocking bird, which now and again had curious periods of utter silence. To awaken her little pet from its strange lethargy and almost moping quietude, Mrs. Shaw would whistle by its cage for hours until it was a toss up in the end which could elicit the clearer note, the lady or the bird. From this incessant practice Mrs. Shaw's whistling assumed a firm and sustained form.—Paris and American Register.

The servants and mistresses of Vienna have to manage their affairs under the superintendence of the police. The latter keep a "servants' book," in which each girl's dismissal and re-engagements are recorded, together with copies of character given by each employer. This character has to contain the three words, "treu, fleissig, sittsam," honest, industrious and well conducted. A mistress may leave out any of these three words if she finds cause, but few venture to do so. The day after she has dismissed a servant with defective character she receives a summons to the police station, where she has to swear on the crucifix that the girl is either not honest, industrious or virtuous. She is rigorously cross-examined, and if the girl insists with her denial, the visits to the police are repeated over and over again. A written character in Vienna, therefore, means nothing, and misstresses resort to other means of getting information.

FETTERED.

In Cheyenne's early days the sheriff was one of the most important personages in the country. In fact, he still holds a conspicuous position in most cities of the vigorous, impetuous West.

Some years ago Sheriff Black of Cheyenne was much annoyed by the persistence and determination of sundry suitors for the hand of his fair daughter, Miss Helen.

As is always the case in the mining districts, the male population far outnumbered the gentler sex, and Miss Helen, who was a handsome brunette, would have been a belle among far severer critics than the youths of Cheyenne.

She had graduated in St. Louis, and besides being a gifted musician, was a devout worshipper of nature, and fond of out-door exercises.

Almost any fine evening in summer, a passer-by might hear her rich mezzo voice accompanying her guitar to some ringing "Ballad of the plains."

Unconscious was she of the fact that the melody floated out from the shadows of the cottonwood trees, and mingled with the broad, effulgent moonlight, and that many a luckless youth dated a hopeless love from the first evening when he had dropped in to help the sheriff and the old servant in making an audience.

Miss Helen cared little for the admiration of men, but accepted it as a matter of course, having been brought up among them. She enjoyed herself in a fashion of her own, with her books, guitar, sketch-book and her spirited horse, Wildfire.

Two of her lovers, however, seemed to gain more favor than the rest. In fact, popular opinion was puzzled as to which would win.

One of these was a tall, athletic young Westener, who was as bright and invigorating of presence as the air he breathed, and in whose clear, blue eyes not a shadow of deceit was visible. Handsome, for true, but so sturdy and independent that he impressed one as a young giant.

He was an ardent geologist, could analyze a "find" as well as an expert loved his mountains and worshipped—Miss Helen.

But with all his devotion Joe was a descreet young fellow, and held his curly head up in defiance of mankind in general and his rival in particular, and he had never let the fair Helen feel too sure of her conquest.

The aforesaid rival was a wealthy young mine-owner from Chicago—all that is conveyed by the term, "a polished gentleman!" He had laughed heartily when, on departing for his new home, his Chicago friends had jokingly predicted that he would lose his heart to some western beauty. But here he was, eager to lay his fate and fortune at the feet of the sheriff's queenly daughter.

One bright breezy day in September, Helen cantered off soon after dinner with her sketching materials, ostensibly to make some sketches of the autumn scenery, but really to commune with Nature, the only mother she had ever known, and to decide what she should give on the morrow to her wealthy lover, who that day had asked her to be his wife. She had told him that she must read her own heart before she could answer, and he hoped for a favorable reply.

Joe had been offended by one of her hasty speeches the week before. They were talking about Russell, and she had asserted somewhat warmly that she knew of no one whose society she preferred. As soon as the impulsive words were spoken she repented, but Joe rode away with a look in his blue eyes that had haunted her ever since. Somehow, Joe's haughty head, flung back like a stag at bay, kept looming up before her mental vision, when duty demanded that she be thinking of Russell and his flattering offer.

The hours wore on, and so preoccupied was she that she did not observe the heavy clouds that were rolling black and massive down the mountain sides.

Suddenly a large drop splashed in her face, and she looked about her in alarm. A heavy equinoctial storm seemed almost upon her.

Wildfire sprang forward at the touch of the whip, and literally flew in the direction of the house.

The great clouds came rolling over the hills like giant ogres clad in mist. Thunder and sharp, vivid lightning followed, and then the deluge!

Wildfire dashed on until they came to the creek, and then the girl drew back in dismay!

The creek was a foaming torrent and she could not see the bridge!

Suddenly, she heard a man's voice shouting to her, and in a few minutes Joe, on his tough little mustang, was beside her. He wore a buffalo overcoat and threw a large cloak of her own about her shoulders. She did not wait to ask how he happened to come for her. She forgot that he was angry and hurt. She reached out her firm, white hand and caught Joe's extended fingers, and side by side the two horses were urged across the bridge.

They galloped home in silence, and when they reached there and Helen stepped into the friendly shelter of the broad veranda, she noted the fact that Joe led both horses to the stable and put them up.

Half an hour later, Joe, arrayed in Judge Black's dressing-gown and slippers (articles brought by Miss Helen from the East), was explaining to the rosy, demure young mistress of the house that her father had been suddenly called to the next town and might not return before early morning.

"He asked me to keep a sort of look-out over the place, and when I rode over to ask you to invite me to tea and found you gone, I hastened after you," he said.

This speech over, an embarrassed silence followed. It was broken by Joe, who looked straight at his hostess and said:

"If I am intruding, Miss Nellie, why, just the word and I'll go."

Helen assured him, in a constrained sort of way, that she was glad of company, and went out to prepare the little supper herself, for in those days servants were rare in the West.

After supper, in an awkward pause of the conversation, Joe took up a little case from the table and began examining its contents—a bright, new pair of hand-cuffs.

They were a new kind, just from the East, and Helen began explaining the spring-lock, which opened with a skeleton key.

Somehow, one of the bands was on Joe's wrist, as she slipped the other bright circlet over her firm white hand, when lo! the lock snapped and they were locked together.

Helen blushed crimson and commenced searching for the key in nervous haste. But no key was to be found.

Suddenly the truth dawned upon her. The key was in her father's pocket, and he was on the other side of Crow Creek, which was now a foaming torrent and dangerous to cross in the storm and darkness.

She tried to smile and treat the matter lightly, but it was just the ghost of a smile, and it was a very doleful voice that said:

"I am afraid, Mr. Gordon, that we must break the lock. Father has the key."

Joe felt tempted to indulge in a hearty laugh over their queer situation, but a glance at the distressed face across the table sobered his mirth. A great throb of sorrow came over him. If she loved him, she would not care so much.

He gazed at the shining fetters on her wrists so long and so earnestly that Helen lifted her eyes wonderingly, but dropped them again.

What woman ever failed to read the story that she saw in the honest blue depths of her humble young giant's eyes.

Her confusion encouraged Joe, but there was almost a tremor in his voice as he laid his great brown hand over her fettered one and said softly:

"Nell, if you only loved me I would believe that it was fate that bound us together. I would take it as an omen that fate would grant me my dearest wish. But, Nellie, I dare not hope."

The girl looked up slowly into her lover's eyes, looked steadily, though she still saw that look in them:

"Joe," she said "it is fate."

The cool and cultured Mr. Russell would have marveled had he seen "that queenly girl" sobbing for very joy on Joe Gordon's shoulder, and perhaps he would have marveled still more had he known that at that moment the thought of him and his millions did not once enter her mind.

When the judge returned in the gray of the morning he found an interesting picture.

The lamp still burned in the corner and the fire was smouldering away. On the broad lounge by the fire-place sat Helen and her lover. She had fallen asleep from sheer weariness, and Joe sat like a statue lest he might disturb the fair sleeper whose cheek was so near his own.

The old gentleman's face was a study. When the truth dawned upon him he flung himself into the nearest chair and laughed until he waked the echoes—likewise Miss Helen.

She was at first bewildered by her novel position, but soon remembered the true situation and relapsed into silence, leaving Joe to tell the story.

"And now, Judge," concluded he, "you may loose these fetters with the understanding that they will soon be replaced by more enduring ones. I must not let my prisoner escape."

Helen's father had always liked young Gordon, and his blessing was forthcoming.

The announcement of the approaching nuptials gave Mr. Russell a conclusive answer, and he settled up his affairs in short order and returned East.

The old judge used to tell with great gusto how Gordon won his perverse daughter and how gracefully she wore her fetters after she was won.—Atlanta Constitution.

The Only Pure Baking Powder.

(From Hall's Journal of Health.)

We feel it our duty to state that of a number of different kinds of Baking Powder purchased in a neighboring city for examination, the only one we found made of Pure Grape Cream of Tartar, and that did not contain any Alum, Acid Phosphates, or Ammonia, and that was absolutely free from adulterations, was

The New Discovery.

You have heard your friends and neighbors talking about it. You may yourself be one of the many who know from personal experience just how good a thing it is. If you have ever tried it, you are one of its staunch friends, because the wonderful thing about it is, that when once given a trial, Dr. King's New Discovery ever after holds a place in the house. If you have never used it and should be afflicted with a cough, cold or any Throat, Lung or Chest trouble, secure a bottle at once and give it a fair trial. It is guaranteed every time, or money refunded. Trial Bottles Free at H. L. Flanders & Co. drugstore.

Woman's Column.

Anna Ella Carroll.

The Century Magazine, during its exhaustive studies of our Civil War, and of "the men who fought and planned our battles," has been brought face to face with the singular historic fact that some of the most important and successful planning of the war was done by a woman. The testimony being indubitable, the Century, as a faithful historian, could not ignore a matter of such importance, and in its August number presents the facts of the case, summarized in an open letter.

This brings fairly before the public an important and deeply interesting chapter of American history, hitherto not generally known. It shows how our shrewd and earnest President Lincoln availed himself of a woman's genius, at the time of our great national peril, by enlisting as a confidential adviser a Southern lady whose birth and education had been eminently fitted to develop a strategic genius of the highest order. Miss Anna Ella Carroll not only planned the Tennessee campaign, but also suggested other important and successful movements.

Our Civil War would probably have been brought to a more speedy conclusion had Miss Carroll's sagacious assistance been still further utilized. But enough was actually accomplished by her to determine the result of the war, and to prove that, "in the gravest matters," it is well to "consult the women." It seemed well to the Germans in the time of Tacitus, it was well in our Civil War, it will be well in all our future perplexities, to double the wisdom of our national counsels by availing ourselves of the highest talent vouchsafed by the Almighty to His daughters as well as His sons.

It is to be hoped that the National Woman's Relief Corps will take measures for continued and increased effort in behalf of the claims of Anna Ella Carroll. The corps has presented petitions to Congress, and contributed toward her support, but it should now bring its full influence to bear on Congress to secure the passage of the long-deferred act of justice the government owes this aged and feeble woman.—Woman's Journal.

Miss Mattie Shaw lately passed the State examination in Pharmacy at Lansing, Mich., graduating at the head of a class of 104 students, 100 young men and four young women. Out of 3,000 pharmacists who have passed their examination in the State, only twenty have had over ninety per cent, as she did. Miss Mattie Shaw is a niece of Rev. Anna Shaw.

Rev. Mary L. Moreland, Congregational pastor at Wyanet, Ill., lately officiated at the marriage of Rev. Frank G. Brainard, pastor of the church at Gridley, to Miss Effie Carter, of Wyanet. While theologians are discussing what women may or may not do in the church, women ministers are going right ahead, preaching, marrying, burying, and discharging all the pastorial duties.

Mary Davies Steele contributes to the Woman's Cycle of July 24th a sketch of Elizabeth Elstob, who was a student at Oxford in the seventeenth century. She was the first woman to study the Saxon language and literature. She was an accomplished linguist, a good antiquarian and theologian, and wrote an Anglo-Saxon grammar and several other books, which were highly commended.

The tax-payers of Shelbyville, Ky., are to vote upon issuing bonds for water-works; that is, the men tax-payers. The Shelby News remarks of this case of taxation without representation:

"It does not look just or right to debar women property owners from voting on the water-works proposition simply because they are not men. When a property qualification is required to settle any question, every one, irrespective of sex, should be granted the privilege of a voice in the matter."

Michigan University has honored itself by conferring the degree of Ph. D. upon Mrs. Lucinda H. Stone, of Kalamazoo. Mrs. Stone stands at the head of wise and excellent women whose fine intellectual attainments put them in the first rank as scholars. She has been an educator for more than fifty years, and travelled nearly the world over, taking classes of young ladies with her. She has given hundreds of lectures on literary and scientific subjects, and as a linguist she has few superiors.

The law of Georgia permits married women to have the same property rights as their husbands. There has been a married woman's property clause in the constitution since just after the war, but its meaning has never been exactly settled. There was no doubt that any property which had belonged to a woman before marriage, or which came to her by gift or inheritance afterward, was hers, to control or dispose of as she pleased; but whether after marriage women could buy property, make contracts, and do business in their own right, was the question. The Supreme Court of the State says they can, thus putting women on a level with men before the law in this respect.—Springfield Republican.

Literary Notices.

The best for the ladies, one only needs to look at the September number of PETERSON to decide that it is best magazine for ladies. The fashions are always accurate and novel, and the varied departments are kept up to the highest standard. Lovers of good literature will always find ample gratification for their tastes in the fiction, poetry and miscellaneous articles. This number has an illustrated article on Bamboo furniture, full of useful suggestions and artistic designs, and a paper on the preservation of Autumn leaves will delight all flower lovers. Two serials are running, as unlike as they are original and interesting, and the short stories are all worthy of commendation. "Things Worth Knowing" is for the benefit of housekeepers this month, and Dr. Abram Livezy has an article on children's diseases which every mother ought to read. Terms, Two dollars a year. Address, PETERSON'S MAGAZINE, 306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

In taking up the September WIDE AWAKE, both the juveniles and the elders will turn at once to Mr. Ward's Andover serial; the chapters in this issue ought to be read in every college in the land. C. E. Garland has a capital story in this number, The Last Baseball of the Season. Preston Lee Otis gives Rijane. My Friend, Ah Ging, a San Francisco story by G. Adams, will interest the boys. The Quest of the Whipping-Boy ends in this number. Four Fire-Buckets is a good lesson for officious little girls. An amusing Tragedy in Three Scenes, entitled She did not go to Cooking-School, by Miss Pollok will be sure to be in demand for entertainments. There are several unusually fine illustrated papers in the number: Helen's Tower, Capturing a Sea-Cow, by Dr. Hard; and An Obscure Hero, by Edith M. Degen. Mrs. White's Business paper for young women, Mrs. Claflin's Margaret-Patty Letter on street car behavior, Mrs. Humphrey's charming article about The English Cowslip, Mrs. Leonowen's anecdote paper about The Little Hohenzollerns, with its beautiful picture, Helen North's unique directions for Summer Evening Diversions—the Cobweb Party will be popular—Miss McLeod's dramatic Acadian tale, and the original anecdotes and short talks in Men and Things complete the prose miscellany. The poems are by Mrs. Thomas Sargent Perry, Mrs. Clara Doty Bates and Ellen V. Talbot; the number includes also a beautiful Motion Song, words and music both by Mrs. Ormiston Chant, and an amusing Puk-Wudjie chapter, The Cone Dance. WIDE AWAKE is $2.40 a year. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston, Mass.

A curious fact is noticed in connection with the formation of barnacles on ships' bottoms. In the majority of cases there is a much heavier growth of grass and barnacles on one side than on the other, and in numerous instances one side will be almost free from marine growths, while the other is as foul as possible.

An Important Matter.

Druggists everywhere report that the sales of the Restorative Nervine—a nerve food and medicine—are astonishing; exceeding anything they ever had, while it gives universal satisfaction in headache, nervousness, sleeplessness, sexual debility, backache, poor memory, fits, dizziness, etc. L. Burton & Co., Troy, N. Y.; Ambery & Murphy, of Battle Creek, Mich.; C. B. Woodworth & Co., of Fort Wayne, Ind., and hundreds of other's state that they never handled any medicine which sold so rapidly, or gave such satisfaction. Trial bottles of this great medicine and book on Nervous Diseases, free at Charles H. Buss.

General Greely, Chief of the United States Signal Service, is perfecting arrangements through the Secretary of State whereby the earliest information practicable will be obtained regarding West India cyclones. Auxiliary stations of observation will be established at St. Thomas, Kingston and Santiago de Cuba, whence two observations daily during the hurricane season will be obtained by telegraph.

What Does It Mean?

"100 Doses One Dollar" means simply that Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most economical medicine to buy, because it gives more for the money than any other preparation. Each bottle contains 100 doses and will average to last a month, while other preparations taken according to directions, are gone in a week. Therefore, be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla, the best blood purifier.

According to the Cologne Gazette, the German doctor Alanus, notorious for his advocacy of vegetarian diet, has become a pervert, and has returned to a mixed diet of flesh and vegetable food. He owns that one fact overturned all his theoretical preaching, that after having been a vegetarian for a number of years he suddenly observed that his arteries began to show signs of degeneration.

Is It Safe

To neglect yourself if troubled with any disease of the kidneys? No, it is dangerous; and if you are so afflicted, attend to yourself now. Do not wait, but use Sulphur Bitters at once. They cured me when I was given up to die by several physicians. —Jonathan Ham, Boston.

The companion of Sirius has moved in so near the large star that during the last two years the Lick telescope is the only one that has been able to secure any observations. According to the measures of Mr. Burnham, made last April, the distance of the companion is now just a little over four seconds, and its position angle is almost exactly zero.

"Some years ago Ayer's Cherry Pectoral cured me of asthma after the best medical skill had failed to give me relief. A few weeks since, being again troubled with the disease, I was promptly relieved by the same remedy."—F. S. Hassler, Editor Argus, Table Rock, Nebr.

The Prince of Wales, Albert Edward, recently ordered an Axminister carpet made in one solid piece, with twenty-seven irregular projections. The manufacturer who received the order was in despair, but succeeded so well that when it was laid it fitted like the traditional "paper on the wall."

A new substitute for sulphate of quinine has been found by M. Valude in the bark of the panbotano, a luguminous tree of Mexico. Either the alcoholic tincture or a preparation obtained by marceration has remarkable effect in fever cases.

Royal Baking Powder
ABSOLUTELY PURE

SPECIAL NOTICE.

All Advertisements, to insure insertion in this paper, must be handed in as early as 10 o'clock on Thursday forenoon.

CAPTAIN EDWIN F. WYER.

The friends of this gentleman are indignant over what they claim was an unwarranted attack on him last week, and they propose to emphasize their resentment by redoubled efforts in behalf of his nomination for the State Senate this fall. If, they say, the apparent origin of the attack had been the real one no attention whatever would have been paid to it; but they have no doubt it was inspired by men of character and influence in this community for the purpose of injuring Capt. Wyer's prospects for the Senate and enhancing those of some other candidates. In this light the injudicious attack is likely to prove a boomerang of dangerous proportions.

Why? In the first place, as to Capt. Wyer's private character everybody knows it is above reproach and any attempt to misrepresent him on that score will be sure to react disadvantageously to those who make the charges.

Secondly, the list of Capt. Wyer's personal and political friends embraces the names of very many of the most prominent gentlemen of Woburn, besides a host of leading Republicans in the State, and especially in this Senatorial District. Esteeming him highly, the effect of such assaults will be to intensify the feeling of these friends in favor of the Captain and induce them to work all the harder for his nomination.

Capt. Wyer fought in the War to put down the Rebellion. He was a good soldier and has a warm place under his waistcoat for the G. A. R. and the members of that grand fraternal organization. He does not make a boast of his Army life, or proclaim his love for the G. A. R. from the housetops. But he is held in high regard by the Veterans. They know him and appreciate his sterling qualities, and so whenever there is a gathering of comrades, a campfire or anything of that kind here or in this vicinity, Capt. Ed. Wyer is generally invited in to take a hand with "the boys." They all like him; they remember that he was a brave soldier, and when they are asked to lend a helping hand to put their friend into the State Senate they are ready to respond cordially and promptly. Especially will the opponents of Capt. Wyer's candidacy find this to be true of the G. A. R. men if such unjust and uncalled-for attacks as were made last week are to be the weapons of future warfare.

Now, the above are some of the reasons given by Capt. Wyer's friends why the charges recently made against him will prove a boomerang. Already they have aroused the indignation of his personal and political friends and also of the G. A. R. men, and these are becoming consolidated for a more vigorous and united pull in his favor. No better method to promote Capt. Wyer's candidacy could have been adopted than to assail him as the opponents to his Senatorial designs did last week.

Capt. Wyer is a man of strong convictions, pronounced opinions, and independence of speech and action. He is what is called a positive man. Naturally, then, he would have enemies, but they are enemies to his methods rather than to his principles. Everyone knows he is a man of the strictest personal and political integrity, that he is concientious in the discharge of public and private duties, and although he may some times clothe his arguments in strong language he commands universal respect and the confidence of his fellowmen.

The inference to be drawn from what the Globe reporter said about this matter in last Wednesday evening's edition of that paper was that Mayor Johnson was at the bottom of the attack on Capt. Wyer. It is perfectly safe to deny this, for, in the first place, Mayor Johnson is not that kind of a man; and in the second place, he is too astute a manager to attempt to build up his own cause on the ruins of his opponent. Furthermore, we have only the vaguest kind of a rumor as authority for saying he is, or will be, a candidate for the Senate this fall. Should he conclude to enter the race he would have many strong supporters, if over zealous friends do not drive them all from him before convention day.

But if this unjust attack on Capt. Wyer should result in the loss to Woburn of the Senator altogether some people might see reasons therein for regret at their course. And right here is where the JOURNAL's interest centres—we want the Senator to be taken from Woburn.

THE FIFTH DISTRICT.

Congressional matters in this District are beginning to get lively. With the general impression in the air that Hon. N. P. Banks will not be in the race this fall candidates are popping up all over the District, but more especially in Somerville and Cambridge.

By referring to an editorial extract from the Arlington Advocate published in this paper today it will be seen that Editor Parker has no doubt at all but that General Banks has got to the end of his political rope, or very near it, and that nobody hardly seems to be in favor of running him again. In this it is more than likely Editor Parker may be in the right, but it is a question whether he is quite so near the mark when he names Comrade James A. Fox of Cambridge as the General's successor.

There has just been organized a strong move in favor of ex-Mayor Mark F. Burns of Somerville for General Banks's shoes, which move is headed by ex-Congressman Bowman and engineered by many shrewd politicians. Bowman's endorsement the JOURNAL regards as a big thing for Burns. Somerville politicians too have the reputation of always getting there when they set out for it, and there is no sort of doubt but that they are in dead earnest about putting Burns through by daylight this time.

Fox is a very nice man indeed. He has served as Mayor of Cambridge several terms and gave great satisfaction. If it were not that his candidature savors so strongly of the perennial his chances for the nomination might perhaps be better than they are. But Fox is to be boomed as well as Burns, and it is by no means improbable that Tower's friends of Lexington may yet be heard from and with that gentleman's very long and very plethoric purse there is no telling what he may not be able to accomplish in the way of getting to Congress.

It is fair to presume that there will be a plenty of candidates in the field, but it is by no means easy to tell who the man to fill Gen. Banks's place in the House is going to be.

☞ The Garden and Forest of date Aug. 13, 1890, contains quite an elaborate article under the head of "White Park, Concord, N. H," in which the writer describes with considerable minuteness that handsome "breathing place" at the Capital of the Granite State. As it is true too that the paper contains much valuable information concerning parks, the location, laying out and cost of them; and it is rumored that the Park Commissioners of Woburn are considering measures intended to supply this city with one or a series of them, we propose to print the substance of the above article in next week's JOURNAL, believing it will please those people who are interested in such things.

— Rev. Earnest Richardson, son of Mr. James C. Richardson of this city, preached in the Congregational lecture room last Sunday evening. His discourse was listened to with much interest by the audience.

— James McGowan got 1st prize at the Blue Clyde Association dance in Armory Hall last Friday night, and William Shields of Malden took the 2nd. Miss Mary Stewart of Somerville was awarded a handsome fan.

— There has been a big advance in the price of beef in the last week—not less than three cents a pound on best cuts of steaks and choice roasts. What is the poor Editor coming to? But the bulk of them are vegetarians already.

— William Sawyer, who has been quite ill at his home in this city, is getting better. He was a member of the Kearsage House Orchestra at North Conway. He is a fine musician and can handle the clarinet equal to the best of them.

— Fire Commissioner Tobin of Boston won the Globe's 1000-dollar sword offered to the most popular G. A. R. man, for which he received over 1,400,000 votes. Peter McGoff of this city got 3514, and Capt J. L. Pinkham, Commander of G. A. R. Post 161, got 2554.

— Mr. Peter Kenney, whose health is not real robust, is going to spend a week or fortnight at the beach. Or, he may go to the Mountains. Editor Kenney talks of taking a cottage down somewhere by the shore, and if he does his father, Mr. P. Kenney, will probably help occupy it.

— Mr. A. S. Hayward has returned from a visit away down on the Kennebec which he enjoyed. He was at Augusta some days, went up to Waterville, through Sidney, and all along through a beautiful country familiar to him in his younger days and still remembered with pleasure.

— Lorenzo Winship died at his home at Cummingsville last Sunday morning. He was a tanner and currier and worked in the John Cummings establishment many years. He was a man well esteemed by his fellow citizens, by whom he will be mourned. He left a widow and one son.

— Subscriptions to the building fund of the Scandinavian Evangelical Free Church house of worship are coming in splendidly. Mr. Rosenquist, who is canvassing the city for them, is perfectly delighted with the liberality shown towards the church by our people. It is a good cause.

— Mrs. Mary Jennings, proprietor of the well known and popular Intelligence Office in College Block, this city, has a card in the JOURNAL this week to which we call attention. Mrs. Jennings's office is a principal resort for girls wanting employment and people seeking the best and most reliable girls.

— A building on Fowle street owned by Daniel McMurray, and occupied by Peter J. Meehan and Mr. Henson, was seriously damaged by fire early last Saturday morning. The loss to Meehan's tea store was total and the insurance on all was $800, while there was none on Henson's shoe establishment.

— Thomas H. Hill, Esq., has returned to Tennessee much sooner than he expected to do. His land company are building up a fine, prosperous town at Sequachee, and Thomas is just now engaged in doing a good deal of booming and considerable hustling. His family expect to follow the Esquire one of these days.

— It is said that more than half the Furniture trade of Boston is done by the one house of Paine's Furniture Co., 48 Canal street, who have three buildings of seven stories each, with nearly six acres of combined floor space. A walk through their warerooms consumes nearly an hour, but the visitor is amply repaid.

— Mrs. Tracy W. Nichols, of Malta Avenue, left this morning with her two children for a two week's visit with friends at Boston and vicinity. Misses Lulu Parker and Grace Nichols of Woburn, Mass., who have been her guests for the past week, returned with her.—Ballston Spa (N. Y.) Daily News, 22.

— We acknowledge ourselves indebted to E. F. Johnson, Esq., the compiler of them, for a copy of "Woburn Record of Births from 1640 to 1873" handsomely bound; and Records of Deaths during the same period. The latter contains epitaphs and gravestone inscriptions found in the old churchyards here which make a quaint and interesting appendix to the volume. Mr. Johnson has been highly complimented on all hands for the manner in which he has done this important work. The record of Marriages will come in due time. Thanks.

— The Sons and Daughters of Maine will have a meeting at 7.30 o'clock tomorrow evening to see about holding a picnic in the near future. A full attendance of the Pine Tree Club and all natives of Maine in Woburn is earnestly desired, for the time, place and other particulars respecting the picnic will be settled by the meeting.

— Capt. Amos Savage of the 39th Ill. Infantry and wife, Capt. Theron Farr of the 5th N. H. and wife, Private Samuel Jones of the 46th Mass. and wife, Private Daniel C. Fletcher of the 46th N. Y., were handsomely entertained at the hospitable residence of Mr. D. H. Richards, 25 Fairmount street, during encampment week.

— Professor F. H. Lewis, Principal of the Lewis Music School of this city, and family are summering at Lake Massabesic near Manchester, N. H., where they are making the very most of life. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis worked hard in the schoolroom through the spring and early summer and richly deserve a quiet, restful vacation season.

— The JOURNAL Book and Job office is complete in all its appointments and has the reputation of turning out as fine work and as much of it as any printing establishment in Middlesex county. It is fully supplied with presses, all the latest styles of type, stock and men to use them, and gentlemen, your work is respectfully solicited. —tf.

— After pulling peacefully and successfully together for 16 years the firm of Moore & Morris have dissolved by the retirement of Mr. Morris. Mr. Moore will continue the business at the old stand and settle up the affairs of the firm. The house have done a large business and made money, and no doubt Mr. Moore will continue a prosperous trade.

— It is reported that Rev. C. H. Washburn, pastor of the Congregational church at No. Woburn, has been tendered a flattering call to become pastor of the Congregational church at Falmouth, this State. We shouldn't think the No. Woburn and Burlington churches would be quite willing to part with him for he has been a faithful preacher and pastor to them.

— Dr. Ephraim Cutter of New York, formerly of Woburn, brother of Librarian Cutter, is at present resting in Holland and will sail for home Sept. 3d on the "Maasdam." He read before the late great Berlin International Medical Congress of 6000 Doctors five papers, and was one of the three hundred (representing all nations in attendance) presented to the German Court.

— Lawyer Titus has returned from a tarry of three weeks at his old home in the Pine Tree State and his family are expected back in a few days. The N. Y. Sun's savage attack on Lawyer Titus and his Dakota Land Co. didn't use him up worth a cent, and not only so, but the Co's business is better than ever and its stock has appreciated nearly 100 percent since the Sun's onslaught.

— All the trains out from Boston were late Tuesday night. And weren't they full though!—WOBURN JOURNAL. What else is to be expected on a Woburn train?—Winchester Star. It was afterwards learned that they were all Winchester fellows. If it were not for the lawlessness of Winchester and Stoneham—principally Winchester—the Woburn District Court would have to shut up shop for lack of business.

— Peter Maguire, who was Pat Tenney's bottling team driver, died very suddenly last Tuesday. He had an attack of bowel complaint and some time in the forenoon went into a drugstore and took a decoction of which rum was the chief ingredient. He then proceeded up Main street when, in a very short time, he became stiff and insensible, in which condition he was taken home, where he died in a very minutes. It was a singular case and ought to be investigated.

— On the night of July 31 the Central Square station was entered, and a small amount of money and 800 tickets stolen. Last Monday afternoon Special Officer Abbott, assisted by Patrolmen Houghton and Hickey of station 3 in Boston locked up Albert E. Perry, 23 years old, and Joseph B. Perry, 22 years old, both living at 1 Leveret Avenue, Boston, and Philip P. Ryan, 25 years old, of 72 Brighton street, charged with the offence. About 750 of the missing tickets were recovered.

— City Treasurer John C. Buck has had some quite serious backsets since our last issue, but he is now considered out of danger and on the road to a speedy and complete recovery. Peritonitis is a bad thing to have and Mr. Buck has had it in its most dangerous form, but a good constitution, firstrate medical skill, and the best of professional nursing, as well as the most careful of home attentions, have enabled him to pull through in good shape, for which his many friends feel that they have reason to be very glad. The JOURNAL hopes to see Mr. Buck on the streets again very soon.

— Mr. Daniel Sutherland died at his home in this city last Sunday evening aged 79 years. He was a native of Maine and had lived in Woburn for the last 35 years respected by all who knew him. A year or two ago he had a paralytic shock from which he never fully recovered but has continued to gradually fail from that time to his death. For 12 or 14 years he was a faithful employee of the Boston & Lowell Railroad Company as machinist, but of late years he has been engaged in no regular business. He had many good friends here who will sincerely regret his death. He left a widow, two sons and a daughter to mourn his loss.

— It is expected that the fall business will begin to show symptoms of revival in the course of 3 or 4 weeks, and perhaps sooner. Our chief dry goods men, Copeland, Cummings and Smith, entertain the opinion that we are going to have a good trade this season and they will in due time stock up accordingly. These establishments with other lines of trade secure more and more traffic each succeeding year from Winchester, Stoneham, Wilmington, and neighboring places, and if big stocks, in great variety, and less than Boston dry goods prices, can still farther increase the business from outside the city, Smith, Cummings and Copeland will fetch it here this fall certain.

— Last Friday a very pleasant affair took place at Clan McKinnon hall in this city and one that will not be soon forgotten by the active participants in it. It was in the nature of an adieu and bon voyage to fellow Clansman Mr. McDonald, who is soon to visit his native hearth in Old Scotland, and also a demonstration of the esteem in which he is held by Clan McKinnon. The demonstration assumed the form of a presentation of a very fine watch to Clansman McDonald, which was a great and pleasing surprise to him. The presentation speech, brief and to the point, was made by Clansman Hugh Murray, and was feelingly responded to by the happy recipient. An elegant banquet was provided by the good ladies which all highly enjoyed. Then followed dancing, music, games, and a general good time.

— Lewis Music School will be removed to a more convenient location before the Fall Term opens. The office will be located in Dow's Building directly over the Postoffice, in Room 3, and will be open for business, Saturday evening, September 6, at 8 o'clock. This change becomes necessary in order to accommodate the increased patronage, which the old location was not adapted for. The Fall term will begin Thursday, September 11. Young ladies and gentlemen who contemplate availing themselves of the rare advantages which this popular school affords to secure a thorough musical education should not allow the above facts to drop out of their minds, especially if it is their aim to enter the classes on the first day of the Fall term. The prospect is fine for the largest attendance next term that this excellent Music School ever enjoyed.

— Dr. W. A. Reynolds, lately a very successful dentist of this city but now of Boston, visited here last Tuesday it being the first time since his return from Europe, for which country he sailed on the 8th of last month with a gay party of ladies and gentlemen from Roston and vicinity. He had a delightful trip through many parts of Great Britain, France and other popular routes and resorts of peregrinating Americans, many pictures of the charming scenes of which, thanks to his trusty "Kodak," he was enabled to fetch back with him. The voyage and foreign travel were "a joy forever" to the Doctor all the time he was away, and now having got safely back he has settled down in his handsome suite of dental rooms at 180 Tremont street where he will be pleased to meet all his old Woburn friends and patrons and as many new ones as may honor him with calls.

— Between 11 and 12 o'clock last Saturday night an attempt was made to burglarize the residence of Mrs. J. H. Cummings on Main street which would have been successful had not some of the inmates heard the racket in season and taken measures to prevent it. Mrs. Cummings aroused her daughter and son-in law and when the latter spoke to a passerby about going for a policeman the would-be burglar, who had prepared some of the windows for an easy entrance, fled. There were marks all around of his presence, but he got nothing. Neither would he have been rewarded for his labor and trouble if he had got into the house and ransacked it from cellar to garret, for Mrs. Cummings took the precaution some time ago to deposit her silverware, jewelry, etc., in Safety Deposit vaults which thieves cannot break through. The family keep nothing in their house which would pay a burglar to make the least effort to get hold of.

— The Woburn Corps of the Salvation Army will hold a special meeting at their Barracks on the corner of Main street and Montvale Avenue next Thursday evening, Sept. 4, to which the public are cordially invited. There will be a parade at 7.30 for which extra instrumental music will be provided, the additional pieces coming chiefly from Boston. It is to be a Jubilee meeting, over which Major W. Brewer of Boston, whose command extends over all New England, will preside, and accompanying him here will be several other prominent officers in the Army. During the evening Major Brewer will present a set of Army colors to the Woburn Corps and will also commission a number of its officers during the meeting. Several instrumental performers will be present from abroad so that the music will be of the best quality. The public will be accorded a courteous reception by those who are to conduct the services and have charge of the meeting.

— If the electric road goes through to Brockton, one can go over all of this part of Eastern Massachusetts by street railroads. The circuit from Boston through Charlestown to Malden, Melrose, Stoneham, Woburn, Winchester, Medford, and so back to Boston, is a long and interesting excursion in an open car on a warm day or evening.—Boston Transcript.—Or, if one does not wish to go direct from Medford to Boston over Winter Hill he can continue on to Malden, take an East Middlesex car there, proceed, amid delightful scenery, to Revere Beach, or halt just this side of the Beach, take a Lynn and Boston car, go to Lynn, thence to beautiful Swampscott, quaint old Marblehead, Salem, Peabody, Danvers, and all up and down the coast. He can return to Lynn, proceed straight on to Boston in the same car, or go to Malden by the Saugus route, and from Malden to Everett, Chelsea, East Boston, and the Hub. From the Hub he can radiate all over Eastern Massachusetts by street railsoads, and it is as pleasant a mode of travel as one can imagine.

— In the great East Side coaching event at North Conway last Tuesday, which was one of the most brilliant affairs of the kind that has ever taken place in the White Mountains, Miss Alice Champney, daughter of the eminent painter, Ben Champney, of this city and No. Conway, was one of the dozen charming young society belles who filled the Bellevue House coach drawn by six beautiful white horses and trimmed to represent a French equipage. Golden Rod, America's National Flower, was employed to imitate the gilt of the carriage, and the hubs and spokes of the wheels were wreathed in immortelles and Golden Rod. The background was pure white. The ladies wore sailor hats, a variety of appropriate costumes, and carried parasols. They were Miss M. P. Benson, Cambridge, Mass.; Miss E. V. Boynton, New York; Miss A. E. Sawtelle, Washington, D. C.; Miss Alice Champney, No. Conway (Woburn); Miss K. A. Deering, Washington, D. C.; Miss T. Irving, Washington, D. C.; Miss K. P. Benson, Cambridge, Mass.; Miss E. W. Benson, Cambridge, Mass.; Miss Clarkson, Buffalo, N. Y.; Miss Mabel Miller, New Haven, Conn.; E. S. Munroe, Englewood, N. Y.

— The No. Woburn people petitioned the Railroad Company for a 100-mile Boston ticket for $12.50—$1 more than the Woburn Centre 100-mile one costs. The season ticket holders were willing to surrender their books provided the Company would accede to the wishes of the petitioners. General Passenger Agent D. J. Flanders was interviewed on the subject by a committee chosen by the No. Woburn people for the purpose consisting of Alderman Andrew R. Linscott, Benjamin F. Kimball, E. A. Pierce and W. W. Cummings, from whom they received the most encouraging assurances. Mr. Flanders agreed with the petitioners that a commutation ticket for No. Woburn at a reasonable price was desirable on all accounts, and he thought with them that $12.50 for 100 rides would be just about the fair thing. He assured the committee that he would recommend such a ticket to the Company, and there is no doubt but that it will be issued at an early day. Our people have learned that, in dealing with the Railroad Company, as in most other affairs of life, "easy blows kill the devil," and are beginning to appreciate and act on the principle of that other wise old saw, "more flies can be caught with molasses than with vinegar," and they are coining money out of their new ideas. The railroad people want to do right by their patrons everywhere and are trying to accommodate everybody at the lowest cash price. They all feel friendly towards Woburn, and if Woburn will treat them well they will treat Woburn well.

The world is made of solidity and fluidity. There are "solid" men and women, "solid" banks and institutions, "solid" hills and mountains, and "solid" merchandise. Then there are thin and vapory men and women, watered stocks and "wishy-washy" goods, which are blown away by the breath of public opinion. Of all the solid, substantial combinations of economy and effectiveness, Brussels soap stands in the front rank in all well regulated communities.

Glad to Get Home Again.

Rev. M. F. McDonnell of St. Charles Church in this city after an absence of several months during which he wandered nearly all over the northern part of this country, returned a week or two ago in the very best health and spirits. It would seem from the following extracts taken from his last Sunday's sermon that Fr. McDonnell is very glad indeed to be with his parishioners once more:

"My Dear Friends and Brethren:—You do not know how glad I am to behold your pleasing countenances once more. I reciprocate your kindly feelings.

Since leaving you I have improved in health and spirits as you can all testify. I have traveled many miles—about 6,000—and have seen many places of interest; among others, Montreal, the most Christian city on the Continent; Ottawa, the Capital of Canada; Quebec, the most ancient; and Toronto the most modern and like our American cities. I visited Buffalo and Niagara Falls; then Chicago, destined to be one of the foremost cities of the world; St. Paul and Minneapolis, the two rivals, yet each making gigantic progress; next, Winnipeg, the famed city of the Northwest, and Port Arthur; then Duluth and West Superior, the newest and most wonderful cities I have seen.

In every place I have met very dear friends, yet Woburn is the place I love best because it is my home; and is this not natural, as it is where I have spent so many happy and pleasant years—the best of my life; where I have so many true, substantial friends; where I have been treated with such uniform kindness by all classes of the community since my coming amongst you? I sincerely hope that the cordial feeling may last forever. In my heart shall these sentiments and feelings be treasured up as long as life remains.

I have come to remain and to labor amongst you."

ALDERMEN.

There was a special meeting of the Board of Aldermen last Tuesday evening. An order was passed to widen Main street, near the junction of Fowle street. The committee on new Armory reported a recommendation for a committee to purchase a site for an Armory. Accepted and adopted. Ordered that an electric light be located at the corner of Montvale avenue and Maple street. Ordered that the Woburn Electric Light Company be requested to allow the steam fire alarm gong to be placed at their works. An invitation was received for the Board to attend the banquet at the reunion of the 39th Massachusetts Infantry Association, Sept. 24. Accepted. The returns from the special election were received. Adjourned.

Interesting Figures.

The City Assessors are about through with their hard, long job of listing the property and laying the taxes on it for 1890. They have been dilligent in season and out of season, and have finished their task in good time. The following figures will no doubt interest many people in this city and some out of it.

The tax is as follows:

Personal,	$26,512 65
Real,	120,641 85
Polls,	7,808 00
Total,	$154,722 50

There are 3743 male and 164 female polls, 867 horses, 440 cows, 352 swine, 2223½ houses, 7651 acres.

Leathe—Jones.

Mr. Edward C. Leathe of 138 Canal street, and Miss Carrie J. Jones, both of this city, were united in the silken bands of matrimony on last Monday, Aug. 25. The wedding was strictly a private affair, the attendents and witnesses thereto being confined almost entirely to the family circles of the bride and groom.

Mr. and Mrs. Leathe will be "At Home," No. 138 Canal street, this city, on each Thursday evening during the month of September, when those of their many good friends who call on them will receive a warm welcome. The JOURNAL wishes the newly married and very happy pair a long, cheerful and prosperous life journey together.

Boston Theatres.

On next Monday Dion Boucicault's famous play "The Flying Scud" will be produced at the Grand Opera House in the brilliant style for which that favorite theatre is noted. In performing this grand piece there are at times 100 people on the stage, and the scenery is simply superb. There will be a Labor Day matinee at 2 o'clock on Monday afternoon, and regular matinees on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday afternoons.

San Francisco.

San Francisco was settled in 1768 by Spanish Soldiers and Missionaries, and was first called "Yerba Buena," meaning "Good Herb," the name of a plant that grew abundantly here and was highly prized for its healing virtues. In 1846, when the Stars and Stripes were first unfurled in California, and the Territory claimed by and declared to be under the protection of the United States by the gallant young "Path-Finder" John C. Fremont, the name was changed to San Francisco. In 1847 the first census was taken and the city was found to contain a population of 459. The discovery of gold a year later wonderfully quickened its growth and in 1852, four years afterwards, the population had increased to 35,000; the present census it is estimated will give the city a population of at least half a million. Should the rate remain constant San Francisco will become one of the first cities of the country.

San Francisco of the present day is an exceedingly well built city. The streets are mostly marked by steep ascents, are broad, well paved and bordered by handsome buildings. California street, the "Beacon street" of San Francisco, has some of the finest residences in the country, conspicuous among which are those of Col. C. F. Crocker and Senator Staniford, the Railroad kings of the Pacific coast. Among the most noteworthy buildings in the business portion of the city is the Palace Hotel, built at a cost of $5,000,000. It occupies an entire block, is 9 stories high, contains 850 rooms and accommodations for 1200 guests. Also worthy of note is Odd Fellows Temple on Market street erected at a cost of nearly half a million of dollars. The fraternity numbers over 30,000 in California, and the beautiful building is but characteristic of the prosperity enjoyed by it throughout the entire State. Here are the offices of the Grand Lodge officers. In the building are also headquarters of several other secret societies. Should any of the Woburn Brethren chance to visit San Francisco I would cordially recommend them to call on Grand Secretary Lyons, who as a true Odd Fellow and always deems it a pleasure to extend the right hand of fellowship to visiting brothers in a manner that makes you at once feel at home.

The Masons are now building a magnificent Temple, which when completed is destined to eclipse anything of the kind in the country. This Order is very strong on the Pacific coast, particularly in San Francisco, where, just at the present time, the craft are making extensive preparations to receive and entertain the Eastern representatives of that branch of the Order known as the "Mystic Shrine," who are now en route for California via Washington and Oregon.

For many years in a commercial and manufacturing way, the Pacific coast, through San Francisco, paid heavy tribute to the marts of the East. This however decreased as the country developed and business of every kind gradually settled down to a solid foundation and within the past few years has dwindled to almost nothing in comparison to its former magnitude. Now, boots, shoes and clothing of San Francisco manufacture, which seems to be preferable to both merchant and consumer, are to be found in every town on the coast from Vancouver to Lower California, while some of the largest importing and jobbing houses in the country are located at San Francisco. A larger percent of the insurance business, Fire, Life and Accident, is written by California companies.

The magnitude of some of the financial transactions (the legitimate ones, I mean) would, at first, cause the conservative Eastern capitalist to turn pale and tremble. Most of the banks do a very heavy business and are capitaled accordingly. The leading institutions of the kind on the coast are the First National and the Nevada Bank both of San Francisco. The latter has a paid up capital of $3,000,000 and a surplus of as much more.

The shipping of San Francisco is very extensive, and, as in Boston, ships flying the flags of all Nations may be seen at all times in the Harbor.

The street car system is unexcelled. Over 50 miles of Cable Road are in operation traversing all parts of the city climbing the steep hills, affording the residents of the hilly sections easy and cheap communication with the business parts. A trip over these lines affords the finest views that can be obtained of the city. Notwithstanding the assertion of Bro. E. D. Newton that San Francisco is the wickedest city in the world there are many beautiful churches of almost every denomination, evidently well attended, and presided over by some of the most eminent theologians in the country.

San Francisco is rarely fortunate in the delightful drives and beautiful views that abound in the vicinity. The drive to the Cliff House and Seal Rock is by most preferred. The city is left behind at Bush street and for 5 miles the way lies coastward over an admirable road between low grass covered hills. When one reaches the Cliff and stands upon the broad low piazza of the Hotel, a beautiful panorama is spread out before him. Northward is the Golden Gate through which ships of many a distant port are sailing in and out; southward we see the beach where the waves are ever breaking and weaving their fringe of foam; while westward the Pacific Ocean bares its broad bosom to the horizon for many miles. It is delightful to linger here, and if we wish a contrast to the sea and sky it is close at hand in the strange scenes that are being constantly enacted upon the "Seal Rocks," where the seals gather and gambol for hours together affording a tireless entertainment.

A visit to San Francisco would hardly be complete without an inspection of that portion of the city occupied by the Chinese. It is easily visited being situated in the heart of the city with a distinct population of about 50,000 natives of the Celestial Empire. Here all the characteristics of Chinese life may be observed as well as in Canton or Pekin. Of a population of 50,000 only 3000 are women and a few hundred children. There are therefore few families among them, and they live mostly in tenement houses where they herd together in a manner unconducive to cleanliness or comfort. Many things about this peculiar people are strange and even offensive, but they steadily win their way to the favor of practical men who want good workmen and know where to find them. The first and most familiar recommendation is that they are cheap, but their employers also assert that they are respectful, patient, quick to learn, and not given to drunkenness. There is little in "Chinatown" from an exterior view to remind one of their presence, from the fact that the buildings have not been bought or built by them. They are therefore just what the landlords make them. A Chinese "Joss House," or church, is indeed a curiosity to a civilized man. I visited one of these places of worship in company (not custody) of a friendly policeman, (whose friendship by the way cost me a big American dollar). Ascending several flights of dark and dismal stairs we come to the Temple where the gods await their worshippers. Here the scene changes and we seem to have been borne to the Celestial Kingdom and be in one of the Temples of the Flowery Land. The decorations appropriate to the place are dimly seen, and the odor of burning incense fills the air (which by the way is very refreshing reminding me of a "Woburn tannery"). Against the wall in front of us is a high platform or altar, upon which are placed the images or other objects of adoration. Before them hangs a large glass lantern in which a light is always kept burning. A large bell and drum is often called into requisition to keep the gods awake and make certain ceremonies impressive. The principle gods worshipped are the gods of War, Medicine and Wealth, "but the greatest of these is Wealth." The Chinese mode of worship is very informal. They do not remove their hats, interrupt conversation or take their pipes from their mouths. If they have anything to offer they simply place it upon the altar, bow low, and retire.—No. 7534.

Attractive

HOMES!

How to make home attractive is an art that the ladies well understand.

We can suggest however, that a pair or two of Chenille Portieres add vastly to the looks of a room.

Yes, but we can't afford them just now, perhaps you say.

Wait until you hear the price.

New ones just in, only $4.95 a pair.

They are beauties too.

Mount Moosilauke.

The earth is crammed with heaven,
And every common bush afire with God.
—Mrs. Browning.

The isolation of Moosilauke makes it the grandest of view points. It is situated chiefly in Benton, a little distance across the line from Warren, and the traveller when going northwest on the White Mountain Division of the B. & L. RR. will see on the right this grand, bald peak. How the eyes linger upon it until the beholder is impressed with the inexpressible grandeur of its loveliness. We recall Whittier's description of this peak as he watched its "nameless slide-scarred crest" while descending into the valley of the Connecticut. In every imaginable way it has a grandeur peculiarly its own. Washington, the crowned king of America's Switzerland, holds its kingship unsurpassed, but Moosilauke towers above the neighboring peaks like a sentinel on duty since creation's dawn:—its lone majesty, and the glories of its sunset surpass description. With an altitude of 4, 811 feet it is the highest peak of the White Mountain group west of Mount Lafayette.

The name Moosilauke is of Indian origin and is derived from two Indian words signifying "a bald place;"—the appropriateness of its title is readily seen. A trip to the summit and its broad plateau can be easily made from the picturesque, mountain-locked village of Warren. Starting in the early morning, the mountain breeze fills us with the joy of expectation, and the buckboard leads the flow of conversation to the extravagances of W. H. H. Murray in his related experiences with the same kind of vehicle. We have a most careful guide holding the reins, and with "Black Dan" and roan "Robert" we pass along the beautiful road to Breezy Point and reach the favorably known Moosilauke House, at the base of the mountain, mid-way upon the stage road from Warren to the Summit. We pass the toll-gate and begin the ascent—Robert and Dan look upward, so do we. In the grass by the rugged path we see the Alpine daisies and mountain cranberry leaves; we pass them unpicked, feeling assured "they are better farther on."

It is in some natures to appreciate success by the measure of their efforts to attain: a flower that would be tossed away in disdain at the foot of the mountain is a most precious treasure when plucked after the toil of climbing; and thus it was with us. The ruggedness increases and the picture upon which we gaze hushes our voices and we drink in its glory; mountain, stream and lake, all pass before us in the sparkling glow of the summer loveliness. "O world thou art wonderfully fair!" Our brave horses are weary and we talk of "Black Beauty" and "Ginger," and put this down as one of the hard days for Robert and Dan. We pass the "Bridal path" winding among the foliage of every shade of green; soon we are in sight of the Bald Plateau, but how far away it seems! What a lonely majesty it presents to us, looking upward! The broad patches of Alpine daisies now look like drifts of snow, and the delicate green mosses between open to us a sight altogether new. If the coloring matter in the cells of the tiny green that grows about these daisies could be red, as in the tiny plants upon the surface of the snow upon some of the Old World peaks, we could behold what travellers consider so phenomenal, "red snow;" but we see rare beauty in the tiny white petals of these quivering gems that cover the plateau of Moosilauke.

We reach the Summit and rain from a cloud into which we stretch our hands patters down upon our heads. In the valleys below the sun shines in summer glory, and in a moment we are bathed in sunlight from a cloudless sky. Such are thy changes, grand old Moosilauke! We would like to abide with thee through cloud and sun; we would tabernacle here above the world, and forget amid thy glory the common things of life. Here, the Tip Top House, kept in cozy, homelike comfort, by Miss S. F. Woodworth, and owned by Mr. John F. Thayer, affords every needed luxury. The view is indescribable. Mt. Washington lifts its kingly head in the distance, showing all its surrounding peaks; Lake Winnipesaukee seems indeed to reflect the smile of the "Great Spirit," and the "Long Rever" of New England we see winding its silvery way through busy marts to the Sound and the Sea and now the peaks of the Adirondacks.

The day is all too short, the sun is sinking 'mid pencilings of gold and crimson, behind the scene of glory, and we must begin our descent of five miles to the base. But Moosilauke, in memory, we'll take thee with us, we shall never part, thy companionship will keep us strong amid the clouds that crowd upon us in life's moments spent upon the plains of duty.

Our buckboard equals any of Mr. Murray's among the Adirondacks, our horses are faithful as Anna Sewell's, and "Amid sunset and evening's glow, and after that the moon," we reach Warren, a happy grateful company and "we lift up our eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh our aid."—J. E. S.

East Woburn.

Mr. William T. Kendall was elected Alderman to represent this Ward (5) in the city government in place of Alderman Golden, deceased, without opposition. The Democrats had no candidate and did no pasting. Mr. Kendall is a very likely man and will make a useful member of the Aldermanic Board.

One evening last week the good people of Ward 5 assembled in Hibernian Hall to welcome back to his home ex-Councilman William McDonough who by press of circumstances over which he had no control had been spending the spring and summer at East Cambridge and gave him a grand reception. It was such a greeting as any man might well be proud of and to say that Mr. Mc was a proud and happy man would be drawing it milder than dove's milk. More than 100 gentlemen participated in the grand welcome and while things were going on swimmingly at the Hall the ladies had taken possession of the McDonough residence and were making free with the kitchen, diningroom and their appendages. The assembly was called to order at the Hall when Mr. William Johnson, in behalf of a committee previously chosen for the purpose, and in behalf of the good and true citizens of East Woburn, presented to Mr. McDonough, in a very neat and appropriate speech, a handsome and costly gold watch in token of the high esteem in which he is held by his neighbors and fellow-townsmen and to show their great regards for him. The ex-Councilman accepted the present in fitting words, and after an interchange of fraternal greetings and welcomes the meeting repaired to Mr. Mc's house where was awaiting them a sumptuous repast which the kind ladies had prepared. It was a fine time all round.

The fall term of the schools begins Sept. 2.

The Agricultural Society met Tuesday evening. Arrangements for the Cattle Show are being perfected. A long list of attractions are promised for Oct. 1. Lovers of athletic sports should remember the date as well as farmers and those interested in agriculture.

The Republicans of this town are notified to meet in caucuses at the Selectmen's Room, Town Hall, at 7 o'clock, p. m., on Saturday, Sept. 6, to select delegates to the State, Congressional, Senatorial and other conventions. A prompt and full attendance is desired.

He:—"My dear, if a husband went as a prize with every cake of Brussels soap, what a demand there would be for it by the ladies." She:—"Oh, they don't give away such cheap prizes with such good soap."

Every father and mother whose children wear shoes should read Hollander, Bradshaw & Folsom's advertisement on our local page this week. They are doing a very large business all over New England from their shoe department, which has been secured by selling genuine goods at very low prices.

Is This True?

The press reports state that at a recent fire in Woburn, Mass., both the chief and assistant were absent. This was by no means unexpected, as that city unwisely undertook to run its fire department on methods used by large departments having permanently employed chiefs, and, instead of appointing a chief and two assistants, they appointed a chief and one assistant, both call, and the chief employed during the day out of town. —Firemen's Herald, N. Y.

This great hue and cry about the Woburn Fire Department which the papers have been so busy over for months past is bosh from the drop of the hat. The above matter is susceptible of an explanation that could not help but satisfy the most obstinate opponent of the way we run our fire affairs, but it is not worth the time and trouble to make it.

"Chipman's Liver Pills

the best in the world. Never gripe or make you sick. They are purely vegetable, and will sure cure your bilious trouble. All who use them speak well of them. Sold by all druggists."

As there are always new mothers, it is well to be reminded of Mellin's Food, which has been so thoroughly and successfully tried for years. Its strongest endorsement is the multitude of healthy, active children reared upon it. A mother says: "My child began the use of Mellin's Food when a month old, and is one of the largest strongest children I ever knew."

WINCHESTER.

Theodore C. Hurd and family have got home.

Mrs. M. B. Childs has been down to Swampscott.

Miss Hannah Sullivan is visiting relatives at Haverhill.

Mrs. P. A. and Herburt Nickerson have been visiting Harwich.

The Y. M. C. A. had an excursion down the Harbor yesterday.

Mr. Nourse, the real estate man, is doing a large business this summer.

Mr. Daniel Donovan of Boston is the guest of Mr. Patrick Nelson of this town.

Mr. James T. Littlefield and wife were at the Arlington, Nantasket, the other day.

Mr. James Burns and family have returned home after a week's outing at Oak Island.

A. H. Jameson and Mrs. J. Jameson were at the Monument Beach House last week.

The West Side syndicate are going to put big money into real estate here. Twombly will get considerable of it.

Harry N. and Miss Grace Brown had the best kind of a time at Young's, Nantasket, one pleasant day last week.

Mrs. Henry W. Smalley and Charles Jones found Harwich about as agreeable as anything on the coast on a hot day.

Rev. C. H. Perceval of Racine, Wis., preached an acceptable discourse in the Congregational Church last Sunday.

Mrs. C. A. Cutler, Mrs. C. E. Folsom enjoyed views of the mountains from the porches of the Sunset Pavilion at North Conway, recently.

Mr. Frank H. Peabody, the popular fruit dealer of this town, and Miss Mary Donovan were united in marriage Tuesday evening, Aug. 19. The ceremony was performed by Rev. M. F. O'Brine, pastor of St. Mary's Church. The young couple were well known in this town and were remembered with many handsome presents.

The Johnson family, consisting of Mr. Edward P. Johnson, his wife and son, who were victims of last Tuesday's accident at Quincy, took place at half past 2 Thursday afternoon at the Congregational Church at Winchester. Mr. Johnson's pastor, the Rev. George W. Gallagher of Montpelier, conducted the services, assisted by Rev. Edwin Robinson of Winchester. Music was furnished by the Mendelssohn Quartette of Boston. Rev. Mr. Robinson read the Scriptures and offered prayer, followed by an address by Rev. Mr. Gallagher, in which he paid a touching tribute to the deceased. He spoke of the great loss the community sustained in the sudden taking away of this family, and stated that this terrible accident would teach valuable lessons to railroad managers throughout the country, for this accident would not have occurred had careful men been employed. It is the duty of every company to employ only such men in these very responsible positions. The choir rendered several beautiful selections during the services, and at their close the remains of the devoted family were taken to Wildwood Cemetery in Winchester. The services at the church were largely attended. The floral offerings were beautiful, among them being a tribute from Mr. Lord, Johnson's former partner in Boston. There was a handsome tribute from Mr. Johnson's present partner in Montepelier, and from others of the family's numerous friends. The following gentlemen acted as pall bearers: Messrs. G. P. Brown, J. Houston, J. Russell, T. Shepard, A. Ayer, W. F. Foster, A. E. Whitney, S. G. Pierce, J. W. Rice and H. Lunt. The services were conducted by Messrs. Winn & Kelley.

For State Senator.

In connection with the Republican nomination for State Senator from this District the name of only one person has struck our ear, and that was Edward F. Johnson, present Mayor of this city. It is understood that Mr. Johnson will not consent to run for a third term of the Mayoralty and his friends think strongly of presenting his name in the Sentorial convention, if he will allow it.—[WOBURN JOURNAL.] The convention would make no mistake should it nominate Mayor Johnson for Senator. He is one of the brainiest young men in the State—just such a man as the Republican party and the Legislature are badly in need of. This is a glorious opportunity for the young Republicans of that District, and they ought to make a great effort and nominate him. There need not be fear of his election.—Winchester Star.

ENTERING THE KINGDOM.

LESSON IX, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 31.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xviii, 15-30. Commit Verses, 15-17—Golden Text, Luke xviii, 17—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

15. "And they brought unto Him also infants, that He would touch them: but when His disciples saw it, they rebuked them." The two incidents of this lesson—the little children, and the rich young ruler—are recorded also in Matt. xix, and Mark x. According to Mark and Luke the request was that He should touch them, but according to Matthew He was asked to put His hands on them and pray.

16. "But Jesus called them unto Him, and said, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the Kingdom of God." Mark adds that He was much displeased. Is there a possibility that we displease Him by not being more interested in bringing the little children unto Him? Surely here is great encouragement for the teachers of the infant classes. But in what sense can it be said that "of such is the Kingdom?" It cannot be their innocence, for all are born sinners, children of wrath (Rom. v, 12; Eph. ii, 3), and we go astray as soon as we be born. But see how empty, helpless and dependent an infant is; it has nothing, needs everything; and when we see that that is our condition before God, and come in our helplessness to Him, we shall be accepted of Him, and become children of the Kingdom. As to the safety of little infants who die before they come to the knowledge of good and evil, see Deut. i, 39, and remember that God knows how to make the precious blood of Christ avail for them. The streets of the city shall be full of them (Zech. viii, 5).

17. "Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the Kingdom as a little child, shall in no wise enter therein." What, then, shall become of such as will not accept the humiliating truth that "in them dwelleth no good thing," and that "by the deeds of the law (our very best doings) no flesh can be justified in His sight" (Rom. vii, 18; iii, 20), who persist in thinking that if they do as near right as they can God will not cast them out?

18. "And a certain ruler asked Him, saying, Good Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" Mark says that he came running and kneeled to Him. Here is great earnestness, and in an all important matter. Here is humility also. He has none of the proud, self righteous spirit of the Pharisee in our last lesson; but we shall also see that He has neither the deep conviction of sin of the publican, nor the empty condition of the little child.

19. "And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou me good? None is good, save one, that is God." Jesus knew just how much he meant by "good," and would awaken him to think. His question may have had this meaning, If you believe that I am God, and therefore do you thus address me? When we address God in prayer it is well to use only such titles as we understand the significance of, otherwise we are saying meaningless words, as far as we are concerned.

20. "Thou knowest the commandments."

21. "And he said, All these have I kept from my youth up." He, no doubt, thought he had. He was righteous in his own eyes.

22. "Now when Jesus heard these things He said unto him, Yet lackest thou one thing." Mark says that beholding him He loved him. There must have been something specially sincere about him that commended him to Jesus, who read his heart. A lovely character no doubt he was, moral, amiable and earnest. But what availed it all if the one essential thing was lacking?

"Sell all that thou hast and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in Heaven; and come, follow me."

23. "And when he heard this he was very sorrowful, for he was very rich." Mark says that he went away grieved. He would not follow Jesus at such a price. The cross was too heavy. His own wealth was more real to him than treasure in heaven. It seems strange to the natural man and unreasonable, but it is the law of the Master for His followers, that to give away is to keep forever, and to keep for one's self is to lose forever.

24. "And when Jesus saw that he was very sorrowful, He said, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the Kingdom of God." Riches in themselves are not sinful, but it is hard to have them and not be entangled by them. If we could gratefully enjoy and use for the glory of God the things of this world all would be well; but when the good gifts of God take the place of God in the heart then all is wrong.

25. "For it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye than for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of God." It is said that the small gate for the foot passengers might possibly be entered by a camel, if unloaded, but for a loaded camel to pass through it would be an utter impossibility.

26. "And they that heard it said, Who then can be saved?" Perhaps they did not notice that Jesus spoke only of such as, like this man, clung to their riches. In I Cor. i, 26, the Spirit does not say, "Not any wise, or mighty, or noble," but "Not many wise, not many mighty, not many noble are called," and some one has said, "Thank God for the letter M." When we look about us and see the race for wealth, may we not well ask "Who can be saved?" But it is better to look within, or rather ask the Lord to look within us, for His eyes are sharper than ours, and see if there is any idol in our heart that is either keeping us from being saved or, if saved, that is keeping us from being wholly His for His service.

27. "And He said, The things which are impossible with men are possible with God." Or, according to Mark, "With God all things are possible," and "All things are possible to him that believeth" (Mark x, 27; ix, 23). "Ah, Lord God, behold Thou hast made the Heaven and the earth by Thy great power and stretched out arm, and there is nothing too hard for Thee" (Jer. xxxii, 17). His name is Wonderful (Isa. ix, 6; Judg. xiii, 18, R. V.), and He delights to do wondrously. The Hebrew word for "too hard" and "wonderful" in these passages is the same.

28. "Then Peter said, Lo we have left all and followed Thee." According to Matt. xix, 27, he asks, "What shall we have therefore?" It seemed to Peter that he and the other disciples had done, in their measure, what Jesus had asked the rich ruler to do. But they were not rich; they had only forsaken boats, and nets, and occupation, and home, and friends; yet it was their all.

29, 30. "Manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come Life Everlasting." Mark says, "An hundred fold now in this time," but adds, "with persecutions." Matthew adds that in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of His glory, they also shall sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel (Mark x, 30; Matt. xix, 28).

The common sweet-william, in the woods of France, where it is indigenous, has smallish blood-red flowers, without any of that beautiful variety common to it in gardens.

The mineral called tinfa, or brazolina, just discovered in Bahia, furnishes an oil similar to petroleum, a paraffine suitable for the manufacture of candles and a good lubricating oil.

WHY!

Dear heart, why should this coldness come between,
After Love clasped our hands?
Why should we always moan "It might have been,"
Thinking of golden bands?

Was it your fault or mine? I do not know,
Sweet, you could never dream
How I have prayed for light to solve my woe,
Yet never once a beam.

For once I seemed to hold you by some charm;
Was it too small to last?
What was the subtle cause that did the harm,
After our love lit past?

The incense from a lifeless rose you wore
Faint floated through the room,
And stealing to my tortured heart it bore
Symbol of withered bloom.

Why did you come into my life to steal
Its peace, and then to go?
What have I done, this sorrow sword to feel?
Dear God, why is it so?

A Young Author's Good Fortune.

The experience of Mr. F. Eaton, the winner of The Youth's Companion prize of $1,000 for the best story for girls in the recent competition, is a striking illustration of the successes that are occasionally won at a bound by wholly unknown writers of fiction. His prize story, "Way Out 'n the Prary Kentry," which appeared in the memorial day issue of The Companion, was the second short story he ever wrote and the first one that he ever submitted to a publisher. Mr. Eaton is 33 years of age, married and a lawyer by vocation. He enjoys a lucrative practice at Olean, N. Y., the place of his birth, and is now serving his seventh term as city attorney.

In his fifteenth year Mr. Eaton received a severe gunshot wound while hunting pigeons, which deprived him of the end of one finger and filled an arm with bird shot. At the age of 19 he conceived the idea that a farmer's life would perhaps restore his health, and accordingly he went to Skaneateles, N. Y., "hired out" to a farmer, and officiated as a farm hand for six months. There seemed to be so little money in the farming business, however, that he resigned, and in 1877 began the study of law at Olean. The pecuniary rewards of a law student are not usually great, and to swell his income Mr. Eaton went to Clermont, Pa., and taught school among the miners for a time, keeping bachelor's hall in a little cabin. In 1880 he was admitted to the bar. Mr. Eaton has always been an omnivorous reader, and a great admirer of Nathaniel Hawthorne.—Current Literature.

Avenged His Mother's Death.

A 17-year-old boy, whose mother had suffered death and worse at the hands of Hermanezillo Chavez, a notorious bandit, has been the means of bringing Chavez to his end. Chavez had maltreated, robbed and killed the woman. The boy, when he heard the manner of his mother's death, threw down the implements with which he was working on a coffee plantation, seized his machete and declared he would never do another day's work until his mother was avenged, and disappeared.

Ten days afterward he came to police headquarters, and said he had discovered the rendezvous of Chavez and his accomplices on an abandoned ranch a few miles out from the city. He led the troops to the place in the dead of night. The bandits, finding themselves trapped, surrendered without a shot. Chavez was tried, convicted and shot. —Costa Rica Cor. Philadelphia Record.

Antiquity of the Zither.

The zither is no child of these later days. Quite the reverse. The ancient Egyptians had an instrument which they called a kinnor, and which in all essential points was the prototype of the zither. This was some three thousand years ago, and from that time down to the present there has always been an instrument in the hands of one of the leading nations of the world that was in most respects identical with the zither. In the time of David and Solomon the zither was played in the great temple of Jerusalem, and the ancient Greeks valued their kithara very highly, and the names of Terpander of Lesbes and of Aristonikos of Chios have come down to us as those of virtuosi on this zither like instrument.—American Art Journal.

A Curious Anæsthetic.

A curious anæsthetic used by the Chinese has recently been made known by Dr. U. Lambuth in his third annual report of the Soochow hospital. It is obtained by placing a frog in a jar of flour and irritating it by prodding it. Under these circumstances it exudes a liquid which forms a paste with the flour. This paste dissolved in water has well marked anæsthetic properties. After the finger has been immersed in the liquid for a few minutes it can be cut to the bone without any pain being felt.—St. Louis Republic.

A Heiress' Fortune.

A gentleman waiting to have his portrait taken had handed to him an album of photographs. Hardly had he opened the book when he shrieked and fell insensible to the floor. The album contained a photograph of his daughter, whom he had lost sight of for twenty-one years. She was traced and found to be earning a precarious livelihood by teaching music. She is now sole heiress to a fortune of several millions.—London Tit-Bits.

Naturalist—Probably that he may be utilized for boarding house chicken fricassee."—Harper's Bazar.

100 Ladies Wanted

And 100 men to call on any druggist for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicine, the great root and herb remedy, discovered by Dr. Silas Lane while in the Rocky Mountains. For diseases of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys it is a positive cure. For constipation and clearing up the complection it does wonders. It is the best spring medicine known. Large size package, 50 cents. At all druggists'.

Certain moths, as the parent of the common red and black "bear" caterpillar, and of the salt-marsh caterpillar, have a retractile organ, which, when thrust out, throws off a strong odor, somewhat like laudanum.

Sufferers from indigestion, loss of appetite, liver or kidney complaints, rheumatism or neuralgia, would do well to give Aver's Sarsaparilla a trial. For all such disorders, no medicine is so effective as this, when faithfully and perseveringly used.

Vegetable Intelligence.

An illustration of apparent intelligence in plants is the behavior of the Egyptian lotus in this climate. In the warmer countries, where it is at home, the roots of the lotus spread laterally close to the surface. In this country the plant learned, after a single year's experience of a New Jersey winter, to prepare for this freezing season by abandoning its surface lateral roots in early autumn and sending out a crop of roots lower down—so far down that they were below the reach of frost. In this way the plant kept up its life continuously over winter, and when spring returned the deep level roots were abandoned in their turn and the surface roots once more sent out.

Then there are certain minute plants, some of them quite microscopic, which grow in wayside pools, and which move continually in whorls or spirals, without any moving influence in the water. In the myriad forms of this minute life the erudition of the profoundest men of science is required to determine whether they are animal or vegetable in their nature. And then who knows whether the scientists are quite right? The moral of the whole matter is that life in the two forms is identical. But what have you said when you have said that? Does the fact of the identity prove that there is spirit in matter, or that animal, human intelligence is merely a phase of matter? You pay the money of your education and take your choice of the two horns of the dilemma.—Boston Transcript.

Bible Significance of Stones.

The Jews, it will be possibly remembered by many, had a tradition that when, on the day of atonement, the high priest asked of the Almighty forgiveness for the sins of the whole nation, if they were forgiven, the stones in the Urim and Thummim shone most brightly; if the contrary, they became black. The breast plate of the high priest contained twelve stones, each one of which represented the tribes of Israel.

Coming down to a later time, there were certain stones which symbolized the twelve apostles. Peter is represented by the jasper or garnet, Andrew by the sapphire, James by the chalcedony, John by the emerald, Philip by the sardonyx, Bartholomew by the cornelian, Matthew by the chrysolite, Thomas by the beryl, Thaddeus by the chrysoprase, James the lesser by the topaz, Simeon by the jacinth and Matthias by the amethyst. It is scarcely probable that these humble men of Galilee, followers of the meek Nazarene, knew of the existence of this symbolism, but it shows in what valued estimation they were held by those who had been led by their teachings.

It is not to be wondered at, since these stones were used by divine authority to beautify and adorn the office of the high priesthood, that something of their virtue should be held to belong to the holy men who taught such beautiful truths to humanity.—Sally Joy White.

Discovery Near Beyrout.

A correspondent writes to us: "An English lady resident in Syria reports the following interesting discovery in the neighborhood of Beyrout. In a village about one hour's ride from the great French road between Beyrout and Damascus was found a bedstead made of gold and silver and inlaid with precious stones. An inscription upon it in English characters states that it belonged to Eleanor, queen of England. The bedstead was discovered in a little recess dug out for the purpose within a natural cave, and must have been placed there for security when Edward I left the east in 1272. The Turkish government has taken possession of the treasure trove, though the prevailing opinion in the district seems to be that it should remain the property of the man on whose land it was found. It would be interesting to know what the Turks propose to do with it. But if the inscription calls Eleanor queen of England the words cannot have been placed upon it before Edward left Syria, as he did not hear of his father's death until he reached Italy. There can, however, be little doubt that the bedstead has been buried in the earth for the last six centuries."—London News.

How Sims Reeves Was Found.

Sims Reeves, the great English tenor, was discovered by accident. When Macready was manager of Drury Lane theatre he brought out, among other revivals, Dryden's "King Arthur," with all Purcell's music. During the rehearsals the musical director was in despair of being able to find any one who could do justice to the solos in "Come, if You Dare." James Anderson, the tragedian, who was a member of the company, had noticed the voice of a young chorus singer and suggested him as a solution of the difficulty. He was laughed at by Cooke. Macready, however, becoming impressed by Anderson's persistency, desired Cooke to try the young man alone. In less than twenty minutes Cooke returned in raptures of delight. Reeves made a great hit and was nightly encored in his magnificent solos.—London Graphic.

A JACKAL TEMPLE.

A Feast Spread and Homage Done to the Animals by Hindoos.

Between six and seven thousand feet above the level of the sea in the lower range of the Himalayas, to the north of Bareilly, lie the lovely lake and lively hill station of Naini Tal. Besides the usual floating population of visitors there is in this earthly paradise a large military depot, or hail sanitarium, where officers and soldiers whose health has suffered in the hot plains of Oude and Rohilkund are sent up for a change of air. One winter day, having been ordered to march a party down to Bareilly, and after encamping for the day I started out to shoot francolin and hares, which are very plentiful in the neighborhood. Before I started my servant, an intelligent Hindoo of higher caste than usual, begged me to return before sunset, as there was a curious "Tamasha," the general expression in India for any show or spectacle, to be seen near camp.

Half an hour before sunset I returned and asked my servant what the "Tamasha" was. "It is a forest temple, sahib," was the answer. It sounded quaint, so I decided, though rather tired, to go and see. A guide was at hand, and off I started, calling to some of the soldiers to come, too, and cautioning them to be silent and do nothing to offend the natives in any way. After crossing two or three fields we came to a great hedge of bamboos, about 100 yards long and very dense. A narrow and tortuous path pierced this wall, which was about twenty yards thick, and then we found ourselves in an oblong quadrangle of high bamboos, at one end of which stood a little Hindoo temple.

It was a simple, clay built, white-washed building, the tall peaked roof of straw being supported on a few old and massive beams, whose projecting ends were quaintly carved. A flight of six or seven broken stone steps led up to the temple, in front of which hung on a little cross bar a beautiful old bronze bell.

On either side of the building a little row of very simply constructed cells or cubicles occupied part of the longer sides of the quadrangle. Before each cell sat a priest, naked, save the waistcloth and sacred Brahman string, and busy with the cooking of chupatties, of a singularly thick and coarse kind.

The setting sun struck shafts of light through the delicate foliage of the topmost bamboo. The priests sat silent and stolid before their fires and cakes, as if ignorant of our presence. Then, as the last rays of the sunset died off the feathers of the mighty hedge round us, there issued from the temple a man of extreme age, clad in white robes, and closely shaven as to his face and head. It was the chief priest, and he began to toll the bell. Very sweet and sonorous was its note. The whole glade rang with the sound, the bamboo feathers seemed to toss in sympathy, and the now dusky thickets caught up and repeated the solemn toesin.

Then all the priests arose, as if for vespers, and moved solemnly and in dead silence round the quadrangle, bearing with them their huge chupatties, which they broke up and deposited on stones and old tree trunks and on the steps of the temple. What could it all mean? Just then a rustling sound and a startled exclamation from a soldier behind me made me look down. A jackal, big and plump, brushed past my leg, with an upward curl of his lips and an upward look of surprise and resentment in the red bronze, gleaming eyes! Simultaneously from every lane and passage in the darkling thicket came other jackals, singly and in pairs and even a whole litter together, and filled the space before the temple.

Soon the feast was spread and the head priest ceased to toll the bell, and then every jackal, on a wave of the arm and a shout from the chief priest, trotted, without rivalry or snarling or confusion, to what was evidently his allotted place and feast, seized the cake in his jaws, turned and disappeared through the wood. There was no fondling of the wild animals, no sign of worship of them, no ceremonial, nothing but this silent, business like almonry.

The rite was over, the priestly office performed, and one by one the soldiers moved back to camp. In vain did I tee and question the priests as to the meaning of this bounty. "It had always been so," was the answer—the best argument and the most complete raison d'etre for anything in the east.—London Graphic.

Stanley's Austrian Admirer.

One day an Austrian enthusiast called and sent in a polite note asking Stanley to fix a time when he might bring forty of his compatriots with him, all anxious for the opportunity of shaking him by the hand. This astute gentleman accompanied his request by a very handsomely mounted cigar case as a souvenir. This elegant little present obtained for the persevering stranger a brief interview for himself, but the hand shaking of his forty friends could not possibly be entertained.—Edward Marston in Scribner's.

COUNTERFEITER PETE M'CARTNEY

One of the Most Successful Crooks in the History of Crime.

The cleverest thief that ever I had any thing to do with while connected with the secret service department of the United States treasury department, said Maj. Thomas E. Lonergan, was Pete McCartney. He was born and raised in southern Illinois, and could not boast any education. Yet he was in every sense a picturesque figure in criminal annals. He was the only man I ever met who educated himself so as to be able to do everything connected with counterfeiting. He could engrave a plate, make his own inks and paper and print the complete note. McCartney had been arrested many times prior to my arrest of him, and had always managed to escape.

I captured him at Venice, Ills., on Bloody island, the famous old dueling ground of that section of the country, which was a little north of East St. Louis. This was in the fall of 1871. I took McCartney to Springfield and turned him over to United States Marshal Routt, who was afterward governor of Colorado. McCartney was charged with counterfeiting United States money and committed to jail in default of $500,000 bail. Negotiations were entered into by the treasury department that McCartney should turn up certain plates for counterfeiting notes, and that in return his bail should be reduced to $25,000. The agreement was carried out on both sides. McCartney gave up the plates and $80,000 in counterfeit money. He had to go to Decatur, Ills., where he had buried it, to dig it up.

During the time that this notorious counterfeiter was out on bail he was arrested in St. Louis, and was seriously shot in the fracas that followed the attempt to arrest him. While in jail on crutches he broke out and left, taking with him four other counterfeiters who were confined at the same time. A few weeks subsequently he was again arrested in Texas. A big reward had been offered for his capture. The sheriff who arrested him telegraphed for the United States officials to come and take possession of him. To make his escape impossible this sheriff and his posse camped out all night with McCartney, but he got away before morning. He was again arrested shortly after this by another Texas sheriff.

To secure him effectually this time this official manacled McCartney's arms and legs and started for Austin. When the train reached Austin McCartney had made his escape. During the war he was arrested on some charge in Indiana and taken to Washington heavily ironed, hand and foot. He escaped from custody by throwing himself out of the car window as the Pennsylvania train was passing Horseshoe Bend. This is the most dangerous point on the whole road. He dislocated his shoulder, but suffered no other injury. Finally he was captured in Indiana, convicted and sent to the penitentiary at Michigan City. He is an old man now, but in his best days was one of the most slippery fellows that I ever heard of.—Chicago Post.

An Easy Place.

A lad once stepped into our office in search of a situation. He was asked:

"Are you not now employed?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then why do you wish to change?"

"Oh, I want an easier place."

We had not a place for him. No one wants a boy or man who is seeking an easy place; yet just here is the difficulty with thousands. They want easy work and are afraid of earning more than their wages.

Will the boys let us advise them? Go in for the hard places. Bend yourselves to the task of showing how much you can do. Make yourself serviceable to your employer at whatever cost of your own personal ease, and if you do this he will soon find that he cannot spare you, and when you have learned how to do work you may be set to teach others, and so when the easy places are to be had they will be yours. Life is toilsome at best to most of us, but the easy places are at the end, not at the beginning, of life's course.—Christian at Work.

Photographing Leaves at Night.

"I was walking along Union square, New York, one evening, and a photographer attracted my attention by placing his camera almost in front of me. I stopped and asked him what he was doing there at night with a photographic outfit, and he surprised me by saying: 'Do you see those shadows there on the pavement? The electric light paints them on the asphalt, and I take photographs of them for a big wall paper company. They thus get the exact shape of the leaf of every kind of tree, and the engravers have nature right under their eyes. Nothing could be so perfect as the leaves which are made by our firm. In the daytime I photograph flowers and grasses for designs in the factory, but at night, you see, the electric light gives me the perfect form of the leaves.'"—Cor. Boston Herald.

A Successful Lawyer.

Mr. Bourke Cockran is said to be outdoing the performance of the late Roscoe Conkling in making money from law practice. Some persons put his earnings in the last three years at half a million dollars. Those who do not admire him suggest that this is earning a living by the sweat of a man's mouth; but we can tell them that no one gets rich in New York nowadays without talent or one of its equivalents.—Julian Ralph in Chatter.

The breath of a chronic catarrh patient is often so offensive that he becomes an object of disgust. After a time ulceration sets in, the spong bones are attacked and frequently entirely destroyed. A constant source of discomfort is the dripping of the purulent secretions into the throat, sometimes producing ineeterate bronchitis, which in its turn has been the exciting cause of pulmonary disease. The brilliant results which have attended its use for years past properly designate Ely's Cream Balm as by far the best and only cure.

Brain culture, like physical culture, is governed by regular laws; and it is only by complying with these laws that the result can be obtained. Plenty of good food for nutrition, and vigorous exercise to strengthen and discipline natural power, are the two fundamental laws in both forms of culture.

The first thing to be noted about muscular exertion is the fact that a muscle possesses individuality—a contractile power peculiar to itself and independent of any nervous stimulus.

Speedy Relief In all Cases

IN sudden attacks of Lung and Throat Troubles, is afforded by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, the best known and most effective Cough remedy. As an emergency medicine, this preparation is unrivaled.

"Two years ago I became suddenly ill. At first I supposed my trouble was nothing but a common cold, but I grew worse, and, in a few weeks, was compelled to give up work. The doctor told me that I had bronchitis, which he was afraid would end in consumption. I took two bottles of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was entirely cured."—J. S. Kramer, Danbury, Conn.

"About six weeks ago I was taken with a very severe cold, which settled on my lungs. I tried home remedies, but obtained no relief. My family physician directed me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which I did. I took it according to directions, and in three days I found great relief. I am satisfied that it saved my life."—Jos. H. Turner, Drewryville, Va.

"Two years ago I suffered from a severe attack of Bronchitis.

The physician attending me became fearful that the disease would terminate in pneumonia. After trying various remedies, without benefit, he finally prescribed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved me at once."—E. Colton, Logansport, Ind.

"I have been subject to bad colds all my life, but last February I got the most severe cold from which I ever suffered. When other things failed to give relief, I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and in a brief time I was completely cured."—Chas. Kearful, St. Joseph, Mo.

"From an experience of over thirty years in the sale of proprietary medicines, I feel justified in recommending Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One of the best recommendations of the Pectoral is the enduring quality of its popularity."—R. S. Drake, M. D., Belief, Kans.

"A few months ago I contracted a violent cold, which was accompanied with a high fever, and difficulty in breathing. By promptly taking and was entirely cured."—Alice M. Roberts, Culpeper, Va.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

Where Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is allowed a fair trial, relief is the sure result. Even the most stubborn and persistent Cough soon yields to this famous anodyne-expectorant.

"I was recently troubled with a dry cough which seemed to be caused by an irritation in the throat. My physician prescribed for it; but no relief was obtained. My attention being called to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, I resolved to try it, and in one day after beginning its use I could see a change for the better. By the time I had used it a week, my cough disappeared."—H. W. Denny, 553 Franklin square, Worcester, Mass.

"Over a year ago I contracted a severe cold. A cough rapidly developed, which became so serious that my friends advised a change of climate. A relative urged me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. This medicine gave me immediate relief, and finally cured me."—Alex. S. Nadow, Springfield, Mass.

"Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has cured a disease of the throat from which I suffered for two or three years. I was afflicted with which threatened to result in a serious lung trouble. My father, having successfully used the Cherry Pectoral for a violent cough, advised me to try it. After I had used two bottles of this preparation, the cough left me, and I have since been perfectly well."—F. L. Asbury, Pleasant Retreat, Ga.

"I have been 'railroading' for a number of years—constantly exposed to cold and heat—and have never found any medicine to give me such speedy relief from colds and coughs as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—B. L. Doolittle, 31 Wilson st., Atlanta, Ga.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children have been subject."—Capt. U. Carley, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"When a child, I had a severe attack of pneumonia, which left me with a deep-seated cough, until about five years ago, when I took a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and soon recovered my health."—J. H. Smith, Farmington, La.

Failures in Life.

People fail in many ways. In business, in morality, in religion, in happiness, and in health. A weak heart is often an unsuspected cause of failure in life. If the blood does not circulate properly in the lungs, there is shortness of breath, asthma, etc.; in the brain, dizziness, headache, etc.; in the stomach, wind, pain, indigestion, faint spells, etc.; in the liver, torpidity, congestion, etc. Paine in the left side, shoulder and stomach is caused by heart strain. For all these maladies Dr. Miles' New Cure for the heart and lungs is the best remedy. Sold by Charles H. Bass.

A metal has been produced that will melt at a temperature of 150 degrees. It is an alloy of lead, tin, bismuth and cadmium, and in weight, hardness and color resembles type metal. It melts so easily that, placed on a comparatively cool part of the stove with a piece of paper under it, it will melt without the paper being scorched.

is very liable to follow contact of the hands or face with what is known as poison ivy, especially in hot weather or if the body is perspiring freely. The trouble may subside for a time, only to appear in aggravated form when opportunity offers. The great purifying powers of Hood's Sarsaparilla thoroughly eradicate every trace of poison from the blood, as the cures it has accomplished conclusively show. It also cures scrofula, salt rheum and all other affections arising from impure or poisoned blood.

The cars on the Jungfrau Railway, in Switzerland, have movable flaps, which may be expanded by the guard until they nearly touch the tunnel lining. In this way the car becomes a kind of piston, acting in the tunnel as a cylinder, and the air acts as an automatic brake to check the speed of the descending car.

AN OUTLAW.

The surrender of Kirby Smith let loose upon the southwest a horde of dangerous men, and by the time the government had established its departments and military posts hundreds of the late rebel soldiery were little better than outlaws. The strong hand of the military authorities soon downed the majority, but there were others who preferred to die in the woods or swamps rather than return to ways of peace. When they had been given a reasonable time to come in, and when it was seen that they openly defied the power of the government, they were outlawed and a price set upon the heads of the leaders. Moreover, small detachments of soldiers hunted them down, and army scouts went out in pairs and had many a stirring adventure. While these outlaws were ex-rebels most of them had been guerrillas in the war, robbing both friend and foe and the regular rebel soldier who had made a regular surrender had no sympathy with them.

In September, 1866, word came into Helena that an outlaw named Bill Traver had taken up his retreat in the woods a few miles below and on the Mississippi shore of the river. Indeed, the word came to us direct from him and was brought by a colored man. Not being able to write, he had to send a verbal message, and it was to the effect that he hated the government, had killed fifty Yankees during the war, and now defied the military force to capture him. William Bastrop and myself, both being on duty as scouts, were detailed to investigate. The order detailing us meant this:

"You are hereby granted ten days leave of absence to kill Bill Traver, outlaw, or to be killed yourselves."

The negro disappeared after delivering his message, and we waited two days before making a move. We were then set across the river in a skiff at night and left to pursue our plans. Traver would be expecting us to approach his retreat in front and by boat, while we proposed to go in by the back door, if at all. He might be in the woods and he might not, although the negro was honest in telling his story. We doubted if any human being could live in the woods at that season on account of the torment of the insects. We had in mind an old cabin in a clearing two miles back of the river. A squad of fifteen of us had once captured five outlaws in this cabin, and in the fight two more had been killed. For this reason no one would occupy the cabin, not even a negro squatter. Whether Traver would be affected by a like superstition we did not know, but proposed to find out. We each had a Winchester and a revolver, with a pack of provisions, and an hour before daylight we were in hiding close to the cabin. When day broke we saw that the door—there was but one—was shut, and that an old coffee sack had been nailed over the only window. These were evidences that the house was occupied by some one, and from our ambush behind a log, and only pistol shot away, we kept a closer watch.

It was about 8 o'clock in the morning when a colored man came out of the cabin and built a fire on the ground and began to cook breakfast. We could smell the frying bacon and catch the odor of the coffee, and we felt sure that Traver or some other white man was inside. It took the man about half an hour to prepare the meal, and during this interval we made up our minds that we had never seen him before. When he had everything ready he went to the door and called, and five minutes later Traver appeared. There was no mistaking him, as he tallied point for point with the description given us. He was a ragged, dirty, desperate looking fellow, and he was evidently in bad humor. He kicked the negro aside and sat down to his breakfast, and for ten minutes he kept up a continued growling and cursing. The negro retired to a log ten feet away, and while he made no reply to the abuse heaped upon him, he did not seem much disturbed by it.

There was no doubt that Traver was well armed. Had he not considered himself perfectly safe he would not have stirred outdoors without a weapon. While he had been outlawed, and while we knew him to be a robber and murderer, we could not kill him off hand. Either one of us could have sent a bullet into his head from our ambush, and we knew that he would shoot us down like dogs if he had the chance. We finally decided to flank him right and left, and hope to get so near the cabin as to cut off his retreat to it when we called upon him to surrender. I passed to the right and Bastrop to the left. He had the best cover. When I had accomplished half the distance the negro suddenly rose up, alarmed by the breaking of a twig, saw me, and uttered a whoop. Bastrop rose up and demanded a surrender, while I fired on the outlaw. In an instant both men were in the cabin with the door shut, and our game was blocked. We dropped to the ground, and five minutes later one passing by could not have told that there was a human being within twenty miles of the spot.

After a quarter of an hour of the deepest silence we moved back until we came together. We had caged our man, and the negro was evidently a bad one as well. We had the advantage of being able to command the only exit from the house, but there was no telling what sort of a dodge Traver would be up to as an offset. We decided to guard the door and window for the day at least, feeling certain that the outlaws had no supply of water in the cabin. That day seemed long enough to make a full week. We were tormented by mosquitoes, had only hardtack to satisfy our hunger, and our thirst was quenched with water unfit for an ox to drink. We were constantly expecting to see the men open the door and spring for cover, only a few feet away, and the situation was a constant tax on the nerves. Noon came, mid afternoon came, the sun went down, and not the slightest move had been made by our enemies. Had we not seen them rush into the cabin and shut the door we should have said that the place was untenanted. Traver, though a desperate man, had too much sense to expose himself to our fire by daylight. He knew that there were at least two of us, and perhaps he feared that we numbered five or six. He had only to wait until night came to get a more even show.

As the sun went down and the darkness settled upon the wood we crept nearer the house, and when we finally got settled it was at the roots of a tree not over twenty feet from the door and directly opposite. While the night was a fairly dark one the door could not be opened without our hearing and seeing. It was our idea that along about midnight it would be suddenly flung open and the men would leap out to the right and left, and therefore neither of us slept. Indeed sleep, with the myriads of mosquitoes swarming around us, would have been impossible. There were times when it seemed as if we would be eaten alive and when we had to lay down our guns and make a fight for it. At about 1 o'clock there was a pounding on the door of the cabin and the thick voice of the negro called out:

"Hey, you white men out dar!"

We did not answer until he had called several times and he then announced:

'Mars Traver ar' dead an' I want to surrender."

"When did he die?" I asked. "Jes' 'bout an hour ago. One o' you shot him dis mawnin' an' he's been bleedin' all day."

I had fired upon him and I felt quite certain that I had hit him, and so this statement seemed very reasonable. After consulting for a bit we called to him to throw open the door and come out, but he answered:

"Ize done afeared you'll shoot me down."

"But we promise not to fire if you do not seek to escape."

"What's de time o' night?"

"About 1 o'clock."

"Den I'll wait 'till dayli_ht afore I cum out. Den you kin all see dat I want to surrender, an' go up to Helena and jine my wife. I didn't dun want to be heah, but Marse Traver made me cum?"

This plan suited us just as well, and everything went along quietly until day was just breaking, when Bastrop suddenly roused up and whispered:

"What infernal fools we are! Don't you smell the rat?"

"No."

"I'll bet a hundred to one that the nigger was giving us taffy. They have dug out under the logs on the back side while we were waiting here."

It struck me that this was the dodge he had played, and leaving my comrade to watch the door I made a circuit to approach the cabin in the rear. The first thing I saw was a pile of fresh dirt close to the logs, and this was proof that the outlaws had escaped. The talk of the negro was a part of the plan to throw us off our guard, and he had probably gone with Traver. My first thought was to advance to the cabin and settle the question, but as I was about to leave my cover I heard a noise inside which satisfied me that at least one of the pair was still there. If so, he would shoot me as soon as I exposed myself, as there was no chinking between the logs on the back side of the hut. After a few minutes' reflection I felt that I had sifted the plan. Traver had left by the hole, not for the purpose of running away, but to circle around to our rear and then creep up and shoot us.

It had now come to be broad day, and I moved swiftly to get back to Bastrop. I had to make a considerable circuit, and as I approached the spot, dodging from tree to tree, I heard the report of a rifle, followed by a ringing war whoop. Next instant I saw the outlaw before me, holding a smoking rifle in his hands, and I took a snap shot and dropped him in his tracks. Next moment another rifle cracked, and I heard a yell from the negro, followed by a call from Bastrop. I advanced to find him sitting on the ground with the blood flowing from his head, and at first I thought he had a fatal wound. An investigation, however, revealed the fact that he had had a narrow escape. The bullet fired at him by the outlaw had raked his scalp and knocked him down, but he had jumped up just as the negro flung the door open to come out, having a rifle in his hands. Bastrop had fired upon him and sent a bullet into his shoulder, and the fellow was rolling around on the earth and howling like a wolf with pain and fear. Traver was stone dead. The bullet had struck him in the head, and he fell in a heap. He had a Winchester, two revolvers and two knives, and there was such a look of ferocity in his face that we had to turn away from it.

The negro was also well armed, but the wound had taken all the fight out of him. He had been with Traver for three months, and admitted to having had a hand in several serious crimes during that period. We took him to Helena, where he suffered amputation of the wounded arm and died soon after.—New York Sun.

White Park, Concord, New Hampshire.

The Capital of New Hampshire is a pleasant city of some 15,000 inhabitants. Its main street lies near the bank of the River Merrimac, and its residence streets stretch along the slopes of hills which rise irregularly west of the stream. Beyond the older streets, but surrounded by modern ways, is a small tract of land which is in part so precipitous and in part so swampy that all the new roads have avoided it. On this rough land is a fine growth of large trees of many sorts, and, although it lies only half a mile from the centre of the town, many of the most interesting New England wild flowers bloom in the shelter of its woods and hollows.

This tract of about twenty-five acres has been presented to the city of Concord, and is called White Park for the donor. A Commission of well known citizens has been placed in charge of the work of fitting the ground for the use and enjoyment of the people.

The Commission intends to make the park a place of quiet resort for people who cannot take the time or who have not the strength to go often to find refreshment in the open country. No carriages are to be admitted. No elaborate gardening will be admitted, not only because it is costly, but also because it would be incongruous. She will set aside and preserve, for the enjoyment of all orderly townspeople, a typical, strikingly beautiful, and very easily accessible bit of New England landscape. Would that every American city and town might thus save for its citizens some characteristic portion of its neighboring country! We should then possess public places which would exhibit something more refreshing than a monotony of clipped grass and scattered flower-beds.

The plan adopted by the Commission provides for the enhancement of the natural beauty of the park by spreading water in the lowland where nature made a marsh, by making grassy glades in two or three hollow parts where nature grew Alders and Birches, by planting a thicket of Mountain Laurel here and opening a vista to the Merrimac there; and then the plan leads paths in such directions and by such routes as will best display the beauty of the place while injuring it least. In the opinion of the Concord Commission a path, far from being a chief beauty of a park, is only an instrument by means of which it is possible for large numbers of people to pass through the midst of beautiful landscape without seriously injuring it.

The variety of limited scenery which White Park will present when it is finished is great. Just within the main gate (at the end of the plan on the left) will be a level of greensward bounded on three sides by rising banks, from which hang thick woods of deciduous trees. At one end the banks draw close together, and here is a deeply shaded dell, from the head of which a path climbs by steps to the street. Two other paths lead up from the green by little hollows in the skirting bank to a plateau where Pitch Pines stand in open order, and the ground is carpeted with their needles. A steep-sided, curved and densely wooded ridge in turn bounds this plateau, and beyond it, and nestled in the curve at its base, is a tiny pond, fed by strong springs, and overhung by tall White Pines. Its waters overflow, by way of a steep and stony channel, into a much larger pond, with shores but little raised above the water, which occupies the southern third of a long level through which a slow brook meanders. The shore of this pond, and all the flat land near the brook, is scatteringly wooded with large deciduous trees. Paths reach little beaches on the shore at several points. Beyond the head of the pond a path leads to a "shelter" on a knoll in the midst of deep woods, and thence by a sharp ascent to a high point on the very edge of the park, whence a pretty view will be had of the pond at one's feet and the Merrimac Valley beyond, with the State-house dome in the middle distance and near the middle of the picture. All things considered, Concord is in a fair way to possess one of the most charming small parks in America.

Real landscape art is nothing if it is not broad, simple and conservative of natural beauty. It is elaborate and gardenesque only in special circumstances. Its old name of "landscape-gardening" must be discarded at once if the definition in the new Century Dictionary is correct. Landscape art does not consist in arranging trees, shrubs, borders, lawns, ponds, bridges, fountains, paths or any other things "so as to produce a picturesque effect." It is rather the fitting of landscape to human use and enjoyment in such manner as may be most appropriate and most beautiful in any given spot or region. When this is generally understood by the public and practiced by the profession, parks and country-seats will be so designed as to be not only well arranged and beautiful, but beautiful in some distinctive and characteristic way, as is White Park at Concord

17 PER CENT. HIGHER.

Royal Baking Powder the Greatest in Strength and Purest in Quality.

From the Retail Grocers' Advocate, N. Y.

TO THE RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION, NEW YORK:

I have, at your request, obtained in open market samples of six brands of baking powder, and have submitted them to chemical examination. The object desired was to ascertain the total gas-producing power of each sample, under conditions approximating as nearly as possible those existing during the process of baking. The results given below are the average of four different estimations:

NAME.	CUBIC IN. GAS. PER OZ. POWDER.
Royal	136.05
Cleveland's	119.92
Price's	109.27
Horsford's	102.64
Congress	95.86

The Royal is a perfectly pure and wholesome baking powder, and being such, and of higher strength, as shown above, it follows that it is the superior baking powder.

C. W. PARSONS, PH. D.,
Prof. of Chemistry, New-York College of Pharmacy.

From the New England Grocer.

The New England Grocer (Boston), after publication of the results of numerous analytical tests of the baking powders of the market, made at its request and for the information of its readers, by Prof. Bennett F. Davenport, Massachusetts State Analyst, and others, says editorially:

"No one can criticise the quality of the Royal Baking Powder. A baking powder which has been before the public for so many years with increasing favor, and which has won such unqualified and impartial endorsements, must be of the highest merits, both as to wholesomeness and mechanical usefulness.

"The Royal Baking Powder Company could not have gained and held the position which it now occupies—the largest producer of baking powder in the world—had it not been for the genuineness, the superlative merit of its article."

SPECIAL NOTICE.

All Advertisements, to insure insertion in this paper, must be handed in as early as 10 o'clock on Thursday forenoon.

REPUBLICAN CAUCUS.

The Republican voters of this city will meet in caucus on Wednesday evening, Sept. 10, for the purpose of choosing delegates to attend the State and other conventions, etc.

It is important that there should be a full attendance.

REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION.

The Republican State Convention to nominate candidates for State officers will be held in Boston on Sept. 17.

THE SENATORSHIP.

Conferences have been held by leading Republicans of this city since the last issue of the JOURNAL which will end in a settlement of the State Senator question in a manner perfectly satisfactory to everybody concerned and for the best interests of the party. The amicable adjustment of the matter will put a stop to the war which has been so long and bitterly waged between the Young and Old Republicans and bring about harmony and peace in the ranks.

The gentlemen who have been instrumental in accomplishing this are entitled to much credit for their good offices for the Republican party of this city and for the marked success which has rewarded their efforts at reconciliation between the warring factions. They are staunch personal friends of both Mayor Johnston and Capt. Wyer, are Republicans who have the best interests of the party at heart, and their good work in settling this vexed Senatorial question so satisfactorily will not be allowed very soon to pass out of the recollection of their political associates.

FOR SECRETARY OF STATE.

One of the Republican candidates, or more properly speaking, aspirants, for Secretary of State is Willard Howland, Esq., and it is reasonable to suppose that the people of Woburn will take a lively interest in his canvass. The reason why this is probable is because Mr. Howland once lived here and went out from here to get an education. Many of our people remember him well.

He made his way in life single-handed and alone, and by industry, perseverance, and temperance, united to a good brain, he has risen to eminence as a Boston lawyer. He occupies an enviable stand in the front ranks of the legal profession

Mr. Howland is as well qualified for a proper discharge of the duties of the important office of Secretary of State as any man in the Commonwealth probably, and it is gratifying to know that his chances for the nomination are brighter than those of any one who has been named as his opponant.

GEN. BANKS'S PROSPECTS LOOK BRIGHTER.

It cannot be winked out of sight that General Banks has a great deal of able backing in this District, nor that scores and hundreds of active and determined political workers are doing all that lies in their power to compass his re-election.

The smart contest that is going on between the Fox and Burns parties strengthens Gen. Bank's chances for another nomination, and everyone of these chances is being improved for all it is worth.

Gen. Banks has given out word that he is in the field. His friends say he hasn't been out of it. And now if the Fox and Burns people will only keep on fighting the old General can reasonably count on one more term in Congress at least.

☞ If he should be a candidate again it is quite likely the opposition to the re-election of Charlie A. Jones, Esq., for Representative to the Legislature will not amount to very much this fall. He made a good record last winter.

There will doubtless be quite a fight to prevent the re-election of David F. Morsland, Esq., but it will be made by factions in his own political party rather than by the Republicans who, it is not to be presemed, will resort to any extraordinary means to defeat him.

☞ With the compliments of David T. Day we have received numbers 8 and 10 of the "Census Bulletin" of date Aug. 8 and 22, which contain "Mines and Mining—Slate," and "Mines and Mining—Quicksilver." Mr. Day, who has the supervision of this branch of statistics connected with the Census, will please accept our thanks for the favors.

☞ The Fair of the Mass. Charitable Mechanic Association will begin on Oct. 1, and continue to Nov. 30. Extraordinary efforts will be put forth to make it the best the Association have ever held.

☞ The most comical thing we have seen of late in journalism was the nomition by the Boston Democrat of George Fred Williams for Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.—Waltham Free Press.

We should say as much!

Besides being entertaining the article is a valuable contribution to local history and as such it is worthy of being carefully preserved.

— Why is it that so few American girls apply to our home merchants for situations as saleswomen? It has been a mystery to us for some time. Our merchants pay good wages and are almost constantly obliged to employ new help. Some of them want additional saleswomen. And yet no American girls make application for such situations. Wonder what the reason is?

— Miss Belle Menard, teacher, has returned from her trip into Northern Maine, through the White Mountains, etc. and no lark was ever gayer than she. The visit among the "Oxford Bears" was delightful in an especial manner—and indeed, in the way of bracing air and charming scenery there is no spot in New England that surpasses the upper Saco. Well, the dear schoolmarms are flocking back to their homes.

— The Waltham Free Press says the best way it knows of to keep people out of a place and help it to go to seed is to be all the time running out against it, belittleing it, and growling about its "outs," and damning it generally. We can inform the F. P. that it has a journalistic neighbor who would in this way ruin the best town in America, if it had any influence. There are just such people and things in Woburn, too.

— Miss M. L. Bancroft is so well and favorably known as a teacher of pianoforte not only here but in Boston and the neighborhood that anything which we might wish to say about her and her musical accomplishments would be superfluous. She has taught several years with marked success and has always given great satisfaction as a teacher. She will resume teaching next Monday, of which the public will please take notice.

— Comer's Commercial College in Boston is making extensive preparations for its Golden Wedding celebration and to make it a memorable one from a business standpoint. We have received a publication issued as an aid to this end which is a fine thing every way. Comers is a celebrated and very successful business college, the graduates from which are favorably regarded by business men. See advertisement of Comer's in this paper.

— We call especial attention to the display advertisement of "The People's Dry Goods Company" of Maynard this State, published in the JOURNAL this week. The season of the year is approaching when people must be looking for the kind of goods sold by this Company, and there is the best reason for the belief that nowhere in the State can better goods be bought at better prices than at this big and prosperous Maynard establishment. Read the Ad.

— E. E. Thompson, Esq., Treasurer of the Woburn Five Cents Savings Bank and President of the Board of Common Council, and wife will leave here next Monday for a visit to the West. Their objective point will be St. Paul and Minneapolis where they have relatives and friends with whom they will tarry for two or three weeks. Councilman Thompson has visited those cities and country about there three or four times before this, but the last time he was there was several years ago and naturally he would like to see what growth and advancement they have made in that period. In consideration of the hard work he has done during the last year or so, and his industry and fidelity, the Trustees of the Savings Bank cheerfully voted him a month's leave of absence or go the other night, and it is that particular month that he and Mrs. Thompson are going to devote to visiting and carefully looking over the great and mighty Upper Mississippi region.

— There was but very little going on in this city on Labor Day. Nearly all the people left for one point of pleasure or another, many to Boston, scores to the Beaches, rafts to groves, etc. There were two or three society picnics here. The Hibernians held theirs at Baldwin's Grove; the Red Men and Daughters of Pocahontas went to Andover; and there were some other lesser affairs. The annual Float of the Innitou Canoe Club on Horn Pond in the evening, a brilliant and successful affair, closed the day.

— The death of Rev. Franklin Keyes, which occured at an early hour last Tuesday morning after a lingering illness, removes another landmark from this community. He was some over 71 years old and a long resident of Woburn where his upright character commanded the respect of everybody. For a considerable number of years he was engaged in evangelistic work and accomplished much good. It is said he left a fortune of about $50,000, and only a few relatives here to share it. He will be missed from this community.

— It is expected that the new and elaborate "History of Middlesex County" will be forthcoming in a few weeks. About 100 pages of it, written by Librarian William R. Cutter and Mayor E. F. Johnson, will be devoted to Woburn, and the same will be embellished by steel engraved portraits of quite a number of her past and present citizens of eminence. This part of the work will possess much interest for our people and doubtless the History will enjoy considerable of a sale here, albeit, it costs $25. The accuracy of the Woburn instalment to its pages may be relied on.

— Mr. F. H. Lewis, Principal of the Music School of this city, will open his institution for fall business on Sept. 6. For full particulars the reader is referred to his card in this issue of the JOURNAL. We are informed on good authority that the School's prospect for patronage this season is far better than it ever was before. Every well-wisher of Woburn will be glad to know this, for Prof. Lewis has worked hard early and late and put a great deal of money and valuable time into building up the School and at last it is a complete success and an honor to our city. It is an educational institution of which we have a right to feel proud, therefore the flattering outlook for this fall's business will be gratifying to everybody.

— The way we found out that our old friend Levi C. Teel of Cambridge street had commenced harvesting was by discovering strange human footprints all around our kitchen door the other morning and following them down into the cellar where it was found that somebody (the owner of the tracks, evidently) had deposited vegetables enough to run a firstclass hotel all winter nearly. It was not all in the tracks around the kitchen door either that the conclusion that uncle Levi had began to gather in his harvests was reached nor the great variety of them, but the quality of the products found in the cellar had more to do in determining the matter than anything else. But it was all right, and Uncle Levi is a kind neighbor and friend all the same.

— Dr. George S. Dodge and family have gone to Acton, this State, at which place they will make their future home. The family have resided many years here and have therefore a large number of friends and acquaintances to separate themselves from in going to their new place of abode, all of whom, we doubt not, will regret to lose the companionship of the Doctor, Mrs. Dodge, and "Ray." They have occupied an influential standing in the church and social circles for a long time and in both spheres have won a great many staunch and warm friends. All these people the family go away from with deep regrets; long-standing associations will be rooted up by the Doctor and his family's going away to a new home elsewhere. That the future of the family may be prosperous and happy is the wish of all good Woburn people.

— Leeds's grand excursion down the beautiful Merrimac River will come off on Saturday, Sept. 13, a fact which should be borne in mind. To secure a special train from this city to Lawrence a sufficient number of tickets for the excursion must be sold by Friday night, Sept. 12, which is another fact that ought not to be forgotten. The true way is to go at once and secure tickets at Leeds's drugstore. Savings Bank block, for they only cost $1.50 for the whole round trip. That is remarkably cheap. The purchaser gets a ride on the steam cars, a most delightful trip down the Merrimac, time for dinner and a nice stroll around on the Beach, and get back home at 8.30 in the evening. The train will leave here at 7.45 a. m. Conductor Leeds has made all arrangements for the dinner on the Beach, so that if the weather is good, as it is morally certain of being, this excursion is going to be the pleasantest affair of the whole summer. Please don't forget that, to insure a special train, a sufficent number of tickets must be sold by Friday evening, Sept. 12.

— Contractor Ellis of Woburn has a large gang of men at work laying the foundation for the new iron bridge which is to cross the Boston & Maine railroad from Mt. Avenue to Summer streets, Malden. The bridge is being built to accommodate the public in connection with the new railroad station which is soon to be built. The foundation will require 200 loads of granite. —Boston Paper. Contractor Ellis is doing an immense amount of stonework all around the country. There is the Somerville railroad bridge for instance—it is one of the finest and most massive pieces of work anywhere to be found. The stone-masonry of that last beautiful railroad depot in Somerville cannot be excelled for strength and finish. Mr. Ellis has contracts for stonework and grading on an upper Vermont railroad, and he is doing a great deal of foundation work for buildings in this city and vicinity. He enjoys the best kind of a reputation for excellence of work, and the upshot of it is he is wanted wherever the best kind of jobs are in contemplation. Mr. Ellis employs a great number of men and horses and not only does a large amount of business, but its volume is continually increasing.

A Prosperous Clothing House.

For over a dozen years past Mr. Charles M. Munroe has carried on the clothing and gentlemen's furnishings business in the Methodist Block, Main street, this city, most prosperously. Marked success has resulted from his manner of doing business. His promptness in meeting all demands for the best and newest things in the wares in his line, his uniform low prices, and constant courtesy towards the public, have been rewarded by a generous patronage which has grown larger and larger each succeeding year until now no establishment in the country can boast of a better or more numerous class of regular customers than Mr. Munroe's store enjoys.

With a thorough knowledge of his business—a shrewd buyer, as well as competent and popular as a salesman; with a plenty of capital to take good care of his "discounts"; with an admirable location; and a determination to make headway; Mr. Munroe's trade has increased to such proportions that the old store-room became too contracted, and more floor, shelf and counter space was absolutely necessary for the convenience of himself, his salesmen, and his customers.

By a recent addition to the rear the capacity of Mr. Munroe's store has been doubled and the change has increased its convenience and pleasantness even more than the room. It is now one of the most commodious, handiest and best arranged salesrooms in the city. It is light, neat, pleasant; the largely increased space gives better facilities for showing off the goods, as well as accommodations to customers; and the whole interior arrangements please everyone who goes in and sees them.

With more room and better facilities for doing business Mr. Munroe is adding to his lines of trade and increasing the size of those heretofore carried. The store and contents are complete in every way. Mr. Munroe is bound to lead in the clothing business in Woburn, and with Mr. Webster Woodman as head salesman, and other competent employees to help handle the largest and best stocks brought into the city, he is sure to succeed.

In soap, as in every other article of merchandise, the profits are largest on the inferior articles, and it is but human nature for the groceryman to put these latter out whenever he can. A good and economical housekeeper, knowing this, does not content himself with ordering up "some soap," but she says: "Mr. Allspice, put me up half dozen of Brussels soap, and if you have not got it—get it. I don't care for other than Brussels. It's economical."

The Float of the Innitou Club.

The verdict rendered by popular acclaim was that it was the best yet.

A more favorable evening could by no possibility have been provided for the occasion, and everybody enjoyed it. Commodore Arthur C. Wyer was in command, and his efforts to make the affair a success were efficiently seconded by the other officers and men of the Club.

There were no fitful winds to ruffle the surface of the fair pond or disturb the myriad of Chinese lanterns and other lights, while the darkness was fully dispelled by torches and glims profusely scattered over the enchanting scene. Hundreds and hundreds of people were present as spectators. They lined the grassy banks that sloped down to the water, enlivened the groves, and contributed by their presence to the general fund of pleasure.

Fine music by the Woburn Brass Band, which was stationed on the island opposite Mr. Hudson's, lent a charm to the evening's delightful entertainment and was fully appreciated by all.

The canoes of the Club were gaily decked with Chinese lanterns whose variegated rays, skimming over the tranquil waters and illuminating the crowds of attending craft, lighting up the shores and the people on them, gave the scene the appearance of fairy land. The float was a great success. The orders of the Commodore were obeyed with alacrity and precision; there were no serious hitches in carrying out the plans; no annoying "waits;" but everything ran as smooth as clock-work and gave the Club as well as the spectators great pleasure.

The very large attendance must have been exceedingly gratifying to the Club. It proved that their efforts to oblege the people the year before had been duly appreciated and that the public were more than satisfied with the exhibition. The enthusiasm over the brilliant spectacle when the canoes moved in line over the placid bosom of the pond or performed evolutions which brought the lights into situations of rare beauty, found expression in hearty and prolonged cheers from the shores which were echoed and re-echoed all along the line. The masses were delighted. The business was gotten under way at a very seasonable hour and the maneuvers succeeded each other with gratifying speed.

It was nearly 10 o'clock before the end of the brilliant exhibition was reached. All through it the great audience were regaled with the best of music by the band on the island, which greatly enhanced the pleasure of the affair. Everything was satisfactory from start to finish, and the Innitou boys may congratulate themselves on the signal success of their annual float for 1890.

It is poor economy to live on turkey one week and pig's rump and cabbage the next. This rule also applies to the use of soaps, of which Brussels is the best and most economical.

ALDERMEN.

A regular meeting of the Board of Aldermen was held last Tuesday evening. The State Aid Committee reported leave to withdraw on applications of Robert Clarke and Mrs. Dorinda Hadley for State aid. Accepted. Burrill Putney was granted $6 a month and Patrick O'Donnell $4 a month State aid. William T. Kendall was declared elected Alderman from Ward 5, and a certificate was ordered to issue. An order was introduced and referred transferring $250 from abatements and overlayings to the department of printing.

Take Some Pepsin.

What can the matter be with our usually amiable brother over in Woburn? We fear it is a bad case of bilious colic. This is the way he sails into the prime joker of our county:—Cambridge Cronicle.

And then the Cronicle works in our little item respecting the "prime joker" of the Somerville Journal (save the mark!) just as innocently as though its prefatory lines did not contain a sting twice as sharp as ours was. The Chronicle understands the art of whipping somebody over somebody's else's shoulders as well as the most expert of veterans.

Candidate Willard Howland.

There is one part of the present political contest in which the Republicans of Woburn have an especially personal interest. The question of who shall be the choice of the State Convention for the office of Secretary of the Commonwealth is one that appeals to the local pride of all our citizens;—for even our Democratic voters may be excused for temporarily forgetting party interests in the broader sympathy that has been aroused by the distinguished candidacy of Willard Howland for the third civil position of dignity and importance in the State of Massachusetts.

There are comparatively few among the older residants of the city who do not remember the time, some twenty years ago, when Mr. Howland, then a young man just making his serious start in life, was a familiar and promising member of the community. There are fewer still of those who were, with him, pupils in our public schools who did not learn to take a friendly interest in his aspirations and wish him well when, almost in his maturer boyhood, the responsibilities of a broadening career made it necessary that he should change his place of residence.

Since then we have watched him grow, unaided by social or moneyed advantages, into the respected and influential dignity of public prominence. We felt something of natural pride in his legal success as an advocate at the bar. We grieved over the vexatious injury to his eyesight, brought on by the ambitious demands of overstudy; but we redoubled our admiration when, with invincible fortitude, he ignored this physical obstacle and won for himself an acknowledged leadership in the State Legislature. And we welcomed with satisfaction his recently announced candidacy for yet higher service, knowing that he had always exceeded rather than disappointed the general expectation.

All this we did because we felt that he was still one of us. Chelsea has reason to claim him as her own, with honorable loyalty; but Woburn, who gave him to her, has an equal right to share in the reflected brilliancy of his development.

Mr. Howland is still a young man. He is identified with that newer and more aggressive generation of statesmen upon whom the Republican party must rely for the preservation and active application of its principles in the State and Nation. It is to be regretted, from a purely selfish and partisan standpoint, that our older leaders have not learned this lesson of honoring those who must soon fall heir to their public influence. It would be the blindness of obstinacy to deny that because of this, in part at least, the Democrats have been able to reduce the Republican majority of the State to a dangerously narrow margin. The placing of such men as Howland, Pillsbury and Major Gould upon our next ticket would be an encouraging sign. It would be a proper endorsement of Governor Brackett's victory a year ago.

For all these reasons, then, it should be seen to that delegates are chosen at our city caucuses who will vote for Willard Howland for Secretary of State in the coming convention. We owe it to him, we owe it to ourselves that we shall not fail him in this emergency.

Loyalty, like every other virtue, has its proper origin at home.

A WOBURN REPUBLICAN.

A western editor lost ten subscribers by saying: "Many of our readers require an effective soap, and Brussels is just the thing they have needed for a long time."

The Gigantic Production at the Boston Theatre.

For more than a generation the Boston has stood acknowledged the Most Magnificent Dramatic Temple on this Continent, and the triumphs achieved on its stage are without parallel in the history of American theatres. Mr. Tompkins, determined to sustain the prestige won by "The Exiles," "Michael Strogoff," "Youth," "Julius," "Run of Luck," and other great productions identified with his personal management, has for nearly a year been preparing the Romantic Spectacular Play, The Soudan, giving to the details the closest attention, and securing every aid to perfection which experience and taste could suggest or unlimited expenditure secure. Every scene is new, and every detail perfect. Hundreds of uniforms and accoutrements, worn by soldiers in the Soudan campaigns, were purchased direct from the Bureau of Equipments of the British Army, and Costumes and Appointments were made to order in London. Mr. Henry Neville, the foremost English actor of the day, has been secured for the role of the hero, which he originally created at Drury Lane Theatre, London, and the company of favorites which includes S. E. Springer, Frank Losee, Nestor Lennon, Lawrence Eddinger, Dan Collyer, Harry Hawk, Harry Rose, Ed. Lawrence, A. W. Rumble, John J. Geary, Russell Hunting, H. A. Wallace, Robert Mackay, W. H. Gilbert, Geo. J. Farren, Sylvie Warren, John Lyons, Louise Balfe, Eleanor Moretti, Kate Oesterle, Mrs. W. G. Jones, Jeannie Harrold, Emma Rose, Kate Murray, Master Walter Lewis, and the phenomenal boy actor, Master Wallie Eddinger, assure the most adequate support. Several hundred people will take part in the action, and the stage pictures for magnitude, realism and effectiveness will surpass any ever seen in America. In the scene at Trafalgar Square nearly 500 people will appear at one time, a number which no other stage in America can accommodate. The return of the soldiers from the war, cavalry, artillery, infantry, camel corps, with horses, military bands, drum and fife corps, Scottish pipers, and the welcome given them by relations and friends, will be beyond question the most magnificent display ever made in any theatre in this Country. The Soudan will be presented for the first time in America at the Boston Theatre, Monday evening, Sept. 15th, 1890, and will be repeated every evening and on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons till further notice.

Being Received with Great Favor.

The candidacy of Willard Howland for the Republican nomination as Secretary of the Commonwealth is being received with great favor in all parts of the State. That it should be so is a marked tribute to his character and ability. He is a young man who has been before the public but a short time, still he has so impressed his associates of the House with his wisdom and practical judgment that they are with one accord supporting him for that position on the State ticket. A young man of such talent and personal popularity could not but lend strength to the Republican cause this fall if he should be nominated. His selection would be a recognition of the younger element of the party and would impart new zeal to their efforts for its success. Give us Mr. Howland of Chelsea for candidate for Secretary of the Commonwealth and no mistake will be made.—Somerville Citizen.

Boston Theatres.

The attraction at the Globe Theatre this week is Prof. Herrmann's new Transatlantiques. A special Matinee was given on Labor Day and standing room was at a premium. This will be the only appearance of this famous organization in Boston this season and our readers should take advantage of the few remaining performances—this Friday evening and tomorrow afternoon and evening. Commencing next Monday, Sept. 8, the great marine spectacle, The Bottom of the Sea, will be produced. This is undoubtedly the most magnificent play ever seen on a Boston stage. The Globe Theatre is one of the most convenient and coolest in the city. The Globe closes in time for suburbanites to catch any and all of the late trains.

"The Flying Scud," Dion Baucicault's comedy-drama is drawing immense houses at the Grand Opera House this week. The piece has a very interesting story, with serious and humorous periods well blended, and many stirring and novel situations. The best of the former is the sensational scene on Epsom Downs with its realistic racing by three fleet horses. The picture is true to the life and certain to create a furor whenever presented. Among the other special features is the dance of a dozen pretty jockeys dressed in the conventional costume. The company contains many competent players, chief among them being Mr. Robert McWade, who did some clever acting as Nat Gosling, an old jockey. The heavy and romantic roles were, in general, in the hands of capable performs, and the entertainment as a whole was decidedly satisfying. The usual matinee on Saturday will be given. The Grand Opera is one of the most popular places of amusements in Boston and the prices for desirable seats are very moderate.

There is a short business sermon on our local page this week that will interest everyone. The firm who preaches it have chosen a good text, written a strong sermon, with a striking illustration. The furnishing of Groceries is a large item in every home, and here is a chance to save money on them.

Burlington.

Mr. C. S. Butters, a well known member of the City Government of Somerville, has been spending the season with his family at the Butters homestead in Burlington, where he has made many improvements. During the summer the families of Mr. G. W. Butters of East Cambridge and Mr. John E. Bull of Carlisle have also passed some time at the old home. On Labor Day, as a pleasant ending to the season, they held a family gathering and picnic underneath a famous oak tree—the largest in this vicinity—on the Butters land at Wood Hill. The party comprised Mr. C. S. Butters and family, Mrs. O. S. Butters, Mr. G. W. Butters and family, Mr. John E. Bull and family, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Butters, Mrs. Mary E. Butters, Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Green, Rev. C. H. Washburn, Mrs. Samuel Sewall and Mrs. Martha Sewall Curtis. A bountiful collation was spread beneath the oak and abundant justice was done to it by the company who agreed that there were good cooks in the family. Each person present then guessed the circumference of the oak, the respective guesses being written to prevent mistakes. The tree being measured, was found to have a girth of fourteen and one-half feet. This measurement was guessed exactly by one lady of the party while another stood at the end of the list with a guess of twenty-two feet. After a pleasant afternoon of sociability the party separated, a number finishing the season of enjoyment with a ride through the shady roads of the town.

Unless It Is Mistaken.

Unless the Cambridge Chronicle is mistaken Gen. Banks is out of the Congressional contest. We fear the wish is father to the thought, for the General certainly has nothing else in view, and so long as he lives he will continue in an attitude of acceptance. The question is not as to the General but as to his friends. If they are out of it he is, and it is a matter of very little moment to him. The Fifth District should have a vigorous Representative in Congress, one who can command the attention of the country like Lodge, Cogswell, or Greenhalge. There are men enough in the towns and cities comprising it to meet this requirement and the Republicans should not allow the present opportunity to slip. Gen. Banks was elected two years ago by a very narrow margin and should he be defeated this year (in case he is nominated), it would reinforce the Democratic wing in Congress at a time when such an event would be most unfortunate.—Lynn Item.

Attractive

HOMES!

How to make home attractive is an art that the ladies well understand.

We can suggest however, that a pair or two of Chenille Portieres add vastly to the looks of a room.

Yes, but we can't afford them just now, perhaps you say.

Wait until you hear the price.

New ones just in, only $4.95 a pair.

They are beauties too.

Tuesday, about midnight, several young men belonging in this town, and under the influence of liquor, gave a most disgraceful exhibition of horse-racing. The noise made by them and beating of the horses awakened people living on Pleasant street and the West Side, who are outspoken in condemnation of the cruelty the animals experienced at the hands of these irresponsible young men who, it is said, are known to the police.—Star. Where are our police officers that they don't put a stop to such disgraceful proceedings?

Frank Sheridan, aged 15, son of Thomas Sheridan of this town, was drowned in Winter Pond last Tuesday afternoon between 2 and 3 o'clock. He and another boy named George Huntress were in bathing when young Sheridan, who was but a short distance from the shore, was suddenly seized with cramps and drowned. His body was recovered about two hours afterwards. His funeral took place from St. Mary's Church yesterday morning at 9 o'clock and was largely attended by friends and relatives. The pall bearers were six altar boys of St. Mary's Church, namely: Henry Lyons, John O'Connor, Daniel Daly, George Raymond, John Donohue and John Sheehan. The interment was at Calvery Cemetary, Montvale.

Miles' Nerve & Liver Pills

An important discovery. They act on the liver, stomach and bowels through the nerves. A new principle. They speedily cure biliousness, bad taste, torpid liver, piles and constipation. Life Is Too Serious.

Our esteemed contemporary, the Woburn JOURNAL, seems to think that the alleged funny column of the Somerville Journal is all that keeps it alive, and intimates that the Citizen of that city will soon distance it. Somehow or other the fact seems to have become impressed upon our dull intellect that the Journal is a bang up newspaper, although life is so serious to us that we never read its jokes—Peabody Press.

MUNROE'S CLOTHING HOUSE.

Important Announcement!

We have finished renovating our store and completed a large addition to the same, which gives us the largest, lightest and best equipped Clothing Store in this vicinity. We wish to call your attention this week to the Children's Department.

We have selected the largest and finest line of CHILDREN'S SUITS, ages 4 to 14 years, that has ever been shown in this city. Special attention will be given to this department and to the comfort of ladies and children.

We have added a fine line of TRUNKS and TRAVELLING BAGS that will be sold at lowest prices.

In our Hat and Cap Department

We have made extensive additions which gives us the best facilities for showing our immense stock.

In Gent's Furnishings

We shall use double the former space, and as usual make this an important of our store. We would call your attention to our

Great Mark-Down Sale of Suits and Trousers,

To continue for the next TEN DAYS. These garments will be marked with a RED TAG, at prices so low, regardless of cost, as to insure for them a quick sale.

We want everyone to come and see our NEW STORE, and extend a cordial greeting to all.

The Congressional Outlook.

The meeting at the Revere house, last Wednesday evening, of the friends of Hon. James A. Fox, was an exceedingly hearty and enthusiastic gathering, and the presence and earnest cooperation of many of the active party workers promise well for the nomination of this gentleman next month.

There is still a certain amount of sympathetic feeling existing for General Banks that will probably give him the votes of the Waltham delegates, although we fail to find, even among the friends of that gentleman, a single person who pretends to claim that at present the Fifth District is properly represented in Congress.

Ex-Mayor Burns will doubtless receive on the first ballot in the convention the complimentary vote of the delegates from two of the Somerville wards, but beyond that Mr. Burns has little strength, and it is very certain that he will be actively opposed by all members of the G. A. R., with whom he is particularly unpopular.

The executive committee of the Fox campaign are active and experienced workers, and they will present the claims of their candidate in the caucuses, and make an earnest effort to send a solid delegation of twenty-nine Fox men to the convention.

We believe Hon. James A. Fox will be nominated as the Republican candidate for Congress, and if he be nominated he will surely be elected, and the Fifth District will then have a representative fitted in every respect to stand and work with Henry Cabot Lodge, Frederick T. Greenhalge and General Cogswell.—Cambridge Tribune.

A Short GROCERY Sermon.

Text: "Fair Prices for Groceries."

There are some Grocers who are very much like our friend illustrated above—they never know when Groceries are falling. If the wholesale price goes up they find it out and mark up their prices at once, but when it goes down, down, down, they don't seem to know it, and keep on selling at high prices.

Now that's not honest or fair, and we don't do business in that way, and that you may have an inkling how low our prices really are, we give below our price for a few articles.

Curtis Davis' Welcome Soap,	4c.
B. T. Babbitt's Best Soap,	4c.
Pyle's Pearline,	11c.
Dury's Satin Gloss Starch,	7c.
Royal Baking Powder, ½-lb.,	11c.
Cleveland Baking Powder, ½-lb.,	21c.
	1-lb., 40c.

It costs you nothing to get our prices for everything that you eat. We know that we can save you 25 cents on every dollar.

HOW TO DO IT.

Send us a list of the groceries you desire, and we will by return of mail send you back word exactly what we will sell them to you for delivered free at the railroad station in your town, if your bill amounts to $5.00.

Remember, first, last, and always, that we guarantee all of our Groceries to be of the finest quality, and refer you to editor of this paper as to value of this guarantee.

HORACE N. CONN.

ZACCHEUS THE PUBLICAN

LESSON X, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 7.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xix, 1-10. Commit Verses, 7-10—Golden Text, Luke xix, 10—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "And Jesus entered and passed through Jericho." The last verses of the previous chapter tell of His healing a blind man as He came nigh to Jericho; while Matt. xx, 29-34 tells of His healing two blind men as He departed from Jericho.

2. "And, behold, there was a man named Zaccheus, which was the chief among the publicans, and he was rich." We are not told whether the other publican was rich or poor, but we are sure that he was poor in spirit. Instead of a rich ruler, esteemed by the people as in the last lesson, here is a rich publican, one of the class whom the Pharisee thanked God that he did not belong to; but presently we shall find this rich chief among the publicans, in the company of the healed blind men, a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus.

3. "And he sought to see Jesus, who He was; and could not for the press, because he was little of stature." His motives are not given, but we infer from the rest of the story that he, too, would be a follower of Jesus if He would have him. Perhaps up to this moment he was merely curious to see this great Teacher and worker of miracles, as when people go to church to hear a new preacher. But how many have thus gone, just to see and hear something new, or even to scoff, and there they were found of Him whom they sought not.

4. "And he ran before, and climbed up into a sycamore tree to see Him: for He was to pass that way." He was in earnest to see Him, he came out from the crowd, and unconsciously hid himself. In listening to the preaching of the gospel, or the teaching of the Sunday school lesson, all are too apt to lose themselves in the crowd, instead of taking the truth home to themselves. If we are to profit our own souls it must be by separating ourselves from others and by believing that He means me.

5. "And when Jesus came to the place, He looked up and saw him." He who knows our down sitting and uprising and understands our thoughts afar off (Ps. cxxxix, 2); who saw Nathanael under the fig tree (John i, 48), saw also this man when he left the crowd and climbed up into this tree. The leaves of the sycamore could not hide him any more than the trees of the garden could hide Adam and Eve. He saw also the desires of his heart, for He knows the things that come into our mind, every one of them (Ezek. xi, 5). Here is a seeking sinner and a seeking Saviour face to face. What a glorious meeting. The Holy Spirit brought it about. He does all these things.

"And said unto him, Zaccheus, make haste and come down; for today I must abide at thy house." How Zaccheus' heart must have leaped at these words; and then He called him by name, there was no mistaking it, He surely meant him.

6. "And he made haste, and came down, and received Him joyfully." Thank God for that. However, he came down; he came quickly and received Christ gladly. As the angel hurried Lot out of Sodom, saying: "Escape for thy life; haste thee, escape thither" (Gen. xix, 17, 22), so we who are saved would urge the unsaved to make haste and come to Jesus, if we only heartily believed what we profess to believe.

7. "And when they saw it, they all murmured, saying, that He was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner." Here is Satan resisting, the devil angry because he has lost a captive. In Zech. iii, 1, we see a man clothed with filthy garments standing before God, and Satan at his right hand to resist him, but a little further on in the chapter the filthy garments are gone, and Satan is gone, too; there is a glorious change of apparel and the angel of the Lord stands by. Whenever a sinner comes to Christ, the devil is sure to find fault and point to the filthy garments. He did so through Simon, the Pharisee, when the poor woman came to Jesus (Luke vii, 39), and again in chap. xv, 2, when the publicans and sinners came near to Jesus. He is always doing it; it is his business to resist everything truly good; to hinder sinners from coming to Christ, and to hinder saints from serving Christ. He is the devil (i. e., the accuser or slanderer) and Satan (i. e., the adversary); he is a serpent, for he is subtle and his ways are crooked; and he is a dragon, having great power; but he has not all power, Jesus has that, and He, blessed be His name, will yet destroy all the works of the devil, and the devil, too. Let him resist and accuse all he has a mind to; we will overcome him by the Blood of the Lamb, and by the word of our testimony, even if we die for it.

8. "And Zaccheus stood, and said unto the Lord." He could not walk with Christ till this was settled. With sin on the conscience there can be no true fellowship with God. But here comes the evidence of the sincerity of his conversion. His faith becomes manifest in his works. He shows that he has truly repented.

"Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold." These things were neither his salvation, nor the ground of it, but rather the evidences that he had passed from death to life. We must keep in mind and stand firm on this, that there is no salvation by works revealed in Scripture (Rom. iii, 20; iv, 5; Eph. ii, 9). We rest only and wholly in Christ for salvation, but being saved we must prove it in our lives. Titus iii, 8, is just as faithful a saying as I Tim. i, 15: "This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they who have believed be careful to maintain good works."

9. "And Jesus said unto him, This day is salvation come to this house, forsomuch as he also is a son of Abraham." "Salvation is of the Lord." "Behold, God is my salvation." "Neither is there salvation in any other" (Jonah ii, 9; Isa. xii, 2; Acts iv, 12). God manifest in the flesh had come to that man, and to that house, and had been received; and where Jesus is there is salvation. It is all in Him, and apart from Him there is none. He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life (I John v, 12). The salvation begins when we receive Jesus, but it shall never end. When He comes even our bodies shall be like His, and then shall we be forever with the Lord. Whether he were Jew or Gentile before he is now a true son of Abraham and therefore an heir of the world (Gal. iii, 29; Rom. iv, 11, 13). Not many see the glory of being children of Abraham, and cannot appreciate it, for they see not the meaning of the Kingdom but blessed are the eyes which see, for therein lies the secret of being able to give cheerfully one's goods to the poor.

10. "For the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." This name, "Son of Man," has special reference to the Christ as Son of David, and yet reaches beyond to Christ as the true Isaac, the true seed of Abraham, in whom all nations shall be blessed.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. H. L. Flanders & Co., Druggists.

A JOCULAR COUNTRYMAN.

How a New Yorker Amuses Himself While Waiting for a Train.

A tall, elderly man, with good natured wrinkles radiating from his blue eyes, walked into the Erie railroad station at Jersey City and bought a ticket for Avondale, N. J.

He wore a long linen duster that reached to his heels and a wide brimmed Panama straw hat. He had missed the 3:40 train and had a long hour to wait. He seemed nervous and uneasy, and paced up and down the waiting room for a long time, when one of the gatemen began to shout out a long string of stations that nobody could understand.

"Say, mister," said the tall, countryfied looking man, "how much will you take to teach me that tune? I want to get even with a young lady friend of mine who lives opposite me."

"Oh, cheese it," responded the gateman.

The man apparently from the country accepted the hint and knocked a little newsboy's hat off and looked quickly in the opposite direction, while the newsboy stood looking around for the cause of the accident.

Another gateman began to rattle off unintelligible stations in a low tone of voice.

"Now, see here," said the man, who looked as if his hair were filled with hayseed, "I must and will learn that song. Two dollars if you give me two lessons."

The bargain was struck, and the big man in the linen duster stood for five minutes at the gate and yelled out the name of every station he could think of. A large crowd gathered and enjoyed the fun. Finally the Avondale train was announced.

The countryman left the gate and started for his train, followed by the crowd. At the train a young man in a peaked cap, blue suit and brass buttons was splitting his throat yelling:

"Main line train on the right; Paterson on the left."

The countryfied individual stopped and said, "Young man, let me do that for you, and you get on the train and take a ride."

"Oh, take a sneak. See?" was all the reply the man who looked like a countryman received.

This is one way Lawson N. Fuller passes away the time when he is compelled to wait.—New York Evening Sun.

The Orca, or Grampus.

As if not satisfied with the harm it can do alone, the orca secures the aid of two or three of its fellows, and then the little pack of monsters start on an expedition. Everything is game to them. If a school of dolphins come in sight, away go the fierce sea wolves in hot chase. The frightened dolphins dash madly through the waves, urged to their swiftest speed by terror; but grimly the ravenous pursuers close upon the flying quarry.

Perhaps a great Greenland whale may cross the path of the marauders. Huge as it is—the largest of created beings—it has no terrors for the bloodthirsty pack. They dart about the giant with lightning velocity, now in front, now underneath, now on the sides, until the bewildered monster, with a lash of his ponderous tail, turns his mighty head downward and seeks the ocean's bed. Vain effort! His tormentors follow him apparently with ferocious glee.

Up, up again, rage and agony lending added strength, till the surface is reached and all that bulk of flesh shoots out of water and then falls with a ponderous crash, dashing the boiling waves asunder. Still the agile foes are there. They leap over his head, high in air, and dive under him. They rush at him here, there and everywhere. He opens his huge mouth to engulf them. They only mock at the danger, and soon, wounded in a hundred places, weakened and powerless, the whale succumbs.—John R. Coryell in St. Nicholas.

A Substitute for Gum Arabic.

M. Trojanowski, a Polish chemist, has discovered what he claims to be a substitute for gum arabic by boiling one part of flaxseed with eight parts of diluted sulphuric acid in eight parts of water until the mixture, which at first thickens, becomes quite fluid. The compound is then strained through muslin, and four times its volume of strong alcohol is added. The precipitate, after being filtered, washed with alcohol and carefully dried, produces a clear gum devoid of all taste or odor. Thirty grains, it is said, are a sufficient emulsion for an ounce of cod liver oil. The value of this invention will, of course, depend on how far this new article can be relied on as a substitute for the original, and the cost at which it can be produced for the market.—Exchange.

Sea Bathing for Diabetic Patients.

Another very delicate question arises—that of deciding whether, yes or no, we can recommend sea bathing to diabetic patients. As a general thing sea baths are useful, but only as an auxiliary means, in diabetic patients who, though a little exhausted, are still capable of reacting vigorously, and for whom we have specially in view a building up of the general condition.—Paris Herald.

May Thank Her Stars.

The narrow escape of Mrs. B. M. Searles, of Elkhart, Ind., from a premature death is wonderful. She states that "for twenty years my heart troubled me greatly. I became worse. Had smothering spells, short breath, fluttering; could not sleep on my left side, had much Pain in Breast, shoulder and stomach. Ankles swelled. Had much headache and dizziness. Treatment did me no good, until I tried Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure and Restorative Nervine. The first bottle helped me, and I was soon virtually cured. For sale at Charles H. Buss's drug store. A Well Paid Poet.

It isn't every man, or woman either, for that matter, who can get from $250 to $350 for a poem. Will Carleton is one of these. I see him often in Brooklyn, where he lives on Greene avenue, and he is as much unlike a poet in appearance as one could imagine. In years he is getting well along toward the fifties. His hair seems to be prematurely gray. He is about medium height, and his figure is stout and robust, which leads to the belief that he is something of an athlete. He carries himself with a soldierly bearing. His head is well shaped and is poised gracefully on a pair of broad shoulders. His face is clean shaven, except for a small gray mustache. In fact he has a jaunty air. He seems to have none of the notions about dress and mannerisms that poets are usually supposed to have.

Mr. Carleton is a busy man. His work is always in demand, and orders for his poems increase so rapidly that he is enabled to charge the figures I have quoted above. He lives in a plain old fashioned house of brownstone, similar in all respects to hundreds of others in his immediate vicinity. His library and workshop is a curious place. There is row upon row of books, no end of pictures, and desks and tables littered with all sorts of papers, magazines and writing utensils. He has no particular hour for work.

He gets up tolerably early, and after breakfast goes at once to his desk, where he remains busily at work until midday. His afternoons he devotes to visiting his publishers, walking, writing, driving or visiting. He knows the value of good health, and spends a fair share of his time in making brawn.

In addition to his literary work Mr. Carleton is well known on the lecture platform. He is a thorough Yankee in the matter of money, and is one of the most practical business men that you will find. And thus it comes that his bank account is large and is constantly being added to.—New York Press.

Fines in Germany.

A curious system of fines obtains in Germany. People are fined for every curious little alleged offense. An estimable lady (very near and dear to me) went out for a walk in the old part of Hanover. Wandering about in the quaint, narrow streets she lost her way, and, being unable to speak German or to find a cab, she meandered wildly hither and thither until at last she found herself in a remote suburb quite in the country. Seeking to make a short cut back to the city she started across an open field, but was speedily overhauled by a native who implied by his tones and gestures that she was committing a grave offense.

To make a long and harrowing story short, this estimable lady was ultimately compelled to pay a fine of three marks for trespassing (most innocently) upon the private property of a suburban farmer. If it were not, however, for the severity of the trespass law farms, orchards and meadows would be ruthlessly overrun, for fences are what the book sellers would call "excessively rare."

Boys are fined for playing games in the streets; to throw a snowball at any person or any thing costs three marks. Whistling upon the streets is a finable offense; so is dropping nutshells or fruit peelings upon the pavement. If your neighbor keeps poultry and the cackling disturbs you a complaint to the police results in the immediate abatement of the nuisance. When the young woman of the family practices upon the piano the windows of the room must be closed in order that the neighborhood shall not be pestered.

Having had three boys at school in Germany not only am I pretty well informed as to the number of finable offenses, but I have a pretty positive theory as to how the German empire is enabled to bear the cost of so large a standing army. The regular fine is three marks; for this sum the average American boy can commit any one of those characteristic actions or carelessnesses which in his native land are considered the natural prerogatives of masculine youth. When one says that Germany is the cheapest place in the world in which to educate a boy either he does not take the American boys into consideration or he does not include the inevitable fines in his estimate.—Eugene Field in Chicago News.

Life on the Rail.

Conductor of a Dining Car—Yes, I get pretty tired of this sort of life. The worst part about it is the uncertainty. When I say good-by to my wife and babies I never know when I shall meet them again. I don't mean what you think I mean—death by accident. A railroad man soon gets over that. He has to. The constant fear of that sort of thing would make a man crazy. What I refer to is this: I left Cedar Rapids one morning. I expected to be in Chicago by 2:30 p. m. An accident to a freight train up the road caused us a delay of several hours. Now, I get a telegram telling me to drop this dining car at a certain point, and to go back with it on the next train. That sort of thing is liable to happen on every run I make for a week, and I may not see my family for that time or longer. A railroad man never knows what orders he is going to get. I have got home, that is to the station where my home is, often, and just as I was starting to my house I have received orders to take somebody else's run, and had to do it before I had time to go see my family. We may not have as hard a time of it as some, but don't you get it into your head that we sleep on beds of roses and never have anything to worry us.—Chicago Tribune.

Spiders as Detective Agencies.

Robert F. Smith, turnkey of the Ulster county, N. Y., jail, finds that spiders are useful in ascertaining whether prisoners have been tampering with iron window bars or not. It is not easy to discover the cut of a fine saw in an iron bar, especially when such cut has been carefully closed with blackened bread. Even running a knife blade along the bar does not always disclose it. Spiders weave their webs over these windows, running their threads from bar to bar. A prisoner cannot work on a bar without breaking down the webs. When the officer sees the web has not been displaced he considers it good proof that the window bars have not been sawed. If the web has been brushed away he makes a careful examination.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Lesson in Economy.

Dudish Youth—I always have my costumes made to order, sir.

"You go mit une vashionable tailor, eh? Don't you know, mein frent, dat your employer, Mr. Greatpurse, and many other rich merchants, and bankers, and brokers always buy dere clodings ready made, eh?"

"Yes, I've heard so. What of it?"

"Dot is how dey got rich."—New York Weekly.

The death rate among the Indians who aim to live like white people is three times that of those who continue to live a semi-wild life. The Pawnee tribe has lost more men by lung troubles in the last ten years than they lost in battle during the previous thirty.

Of the twenty-three presidents we have had, Jefferson, Madison, Jackson and Lincoln are the only ones whose names stand for state capitals, and Montgomery is the only other historic American so remembered.

The Size of a Book.

No book too heavy to hold in one hand has any right to exist, to the exclusion of the same work in the ideal form, and we would have that form the original shape of publication; those who want books to furnish their libraries, not their minds, might wait. As it is now, half a dozen interests conspire to give the lover of literature his love first in a guise that makes it a burden. Certain works of science and art, whose primary appeal is not literary, might take the shape their authors judged fittest; but there is no reason except the commercial reason why fiction, poetry, travel, biography, history should not always be offered us first as we have suggested.—W. D. Howells in Harper's.

Embroidered handkerchiefs had come into use in Shakespeare's time, as is proved by the important part which Desdemona's handkerchief—or "napkin," as it is called—plays in the tragedy of "Othelo." But as yet the possessors of handkerchiefs were lords and ladies. Even in the Seventeenth century the common people knew no such luxury.

An Inhibitted Trait.

Chumley—What did your wife say when you got home last night?

Bumley—Nothing—what did yours?

Chumley—Oh, she was terribly red headed.

Bumley—What for?

Chumley—Bora so.—Whiteside Herald.

The trouble with most of the cooks we hire is that they do not love their work. It is their pay they think most of. It takes time to cook. The best results come from a slow, a moderate fire. Nothing good can be done in a hurry except catching a train or fleeing from danger, yet the average cook works her fire into a passion and tries to cook her meals in a jiffy.

He Sees Snakes Daily.

Fireman Johnson at the Washington monument sees snakes every day, and some of the stories he relates would put to shame Luther Benson, the author of "Fifteen Years in Hell." Something about the engine room attracts the snakes, and some nights they invade it in droves, and he finds it necessary to have a general cleaning out every morning before the machinery which runs the huge elevator can be put in motion. Only a few mornings ago Mr. Johnson opened a drawer of his desk to get some papers and there found coiled up an immense snake. A pair of tongs was brought into use and his snakeship was cremated.—Washington Post.

Plenty of Water.

Jagway—I hear that Robinson is so much afraid of consumption that he has decided to try the water cure.

Travers—That so? Where is he going?

Jagway—Going to drive a milk wagon.—Clothier and Furnisher.

Woman's Column.

Mrs. Mary A. Livermore is crowded with engagements until September. She is to lecture or to be present at the various "Chautauqua Assemblies" in Michigan, New Jersey, New Hampshire, New York and Maine, also at Weirs, Ocean Grove, etc. She has the largest programme of summer work she has ever undertaken.

Elizabeth W. Gilmer is editor and proprietor of the Quincy (Ill.) Patriot. The Patriot is a good local paper, and is Prohibition in politics. It supports State and county tickets, each bearing the name of a woman candidate.—Miss Mary Allen West,—for Trustee of the State University, and Miss Ella Honwald for County School Surerintendent.

Mrs. Simpson, wife of the well-known Methodist bishop, is active in good works. She planned the Methodist Orphanage, founded about ten years ago, and herself gave the first contribution toward it. The little waifs in orphan asylums are often made to feel bitterly that they are nobody's child, but in this institution a different spirit seems to prevail. One small boy, being asked, "Whose little boy are you?" answered cheerfully, "I am everybody's little boy!"

In the wake of the female doctor the female chemist is advancing fast. And why not? If a woman can successfully mix compounds for eating purposes as a cook does every day of her life, and that woman one by no means highly trained, why should not a lady, whose education has probably been three times as good as that of an ordinary assistant, become a successful dispenser with the aid of the necessary tuition? In America lady chemists are doing a good deal of work, and in one of the large towns in Russia a lady is the head of one of the principal chemist's establishments. But as yet the lady apothecary is almost an unknown quantity in England, except at Eastbourne, where I remember some years ago seeing a woman's name over one of the chemists' shops, with, I believe, the magic letters M. P. S. after her name. But this is the solitary example which I know of in England—as yet.—London Figaro.

The agitation among the barbers at Bombay is likely to result in their refusal to shave widows' heads. Of course, says the London News, those who are acquainted with native views in India will recognize that this intimation is not so comical as it sounds, but has a very serious meaning, and reflects great credit on the native barber. It is a relic of a system of cruel treatment of native widows that they should have their hair shorn off at the moment of their affliction. Native journals have recently been denouncing the cruel practice, in spite of the opposition of the Brahmins, who have themselves threatened to cut the hair of the widows if the barbers refuse. This, however, it is said the Brahmins could not do without losing caste. The revolt in Bombay is due to the excessive cruelty practised toward widows there. Up country the practice of shaving the widow's head is not so persistently enforced as in Bombay. The hair is allowed to grow again, and the widow is only expected to submit to a renewal of the unwelcome operation when she visits a shrine of special sanctity. In Bombay widows are shaved regularly once a week, and this causes them deep distress.

Literary Notices.

THE COTTAGE HEARTH for September is a number that will bear the closest inspection as to its art or literary contents. It is brimful and running over with good things, while its matter relating to domestic affairs, fashions, and other special departments are rich in novelties. The reader will please bear in mind that we give THE JOURNAL ($2.00 per an.) and THE COTTAGE HEARTH ($1.50 per an.) for $2.00, invariably in advance.

HARPER'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE for September is a profusely illustrated number. Several of the papers are rich in fine pictures which lend great interest to the letterpress. Some of the principal papers of the issue are: Across the Andes, The Metric System, From a Battlement of Roses, a continuation of Port Tarascon, The Moor Girl's Well, Aix-la-Chapelle, Mountain passes of the Cumberland, etc., etc.

HARPERS is sold by the New England News Company of Boston, and by Sparrow Horton at the old Woburn Bookstore.

THE ARENA for September is noticeable for the strength and variety of its contributions. No reader of serious literature who desires to keep abreast with the best thought of the day can afford to be without this magazine. The opening paper is by Senator John T. Morgan of Alabama, on the Race Question, a striking presentation of the problem from the standpoint of a Southern statesman. Rev. Samuel W. Dike, LL. D. contributes a paper of great ability on Marriage and Divorce Laws. Some of the other papers are: Physical Research by Richard Hodgson, LL D., Vaccination, Robert Owen at New Lanark, The Dominion's Original Sin, Divine Progress, The Greatest Living Englishman, etc., etc. Published by the Arena Pub. Co., Boston.

The numbers of LITTELL'S LIVING AGE for August 23d and 30th contain The Origin of Alphabets, Western China: its Products and Trade, The Shetland Isles in the Birds-nesting Season, A Voice from a Harem, The Cession of Heligoland, Comedy in Fiction, In Sickness and in Health, and The Bamboo, Christmas-tide at Tangier, and Watteau: his Life and Work; Chapters from some Unwritten Memoirs, Rural Reminiscences, and The Sea and Seaside, A Manual for Interior Souls, and The Smart Way of Shaking Hands, Tarantulas, The Oxford Summer Meeting, Hyacinth Culture in Holland, with instalments of Marcia and an attractive Young Person, and poetry. For fifty-two numbers of sixty-four large pages each the subscription price ($8) is low. Littell & Co., Boston, are the publishers.

Several of the strongest writers for THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY are represented in the September number. D. Andrew D. White opens the issue with an article on The Fall of Man and Anthropology, in which he traces the growth of scientific evidence proving that man has had no fall from a high estate but that, from a humble beginning, he has been continually rising. This is one of the most effective chapters in the Warfare of Science series. The conclusion of Mr. Edward Atkinson's paper, Common Sense applied to the Tariff Question, also appears in this number. These are followed by a large number of papers on scientific subjects, among which are: Some Natives of Australia, Wild Horses, The African Pygmies, Can the Mosquito Pest Be Mitigated? Slavonia Faries, Editor's Table, Literary Notices, Popular Miscellany, etc. Published by D. Appleton & Co., N. Y.

The complete novel in LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for September is contributed by Katharine Pearson Woods, author of that remarkable book, Metzerott, Shoemaker. Miss Woods, like Mr. Edward Bellamy, has won sudden and wide fame by the advocacy of certain forms of socialism, and this, her latest novel, is directed against the "Sweating System," a system which has been exciting a great deal of antagonism both in America and England, and which stands greatly in need of reform. The story is entitled "The Mark of the Beast," and has that power about it which springs from an earnest purpose, while it is crowded with strong scenes and dramatic situations. It is a story that everybody will want to read. A sketch of Miss Woods, by Hester Crawford Dorsey, appears in the body of the magazine. The complete novel is followed by numerous excellent short papers principally among which are The Picture of Dorian Gray by Julian Hawthorne, The Art of Interviewing, My Enemy, An interesting article on the Panama Canal, Current Concentration of Industrial Capital by Henry Clews, and several fresh poems.

The September ST. NICHOLAS devotes the opening paper to Oliver Wendell Holmes, a visit to the poet being appreciatively described by Annie Isabel Willis. W. J. Henderson shows that Great Ocean Waves are not properly called tidal waves. Richard Harding Davis tells the story of the Great Tri-Club Tennis Tournament, and another story describes the rescue of an Alaskan child from superstitious members of her own tribe who were about to put her to death as a witch. Ernest E. Thompson writes the True Story of a Little Gray Rabbit. Professor Roberts describes his experiences in a lumber camp. Boys will enjoy the story of a sharp bit of base-ball strategy, My Triple Play. Other amusing or bright contributions are: A Little Contraband, Wooden Shoes, Two Surprise Parties, Clover, and a great number of clever bits of verse and artistic pictures. Only the new pieces are mentioned, but there are serials and continued sketches as well. Altogether the September number is packed full of goods like a hamper sent from a good home to a much-loved boy at boarding school.

CALIFORNIA topics occupy considerable space in the September CENTURY. The Treasures of the Yosemite Valley in the August number is followed by another on Features of the Proposed Yosemite National Park, which is illustrated by William Keith, Charles D. Robinson, Moran, and Davies. The writer describes the wonderful scenery in the neighborhood of Yosemite, included in the limits of the proposed park. Mr. Muir records his protest against present and preceding Commissions. The number also contains How California Came into the Union, illustrated by a large portrait of General Fremont from a daguerreotype of 1850, and by others of Commodores Sloat and Stockton, Governor Burnett, Senator Gwin, and J. Ross Browne, together with pictures of Colton Hall, Monterey and the famous Bear Flag, hoisted at Sonoma in '49. The frontispiece is an engraving by T. A. Butler of Nattier's picturesque portrait of the beautiful Princesse de Conti, an attractive prelude to Mrs. Amelia Gere Mason's fifth paper on The Women of the French Salons. Some of the other papers of the number, illustrated and plain, are Our New Naval Guns, The Anglo-maniacs, Joe Jefferson's Autobiography, An Artists Letters from Japan; Friend Olivia, and several pieces of seasonable poetry.

Frequently

A FIT of sickness is prevented by taking a simple but timely remedy. For a Torpid Liver, Deranged Stomach, or Inactive Bowels, nothing is so prompt, harmless, and effective as Ayer's Pills. Sugar-coated and purely vegetable, they are the best Family Pills ever compounded.

"I have now used Ayer's Pills in my family for seven or eight years. Whenever I have an attack of headache, to which I am very subject, I take a dose of Ayer's Pills and am always promptly relieved. I find them equally beneficial in colds; and, in my family, they are used for bilious complaints and other disturbances with such good effect that we rarely, if ever, have to call in a physician."—H. Voulliemé, Hotel Vollieme, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

"For a number of years I was stationed in the tropics, and, while there, suffered much from torpidity of the liver and indigestion.

Headaches

and nausea disabled me for days at a time, and it was only by the use of Ayer's Pills that I obtained relief."—E. A. Robinson, 151 School street, Lowell, Mass.

"Ayer's Pills cured me of liver complaint after five years of unavailing treatment. They have done me more good than any other medicine I have ever taken."—E. J. Fawcett, Green st., Charlestown, Mass.

"A year ago I was severely afflicted with Jaundice.

My eyes and skin were saffron-color; I had constant pain in my back; was much troubled with constipation and piles, and I could hardly sit down without falling asleep. When I began taking Ayer's Pills my faith in remedies was almost gone; but this medicine helped me right away, and in less than three months I was completely cured."—Darius Norton, Pomerania, N. J.

"Ayer's Pills have been used in my family for over thirty years. We find them an excellent medicine in fevers, eruptive diseases, and bilious troubles.

Ayer's Pills

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

When Troubled

With Flatulence or Indigestion, a dose of Ayer's Pills will speedily set you right. They are mild, but thorough, in their operation, and more generally recommended, for common use, by the medical profession than any other pill.

"For months I was greatly afflicted with indigestion, liver complaint, and constipation. I tried various remedies, but found nothing to help me until I began to use Ayer's Pills. After taking one box my health was so much improved that I procured another. Before I had finished the second box my health was completely restored."—Jos. Aubin, High st., Holyoke, Mass.

"I prescribe Ayer's Pills in my practice, and find them an excellent cathartic—mild, safe, and effective, their use being followed by no ill effects. I urge their general use in families."—John W. Brown, M. D., Oceana, W. Va.

"After much suffering from dyspepsia and my health has finally been restored by taking Ayer's Pills. This remedy never fails to improve the appetite, assist digestion, and regulate the bowels."—S. L. Frye, Saco, Me.

Constipation,

"For several months I have been afflicted with indigestion. I bought a box of Ayer's Pills, and before I had used half of them, I found myself cured."—Frederic C. Greener, East Dedham, Mass.

"I have prescribed your Pills in many cases of diarrhœa and with remarkable success. They are admirably adapted for all the purposes of a family physic."—Dr. James G. McBride, Washington, D. C.

Dysentery

"One of my customers has been greatly benefited by the use of Ayer's Pills. He was troubled with liver disorder and in failing health for several months. Since he began using Ayer's Pills he has improved greatly, gaining rapidly in flesh and strength."—Winfield S. McCollough, Druggist, Wheeling, W. Va.

"I was distressed with indigestion and headache, for years. Ayer's restored me to health."—W. H. Strout, Meadville, Pa.

Pills

Forced To Leave Home.

Over 60 people were forced to leave their homes yesterday to call at their druggists for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicines. If your blood is bad, your liver and kidneys out of order, if you are constipated and have headache and an unsightly complexion, don't fail to call on any druggists to-day for a free sample of this grand remedy. The ladies praise it. Everyone likes it. Large size packages 50 cents.

Besides fruits and vegetables, Florida raises rattlesnakes in great abundance. A farmer who lives near Tampa says he has killed 30 large rattlesnakes in his neighborhood with a few months. The last one was seven feet four inches in length. The Tampa Tribune vouches for the veracity of the farmer.

The usual treatment of catarrh is very unsatisfactory, as thousands of despairing patients can testify. A trustworthy medical writer says: "Proper local treatment is positively necessary to success, but most of the remedies in general use by physicians afford but temporary benefit. A cure cannot be expected from snuffs, powders, douches and washes." Ely's Cream Balm is a remedy which combines the important requisites of quick action, specific curative power with perfect safety and pleasantness to the patient.

The explanation of the peculiar destiny of thunder clouds is said to lie in the fact that the vapor is partially condensed into drops by the electrical action.

The worst cases of scrofula, salt rheum and other diseases of the blood, are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

He (looking at the clock)—Bless me, how time flies! I had no idea it was so late. She (yawning)—Better late than never.

HISTORIC HOUSES OF BURLINGTON.

BY MARTHA SEWALL CURTIS.

In the merry days of stage coaches Burlington was quite a famous place, being on the direct road from Boston to Concord, N. H. thirteen miles northeast of the Hub, between Woburn and Lexington. The old tavern at the top of the hill, still standing, was in the later days the half way house between Boston and Lowell where the horses were changed.

But when the Lowell railroad was built its course was turned from the direct route and Burlington was left stranded by the tide of progress. Stage coaches, passengers, and drivers vanished. The jolly bustling days were over and Burlington settled into a quiet little town, visited only by sight-seers who come to view its scenery and places of historic interest.

Burlington was originally a part of the old town of Woburn. In 1732 it was formed into a parish and was known by the name of Woburn Precinct until, in 1799, it became a town. Its most famous house is known as the "Sewall House." Its exact age cannot be determined but it was purchased in 1751 by the second minister of the parish and for a hundred years was the home of the pastors of the church, who were connected by marriage. On the eventful morning of the battle of Lexington, April 19, 1775, this house was the refuge of some notable people, and strangers still come to view the "front room" where they were entertained. At this time the owner of the house was Madam Jones, the widow of the second minister of the parish. On the evening of April 18, 1775, John Hancock and Samuel Adams with the fair Dorothy Quincy, afterward the wife of Hancock, were at the house of Rev. Jonas Clark, the minister of Lexington. It was said that Hancock passed the night "in cleaning his gun and sword and putting his accoutrements in order," and that he was at first determined to join the militia on the green but was finally dissuaded from his purpose by Samuel Adams and Mr. Clark. Not long after midnight they were aroused by Paul Revere who brought the sure tidings of the approach of the British soldiers. Mr. Clark and other friends of Hancock and Adams advised them to seek a place of safety. At first they objected, but were finally convinced that the preservation of their lives was of the utmost importance to the Colony and to the cause of freedom itself. Mr. Clark then entrusted them to the care of a trusty militia-man who was instructed to find for them a safe hiding place. He first conducted them to a woody hill south-east of Mr. Clark's house where they could witness whatever might happen at Lexington.

On this hill Samuel Adams, hearing the British, uttered the prophetic exclamation, "What a glorious morning for America is this!"

Little did he think that these would become household words, repeated from sire to son at the hearthstones of a mighty nation.

It was soon evident, however, that their retreat was too near the scene of action and the little party were conducted by their guide over the winding country road to the house of Madam Jones in Woburn Precinct, four miles away. This lady, a friend of Mr. Clark, was a zealous Whig and received her honored guests with great cordiality. She began at once to make preparations for a good dinner with the help of her negro slave, Cuff. The coachman was sent back to Lexington for a fine salmon, which had been presented to Hancock and Adams as a rare treat at that season and was left behind in the haste of their flight. In due time the dinner was prepared and set on the table in the "best room."

The patriots were very hungry, as in the confusion of the morning they had eaten no breakfast. But scarcely were they seated at the table when a man from Lexington rushed into the room exclaiming: "My wife, I fear, is by this time in eternity, and as for you (speaking to Hancock and Adams), you had better look out for yourselves for the enemy will soon be at your heels!"

The company immediately rose from the table, leaving the salmon untasted, and once more prepared for flight. Their travelling carriage or coach was drawn away into the woods that it might not be a tell-tale object to their pursuers and Rev. John Marrett, the minister, who lived at the home of Madam Jones, conducted them to a house owned by Amos Wyman and situated in a very obscure place near the corner of Woburn Precinct, Bedford and Billerica. Here they found many women and children who were also hiding from the "red coats."

The patriots now began to feel the sharp pangs of hunger. They asked Mrs. Wyman for some food. She took down from the shelf a wooden tray containing some cold boiled salt pork, cold boiled potatoes, unpeeled, and some brown bread. Upon this plain fare they made a hearty meal. It was a current story that Hancock afterward sent Mrs. Wyman a present of a cow as a reward for her hospitality.

The Wyman house was torn down years ago, and even its site can only be traced with difficulty.

On the next day John Hancock and Samuel Adams returned to the house of Madam Jones to find that the regulars had never pursued them to the precinct and they had fled at a false alarm. The enemy, closely pursued by the warrior farmers, had retreated in hot haste to Boston. Madam Jones, who lived to be a very old lady, always cherished the memory of this occurrence and delighted to relate it to her visitors.

Not far from the [illegible] of Madam Jones in the old precinct burying ground stands a headstone of grey slate, which marks the grave of Cuff, a slave so faithful to the duties of his lowly place that he was beloved by all in life and honored in death, being borne to his grave by the selectmen of the town as a mark of respect to him and the family he had served so long.

Another historic house of Burlington is that owned by Capt. Reed at the time of the Battle of Lexington and now in the possession of one of his descendants. In this house the first British prisoners taken in the Revolutionary War were confined on the day of the battle.

In another house in the southerly part of the town the library and public records of Harvard College were kept for safety during the perilous Revolutionary days.

The oldest house in Burlington has certainly been standing two hundred years. It is a dark ancient looking building situated on a retired road in the north part of the town. It was once used as a garrison house. The old gentlemen by whom it is owned delights to show its marks of age to visitors.

It is considered by good judges to be one of the oldest houses in the State. The broad fields and meadows and dense tracts of woodland that sourround it once formed the great Wyman farm, containing a thousand acres, owned by John and Francis Wyman, two of the original settlers of the town of Woburn. Five hundred acres of this farm were purchased, about 1669. This house when built was one of the outposts of civilization in that direction. Just behind it Indians lurked in the grassy meadows of the Shawshin, river. This tribe of Indians were the last who troubled the settlers in this part of the country. On account of the danger from them the port holes, still to be seen in the back of the house, were very necessary, and we look upon them to-day as interesting marks of the past. Standing near the old house, in the quiet spot where it seems always to be afternoon, with the solemn woods and meadows closing round us, it is not hard to imagine that we are in Woburn in the early days of the Wyman settlement, two hundred and twenty years ago.

"Purity—Strength—Perfection."

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR Baking Powder.

ABSOLUTELY THE BEST.

All the ingredients used in making this powder are published on every label. The purity of the ingredients and the scientific accuracy with which they are combined render Cleveland's superior in strength and efficiency to any other baking powder.

Food raised with this powder does not dry up, as when made with baking powder containing ammonia, but keeps moist and sweet, and is palatable and wholesome.

Happy Hoosiers.

Wm. Timmons, Postmaster of Idaville, Ind., writes: "Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feeling arising from Kidney and Liver trouble." John Leslie, farmer and stockman, of same place, says: "Find Electric Bitters to be the best Kidney and Liver medicine, made me feel like a new man." J. W. Gardner, hardware merchant, same town says: Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't care whether he lives or dies; he found new strength, good appetite and felt just like he had a new lease on life. A Kansas City street car conductor has found an easy way to beat the bell punch. He goes off to some secluded spot at night, notes the number indicated by the register, pulls the machine until it has counted off the entire 10,000 and begun at one again, after which he rings till the register indicates 100 less than when he began and stops. He is then in a position to ring fares honestly all next day and be $5 ahead of the company at night.

The Wonderful Tower.

The highest structure in the world is Eiffel Tower, at Paris, 1,000 feet high. But the great discovery of Dr. Franklin Miles is certain to tower far above it in promoting human happiness and health. This wonderful nerve medicine builds up worn out systems, cures fits, sparms, headache, nervous prostration, dizziness, sleeplessness, monthly pains, sexual troubles, etc. Mrs. John R. Miller, of Valparaiso, Ind., and J. D. Taylor, of Logansport, Ind., gained 20 pounds a month while taking it. Finely illustrated treatise on "Nervous Diseases," and a sample bottle of the Restorative Nervine, free at Charles H. Buss's.

Long after the invention of pins in the fourteenth century, the maker was allowed to sell them in open shop only on the 1st and 2d of January. It was then that the court ladies and city dames flocked to the depots to buy them, having been first provided with pin money by their husbands. When the pins became cheap and common, the ladies spent their allowances on other fancies, but the term pin money remained in vogue.

Pimples on The Face cured. Sulphur Bitters will cure the worst case of skin disease; from a common pimple on the face to that awful disease scrofula, it is the best medicine to use in all cases of such stubborn and deep-seated disease. Do not delay; use Sulphur Bitters and drive the humor from your blood.

Gentleman (at ball)—"The weather is lovely."—Lady—"Ach! we talked about that during the last dance." Gentleman—"Quite true, fraulein; indeed, I have another subject in my mind, but intend to reserve it for the quadrille, as it is somewhat too long and important to be dissipated during the waltz.

Ask Your Friends About It.

Your distressing cough can be cured. We know it because Kemp's Balsam within the past few years has cured so many coughs and colds in this community. Its remarkable sale has been won entirely by its genuine merit. Ask some friend who has used it what he thinks of Kemp's Balsam. There is no medicine so pure, none so effective. Large bottles 50c. and $1.00 at all druggists. Sample bottle free.

A shepherd dog fell into a dry well in Oglethorpe county, Georgia. A young man went to the canine's rescue, and as soon as the animal heard his voice, went into raptures of delight. The man procured a rope long enough to reach the bottom of the well, and lowering it was surprised to see the dog grasp the end firm in his mouth and hold on until he was drawn to the top. The dog had received no serious injuries, and, being given a hearty meal, was as frisky as ever.

You Take No Risk

In buying Hood's Sarsaparilla, for it is everywhere recognized as the standard building-up medicine and blood purifier. It has won its way to the front by its own intrinsic merit, and has the largest sale of any preparation of its kind. Any honest druggist will confirm this statement. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to buy anything else instead. Be sure to get Hood's.

A man living near Kingston, Ga., has found a most wonderful stone. While plowing on a sandbar in the Etowah River he saw something shining with the most brilliant of lights just to one side of him. He stopped his plow and went to pick it up. It was a clear, white stone the size of an egg, reflecting in one way all the colors of the rainbow. Turning it over the colors took on the character of a spirit level, following each other up through the centre of the rock till all were gathered in one end. The owner has been offered $1000 for it, but refused it. It emits a perfectly white light in the dark.

With a feeble appetite and imperfect digestion, it is impossible for the body to secure the requisite amount of nourishment. Ayer's Sarsaparilla not only stimulates the desire for food, but aids the assimilative organs in the formation of good blood and sound tissue.

WILL PROMOTE PEACE IN THE FAMILY.

The refusal of Mayor Johnson to allow his name to be brought forward in the caucuses as a candidate for the State Senate will, we think, have a good effect on the Republican party in this city. He was urged to be the standard-bearer of the Young Republicans and if he had consented to accept the honor he would have received the enthusiastic support of that wing of the party. He however declined it knowing that by doing so Capt. E. F. Wyer, the leader of the Old Republicans, would be morally certain of receiving the nomination because there would be no one to oppose him with any effect.

Now, the JOURNAL thinks Mayor Johnson is entitled to a good deal of credit for making this personal sacrifice for the good of the Republican party—to bring about harmony in its ranks, and peace and good will all along the line. Factions have been fighting each other for more than 10 years and it looks as though it had been left for Mayor Johnson, who was but a stripling when the war began, to heal up the breach and bring the antagonists together once more on a common and harmonious basis.

Not only will Mayor Johnson's refusal to stand as a candidate for Senator go far towards restoring harmony between the Old and Young Republicans, thus placing the opposition to the Woburn Democracy on a sound war footing, but his having done so for the express purpose of accomplishing this very end will prove the best thing Mayor Johnson ever did for himself in a political way, providing he has any political ambitions to be gratified later on. It is not likely he thought of the matter when refusing to yield to the solicitations of his friends to allow his name to be used for the Senatorial nomination but when, in the interests of party harmony, he refused thus to yield he laid a foundation for future political promotion more solid and firm than he could possibly have done had he set himself deliberately at work for the purpose. He will stand before both factions as a peace-maker, and that means that when the party want a man to carry their colors and share their honors just as naturally as anything can be they will turn their eyes towards him and ask him to step to the front. In other words, there is a successful political future for Mr. Johnson (providing he has any ambition in that direction) which will be partly due to the gratitude of the Republicans for his part in healing up the troubles and putting a stop to the family quarrel that has raged with such intense bitterness for so many years in their ranks.

MAINE DID NOBLY.

Last Monday Maine held her State election for the choice of Governor, Congressmen, a Legislature, County Officers, etc., and the Republicans won the victory by 18,000 plurality! Gov. Burleigh, the four Congressmen—Reed (1st Dist.), Dingley (2d), Milliken (3d), and Boutelle (4th), were all re-elected by increased majorities; the Legislature will be overwhelmingly Republican; and Republican officers were chosen in about every county.

The chief interest of the contest had its centre in the First Congressional District, Reed's. It was not confined to Maine or New England but was National. Reed is the Republican leader of the country; his course as Speaker has elevated him to the most exalted seat in the Republican synagogue; this same course has also made the Democratic party his most bitter political foes. They would rather Reed had been beaten last Monday than to have gained any number of Congressmen elsewhere. They were determined to down him and to that end they poured into York and Cumberland counties barrels of campaign lucre. But it didn't do any earthly good.

The result of the poll was a surprise of stupendous proportions to everybody. The Democracy expected to snow Reed under; his most sanguine friends didn't think he would get over about 1,000 plurality; and probably Reed himself would have been glad to have been assured of that figure. But how did it come out?

REED'S PLURALITY WAS ABOUT 5,000!

If that wasn't an endorsement of Speaker Reed and his brilliant party leadership in the House and country it would be hard to define the meaning of the word.

CONGRESSIONAL.

"The political pot is boiling" with great fury in this District. The fighting just now is being carried on mainly between Capt. Fox of Cambridge and Mr. Burns of Somerville.

Burns's candidacy is opposed by the War Veterans, and is not promoted very much by being championed by the Somerville Journal, which paper some wicked Republicans have classed among the political invertebrates. The Vets say Burns was guilty of committing official acts while Mayor of Somerville that makes it impossible for him to secure the support of "the boys," and without that his canvass must inevitably slump through.

Fox, although a good soldier, somehow lacks the popularity to make him the winner of the stakes. There seems to be no enthusiasm for him in the District. Still he got some of the Somerville delegates last Tuesday night.

Tower of Lexington denies being a candidate and lately said in a newspaper interview that he would not be one under any circumstances.

General Banks wrote a letter a few days since in which he said he would be entirely satisfied with whatever disposition his friends might make of him and his candidacy, and the old General no doubt meant it. It would not be at all surprising if he should step in and pluck the persimmon.

Mayor E. F. Johnson of this city will be supported in the convention by the Woburn delegation and probably by some members of other delegations. It remains to be seen how much strength he has in the District.

Other gentlemen have been "mentioned," but the above constitute a full list of the prominent candidates in the field for Gen. Banks's old shoes.

CAPT. E. F. WYER FOR SENATOR.

Assurances have been repeatedly given of late by prominent members of the Republican party in other sections of this Senatorial District to the effect that if Woburn would send delegates to the convention in favor of Capt. E. F. Wyer the outside towns would turn to and nominate him without any trouble.

On the strength of this, and because he deserved it, the Republican caucuses last Wednesday evening chose a solid delegation for him, and that unquestionably settles the matter in the Captain's favor and insures his election to the State Senate next November.

Woburn Republicans will be very well satisfied with the arrangement, and the District will secure an able and faithful representative in the upper branch of the General Court. If there is a man in Woburn whose past services to the party entitle him to consideration and a share of public honors it is Capt. Wyer.

Capt. Wyer will represent the Fifth Senatorial with credit to himself and his constituents. He is a well informed gentleman; has sound common sense in ample measure; is a good speaker and debater; and he will attend strictly and intelligently to the discharge of the duties which he will be sent to the Senate to perform.

Capt. Wyer's nomination and election may be set down as a moral certainty.

"THE SITUATION DIFFERS."

The Woburn JOURNAL rises to indorse the Attorney-General and joins its support with some telling references to the events of a year ago. There is certainly advantages in possession. Says the Woburn paper:—(Here follows what the JOURNAL said about the matter on Aug. 15.)

But the situation differs from that which existed a year ago in that the contest is now being carried into the caucuses, and Albert E. Pillsbury is making a good showing down East. Some dozen towns and cities have elected delegates known to favor his nomination.—Springfield Republican.

Possibly; but the proof of the pudding is eating it. It is always easier to tell who is Governor after election than it is before it, and when the ballots for Attorney-General come to be counted at the convention the Republican may find itself surprised.

One thing is certain and that is that Attorney-General Waterman is in the fight "for keeps," and from all accounts Esquire Pillsbury will have to prosecute his canvass more vigorously and successfully than he has of late or he will get left worse than he was last year.

AN ENDORSEMENT.

The grand Republican victory in Maine last Monday was the strongest kind of an endorsement not only of Congressman Reed's course as Speaker of the House but of the Tariff and Election bills and of the Republican policy generally. The magnificent ovation given to Speaker Reed in Boston last week told the same kind of a story.

The present Republican Congress have done more to promote the welfare of the country than has been accomplished by the Democratic party since Jackson left the stage of action.

Business people appreciate the good works of the Republicans and if the Presidential election was to be held tomorrow "Tom" Reed, or whoever the Republican candidate might be, would make a clean sweep of nearly every Northern State. It is said that hundreds of business Democrats voted for Reed last Monday because they like the way he handles the obstructionists in the House, and also because they approve of the Republican Tariff bill.

Yes, Maine endorsed the Republican policy that is giving all kinds of business such a boom in this country right up to the handle last Monday. Let Maine alone for that every time!

THE DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE.

If he will consent to stand hardly anyone doubts but that the Democracy will nominate Mr. James Skinner to run against Capt. E. F. Wyer for the Senate from this District this fall. He is the only member of the party who, we think, could come within a gunshot of getting votes enough to elect him, and of course he would naturally lack 600 or 700 of enough for that purpose.

But Mr. Skinner is an intelligent and high-minded gentleman and the only thing the Democracy will think of doing, if they would act in any way wise, will be to renominate him.

This advice is entirely disinterested because we know there isn't a Democrat in the District who can beat Capt. Wyer, or come anywhere near it.

FOR JOHNSON.

The Congressional delegates chosen last Wednesday evening at the Republican caucus in this city will cast a solid vote for their townsman, Hon. Edward F. Johnson, at the convention to be held on the 18th instant to choose a successor to Congressman Banks.

This goes to show that what the JOURNAL says in an editorial in its present issue written before the caucusses were held is a pretty close call for the bullseye. Just what we say in that article would be sure to follow Mr. Johnson's action on the Senator question has already begun to prove true.

CITIZENS MOVEMENT.

It has transpired within a day or two that prominent citizens who are members of both political parties but not conspicuous in either have been giving considerable attention to the organization of a citizens movement for the approaching charter election in this city. It is in the interest of a continuance of the good local government which the city has enjoyed under Mayor Johnson's administration.

In the event that reasonable success crowns the efforts of these gentlemen it is not improbable that Alderman Julius F. Ramsdell will be selected for the office of Mayor.

SENATORIAL CONVENTION.

The Republican Committee for the 5th Middlesex Senatorial District have designated Ayer and Oct. 1 as the place and time for holding the next Senatorial Convention.

COUNTY CONVENTION.

The Middlesex Republican County Convention has been called to meet at Lowell on October 2.

☞ It respectfully declines to vouch for the truth of the story but the JOURNAL was told the other day by a man of acknowledged veracity that Mr. Elmore A. Pierce, the accomplished journalist and Associated Press reporter of this city, will be a candidate for Representative to the Legislature this fall. Well, the Republicans might go further and fare worse. If elected Mr. Pierce would represent the District very creditably indeed, and as he is one of the "Young Republicans" and a prime favorite with that section of the party why would it not be a good plan for all hands to take hold and give him a boost?

☞ If Mr. Mark C. Felch should yield to the solicitations of his friends and enter the lists again this fall for a seat in the Massachusetts House he will probably win the race. Notwithstanding the 11th hour had struck when he went in last year he came so near capturing the Democratic nomination that it made the opposition crowd shake in their boots. Felch has character, pluck and money, and if he goes in for the prize in dead earnest he will cause a rattling among Democratic dry bones. It looks now as though the Moreland faction would get snowed under in their State and city political enterprises this fall.

☞ Hon. B. F. Whittemore of this city is, so we hear, as enthusiastically in favor of Ex-Mayor Fox for Congress this year as he was for General Banks last. He will always be found supporting an old soldier for office when he has a chance, and that is one among the many things why people like him so well.

☞ It is expected that the Republicans of this (5th) District will hold their convention to nominate a candidate for Congress in Boston on the 18th of this month. We suspect the question of time and place was settled yesterday evening.

☞ We hereby return thanks to Hon. R. R. Wade, Chief of the Massachusetts District Police, for valuable public documents.

— The annual reunion of the gallant old 39th. Mass. will be held in this city on Sept. 24. A municipal appropriation was made to defray the expenses of it. It will be a notable occasion.

— Mr. Henry B. Wood is an employee in the office of the Chief Engineer of the Sewer Department of the Boston City Government where he has done acceptable service for several years past.

— That of fair Editress Curran is the only case in the State of a lady successfully conducting a Democratic weekly newspaper. She does it very handsomely considering the politics of her journal.

— The Woburn Fanciers Club held a meeting in Dow Block last Tuesday evening to attend which Sec'y M. W. True sent the JOURNAL a ticket. The Club are making preparations for a big show here next January.

— There was a powerful rain on Tuesday night and Wednesday. It possessed some of the characteristics of the Line Gale but we should not want to say positively that it was the Autumnal Equinox for 1890.

— Mr. John M. Wallace, an esteemed citizen of Woburn, was united in marriage with Miss May Casterson of this city, last Wednesday. Bride and groom will please accept the congratulations of the JOURNAL.

— By reference to our business columns it will be seen that Mrs. Leach advertises to sell off her household furniture at 67 Prospect street. Good bargains in good kitchen and other wares will be given in this sale.

— At the 3d annual meeting of the Society of California Pioneers held in Boston last Wednesday Hon. B. F. Whittemore was elected a member of the Board of Directors. He is a wide awake and enthusiastic old '49er.

— Harry Brown tells us that the Burdett Business College has placed him in two first class positions. The first was with the celebrated Rawson Seed Firm which he left later to accept his present responsible situation offered him by the College.

— Miss Vic Maxwell of No. Winchester is the most accomplished equestrienne that rides through our streets. She has an elegant figure and the supple grace with which she sits her nervy nag very few young ladies are able to match and none to surpass.

— At 7 o'clock next Sunday evening Rev. Dr. March, the pastor, will give a lecture in the vestry of the Congregational church on "Scenes in the Life of Paul," the same to be illustrated by stereopticon views. It will, no doubt, be a very interesting lecture.

— The card of Miss A. Josephine Lang may be found in another column of this paper. The large increase in the number of pupils which Miss Lang has from year to year bears sufficient testimony of the success of this accomplished teacher of the Pianoforte.

— Trips on the East Mid'x St. R'y from Malden to the Beach have been reduced by Supt. Wentworth to these: at 10 a. m.; 1, 2, 3, 4 p. m. Trips to Cliftondale to these: at 10.30 a. m.; 1.30, 3.30, 5.30 p. m. The Beach line will be withdrawn in 2 or 3 weeks.

— On Thursday, at 2 o'clock p. m. Auctioneer Gregory will sell the household furniture belonging to Anton Hanson, No. 10 Allen street. The house has been sold to Charles D. Onion of Dedham formerly of Woburn. Mr. Hanson leaves for Europe on Sept. 20.

— Mr. Harry F. Parker, clerk for the Boston & Maine Railroad Co., started last Monday morning on a two weeks vacation visit to his grandmother at St. Johnsbury, Vermont, and afterwards to return to Nashua, N. H., and visit with old schoolmates and friends in that locality.

— Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Littlefield and daughter have returned from a trip through New York and New Jersey which they enjoyed very much. Of course the novel sights in N. Y. City were duly attended to among other things. They were gone about three weeks.

— The JOURNAL modestly flatters itself on being humbly instrumental in contributing a widow's mite at least towards bringing about a better state of feelings between the Old and Young Republicans of this city and settling the Senator question in a manner so satisfactory to everybody, except the Democracy.

— A good many Democrats are talking of Mr. R. J. W. Phinney for our next Mayor. Against his wishes he developed considerable strength in the caucus last year, but whether he would take the nomination or not next December the JOURNAL is unable to say. Phinney has a level business head and would make a good Mayor.

— Miss Alice O'Brien is an accomplished pianist and a very successful teacher on that instrument. She has had the advantange of the most thorough training by the best masters and her pupils take as high rank in musical circles as those of any other instructor. Miss O'Brien has a card in the JOURNAL this week to which we call attention.

— The JOURNAL Book and Job office is complete in all its appointments and has the reputation of turning out as fine work and as much of it as any printing establishment in Middlesex county. It is fully supplied with presses, all the latest styles of type, stock and men to use them, and gentlemen, your work is respectfully solicited. —tf.

— Visitors to Boston this month should see the collection of unique pieces of furniture from all parts of the world, on exhibition at Paine's Furniture Warerooms 48 Canal street, Boston, opposite the Boston & Maine Depot. You can buy there this week the outfit for an East Indian Bungalow, an Esquimaux Hut, or a Fifth Avenue mansion.

— A careful canvass develops the fact that more than half of our 13,440 population are glad that City Treasurer Buck is squarely on his pegs once more. He had a close call, but happily for "all hands and the cook" he pulled through, and we see no reason why he may not remain with us a good many years if he behaves himself properly.

— If Congressman Banks should conclude to let Woburn select Postmaster Reade's successor next February by ballot, as some people hope he will and as several Congressmen have done before him, it would not be at all surprising if Mr. Reade should be chosen to succeed himself. Stranger things than that have happened in this ever-changing world of ours.

— Leeds's grand Merrimac River excursion comes off to-morrow and if the weather is fine a great many people will take advantage of it for the enjoyment of one of the nicest all-day trips that can be found anywhere. Tickets can be had at Leeds's drugstore. For $1.50 a steam car ride, a sail down the Merrimac, a few hours on the Beach, and a right down good time can be purchased.

— David F. Scanlan & Co., harness makers at No. Woburn, have a card in this paper to which we call especial attention. They are a firm of ambitious young men who understand the business thoroughly, make firstclass goods, are prompt, and can be relied on for honest work at fair prices. They have gone into business for a permanent thing, and the public can rely on getting the best of goods and work at bottom prices.

— Mr. William A. Montgomery, son of Rev. Hugh Montgomery, pastor of the M. E. church in this city and a terror to the rumsellers, has accepted a professorship in the Bishop Scott Academy at Portland, Ore., and will soon enter on the discharge of the duties of that honorable and responsible position. Young Montgomery is a recent graduate of Middletown College, Connecticut, and is regarded as a very talented and promising chip of the old block.

— The Prohibition party in this city have selected per caucus the following named gentlemen for delegates to the State and other Prohibitory conventions this year: Charles W. Dorr, J. Howard Nason, William Redford and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Somes C. Hilton, Quincy R. Ward, Asa Turner, John K. Murdock, Mr. and Mrs. William P. Symonds, Dr. B. R. Harmon, Edward C. Leathe, Ben. T. H. Porter, Theodore C. Boutelle, J. P. Bailey.

— Capt. Horace N. Conn is one of the "mentioned" for Representative for the Legislature. And as we understand it, there is something more in it than mere "mention"—he has considerable good backing for the nomination, so his friends say. Going to the Legislature seems to "run in the family" of Conn. Each of the several last past generations of them has sent one or more members to the General Court. Nor has the other side of Captain Horace's family tree been any less distinguished for office-holding, for many generations of his maternal ancestry have sent its member or members to the Massachusetts Legislature. There seems to be good reason, then, why Capt. Conn should be taken up and elected a Representative besides the fact of his fitness for the honorable position.

— It is currently reported that a certain clever Woburn reporter for a Boston daily seriously contemplates dropping into poultry. He bought a very fine second-hand Plymouth Rock rooster at an auction the other day and hopes before Christmas to procure a suitable hen to go with him. As soon as the pair get into good working order (if ever) our reporter expects to make considerable money from them. Experts say he has a fine lip for the poultry business.

— Particular attention is called to the advertisement in this paper of the "3 Popular, $11.00, Trips" up the Hudson to be personally conducted by Hartshorn & Cheney, the well known excursion specialists at 50 Bromfield street, Boston. These trips are the cheapest ever advertised, and if there is anything more enchanting than a sail up the Hudson we shouldn't know where to go to find it. Be sure and send for full descriptive circulars to the above address.

— Councilman E. E. Thompson and Mrs. Thompson started last Monday, as per programme, for St. Paul, Minn., where and near where they expect to visit friends during the next three or four weeks. They will look over the ground for the Columbus Worlds Fair in 1892, go into outlaying parts of Minnesota and other sections of Uncle Sam's big farm perhaps, and try to enjoy life all the time. Our good friends went out there for a nice time, and the JOURNAL hopes they will have it.

— Leonard Thompson, Esq., arrived home last Tuesday from a tour into the most northern of this country's possessions in good health and firstrate spirits. As a member of a Raymond excursion party he visited Washington, Alaska, Vancouvers Land, and other semi-polar regions of the United States and British America, in all of which he was deeply interested. His traveling companions were cultivated and agreeable Eastern people in whose company two months and more was pleasantly spent. Mr. Thompson stored up a great fund of information concerning the sections visited, descriptions of which by him it is entertaining to listen to.

— Mr. James R. Wood, who has a fine farm and homestead on Salem street in this city and enjoys living on it, is the senior member of the firm of Boston detectives of Wood & Ham, and last Monday he brought to a head a neat job of professional work in the arrest of Jerome A. Brown at Salem who has been 20 years in the employ of the B. & M. RR. Co., and several years passenger conductor on the line between Salem and Lowell, for embezzlement of money and tickets from the Company estimated to amount to $1,000. Brown confessed the whole business after his arrest. He was a shrewd embezzler but Wood carried too many guns for him, and after several months hard work on him he was caught.

— Last Saturday Warren C. Perrigo was sentenced in the Woburn District Court to pay a fine of $50 and be confined 4 months in the House of Correction for maintaining a liquor nuisance. Perrigo conducted the defense pro se but contrary to the old "saw" had no "fool for a client." From all accounts the trial quite closely resembled a circus of mammoth proportions and was nuts for a large and appreciative audience. Perrigo is a dabster at practicing law and common rumor had it that he just more than wound Lawyer Curran right round his little finger on knotty points and figuratively speaking swept the floor with him. It was stated that he fared worse later in the day at the hands of City Clerk Moreland with nothing figurative about it. Perrigo appealed from the decision of Judge Converse and recognized in the sum of $400 for his appearance at the Oct. T. of the Superior Court for this county and duly prosecute his appeal.

— Mr. James Skinner got through with settling up the co-partnership business of James Skinner & Co. and began making leather at the old stand some little time ago. He is already—after a shutdown of several months—turning out a larger product than the old concern did, putting in 125 hides daily where 100 was about the former average, and employing more workmen. When he gets all the departments to running full handed, as will soon be the case, Mr. Skinner contemplates doing a considerable larger business than the old firm did when going at its best paces, and this we are all glad to know. Why? Because it means more work, more men to do it, more money put into circulation every week or month, more to do, more for doing it, and more prosperity all around the board. When every leather factory in Woburn is in successful operation she asks no odds of the best of them on any score. Mr. Skinner having started in again for a larger business and more ducats than ever before it would be cheering to see others follow his example and fill their establishments with men and leather and prosperity once again.

— Early last Saturday morning Mr. James E. Barrell died quite suddenly at the Almshouse in this city of which he had been an inmate for some time. The case of the deceased was a sad one. He was born in Scituate and was a few months over 71 years old at the time of his death. He was once a man of good official and social standing and at one period of his life was reputed to be worth $60,000. In 1848 he settled in Boston and was in the clothing trade on Commercial street several years. In 1856 he was Assistant Clerk of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, and in 1864 he was appointed City Marshal of Chelsea, which office he held some 4 years, and gave general satisfaction. His was a genial nature. He was a kind man and everybody liked him. But he became, step by step, a slave to the enemy whose yearly victims are counted by the hundreds of thousands. While he was yet prosperous and occupying responsible official posts this same enemy was gradually riveting shackles on the soul and body of his subject, and last Saturday the poor man died in the Woburn almshouse. His later life and death was a repetition of the same old, sorrowful story, and still there are human beings who will stand behind the bar and deal out death and desolation to all who come and have the money to pay day and night and all the time. It seems strange that anybody will do so, and yet we see it every day.

— Staff Officer Charles Wheeler, who is in command of the Woburn Corps of the Salvation Army, and his wife complain of the mean and outrageous treatment which they have been subjected to from the hoodlum element of society during their evening parades and open-air devotions for some weeks past, from which they are unable to secure protection or get redress for the wrongs and insults done them. Some members of the Police have been specially instructed by Chief McIntosh to guard these worthy people during their marches through the streets and in their religious ceremonies on the Common, and for a time after his first orders were given out no trouble was experienced; but of late it has returned and Officer Wheeler, his wife and soldiers have been roughly and indecently treated. Officer Wheeler says Chief McIntosh received him and his petition for protection most kindly and courteously; that he cheerfully promised to see that they were not meddled with any more by the hoodlums (old and young), and for some time they got along firstrate. The whole Corps feel very friendly towards the Chief, but by some of his subordinates they claim to have been ill-used. Now, these people not only have a legal right to parade on the streets (under proper restrictions), and pray and sing on the common openings of the city, but they are honest and sincere in their labors to save sinners, and furthermore they drag from moral slums and gutters many miserable creatures who, but for their humane and Christian efforts, would sink into poor, dark, unhonored graves. It is acknowledged by the most eminent divines in this country and England that the Salvation Army have achieved wonderful things in the conversion of sinners, in rescuing the inebriate, in saving the wretched and outcast from despair and death, and that as an instrument for accomplishing good for their fellow-mortals they deserve encouragement and police protection. We should hope that Staff Officer Wheeler will have no further cause for complaint of public ill-treatment while he remains here.

Penny Wise But Pound Foolish.

Once a merchant, who had an eye single to great profits and regarded not the wants of his patrons, undertook to induce a customer to take some of Dusenbury's soap. "What you say may be all true," said the customer, "but my wife does not want that soap, and as you have not got Brussels soap I'll step in next door and get it," which he did. And ever after he traded at the place where could be found the economical Brussels soap and other desirable household articles.

City Government.

COMMON COUNCIL.

A regular meeting of the Common Council was held last Friday evening. A petition was received from Alvah Buckman and others for a crossing at the corner of Prospect street and Montvale Ave. The president appointed Eames of 6, Beggs of 3 and Grant of 3 the committee on the part of the Council to purchase a lot for the new Armory. The Finance Committee reported an order authorizing the Treasurer to hire $14,000 for the building of the new Highland school. Concurred in various matters with the Aldermen, and orders were passed to place a fire alarm box at Walnut Hill, appropriating $6000 for the new conduit to the reservoir, and granting $4 State aid to Owen McCaffray. Adjourned.

ALDERMEN.

A special meeting of the Aldermen was held last Monday evening, all the members being present, including the new member from Ward 5, Alderman Kendall.

The meeting was called especially to take action on the appropriation for the new water main to the reservoir, and the order authorizing the Treasurer to hire $6000 for that purpose, as passed by the other branch, was concurred in, as was other matters.

E. F. Blank was granted a druggists' liquor license without reference.

Michael Dennahay applied for State aid.

Owen McCaffray was recommended for $4 State aid.

The Caucuses.

The Republicans of this city held caucuses last Wednesday evening to choose delegates to the several conventions. The meetings were well attended and there was harmony all along the line. The Congressional delegation were chosen with that view and are all solid for Mayor E. F. Johnson. Likewise, the Senatorial delegates were selected to support Capt. E. F. Wyer and they will be solid for him in the convention. The following are the delegates:

State, John M. Harlow, John R. Carter, Edwin F. Wyer, H. Eustis Smith, Warren B. Adams, B. F. Whittemore, Edward F. Johnson, Frank M. Pushee.

Senatorial, Elisha F. Hayward, J. L. Pinkham, William T. Grammar, William R. Putnam, Frank W. Legg, Luke W. Fowle, George F. Hosmer, Phineas G. Hanson.

Marion, Frank A. Partridge, Elphaz Prior, Elmore A. Pierce, Philip K. Richardson, Nathaniel S. Watson, M. W. True, R. F. Poole, Arthur U. Dickson, S. A. Thompson, W. F. Greenough, Edward Montgomery, F. B. K. Marter, Daniel E. Dyer, Charles F. Spear, David H. Eaton, F. S. Bassett, Charles M. Sirout, Albert M. Colby, W. P. Cutler.

A Glutted Market.

The market for old newspapers in Boston is feeling the effect of the attempt of one of the Boston papers to work up a circulation. Every junk store is glutted with thousands of copies, and the price of old newspapers has dropped more than 50 per cent.

Rev. Franklin Keyes's Will.

The last will and three codicils thereto of the late Franklin Keyes have been presented for probate. The testator gives to his nephew, John S. Wheeler of Woburn, a legacy of $2,000 in money, his shop tools and fixtures, and devises to him thee parcels of land known as the shop lot, the stable lot, and the Frog Hole lot. To his faithful housekeeper, Mrs. Sarah E. Cotton, is given his homestead on Scott street and all his plate, pictures, ornaments, books, and household furniture, also 40 shares of the capital stock of the First National Bank in Woburn, Mass., and his pew in the First Congregational meeting-house.

To the City of Woburn is given the sum of $500 to be held in trust, the income to be expended under the direction of the Cemetery Commissioners in keeping in repair perpetually his lot in the Woburn cemetery and the granite and marble thereon, and keeping said lot in good order and condition, the grass to be mowed as often as is necessary, and a cordicil gives the lot to the City of Woburn "upon the perpetual trust to care for the same as provided in my will, but without power to alienate said lot or to permit any person to be interred therein after I shall have been laid there."

All the residue of the estate, real and personal, is given "to the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church incorporated by the Legislature of the State of New York to be used and expended in the interest of and for the furtherance and advancement of foreign missions only."

John S. Wheeler of Woburn, the testator's nephew, is named as sole executor and is exempt from giving sureties. The will is dated March 3d 1887, and the last codicil is dated Nov. 12, 1889.

The life of Gov. Goodell of N. H., was saved by the use of Melvin's Rheumatic Remedy.

We want 300 members will you not be one?

Saturday evening meeting at 8 o'clock for men.

We are making our plans for fall and winter work and shall have them before the public by Oct. 1.

Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock the singular business meeting of the Directors. It will be a very important meeting.

Sunday afternoon meeting 4 o'clock. This meeting is more and more interesting lately. Every man ought to be present. Come next Sunday sure.

The Boys Committee of Association and Auxiliary met last Thursday evening and laid out work for the boys of the city. Reports of which will be published later.

Women's Auxiliary meeting the last Tuesday of the month. Let every lady who reads this take out her note book and put it down as an "engagement with the young men," Sept. 30.

Attractive HOMES!

How to make home attractive is an art that the ladies well understand.

We can suggest however, that a pair or two of Chenille Portieres add vastly to the looks of a room.

Yes, but we can't afford them just now, perhaps you say.

Wait until you hear the price.

New ones just in, only $4.95 a pair.

They are beauties too.

East Middlesex Horse Car Fares.

There is much feeling among the patrons of the East Middlesex horse railroad from Woburn to Malden in relation to the exhorbitant fares. At present the fares are scheduled as follows: Woburn to Stoneham, 3 miles, eight cents; Woburn to Melrose Highlands, 6 miles, thirteen cents; Woburn to Malden, 8 miles, eighteen cents; Stoneham to Melrose Highlands, 3 miles, five cents.

It seems to me, after carefully considering the matter, that the present rates are enormously high, and show a genuine New England, conservative, grasping basis of management. Here are Woburn's and Stoneham's citizens paying 75 per cent more for transportation over the same distance than their Melrose brethren pay and, as the travel between these two points is largely of a commercial nature, the poor man and woman, workers in the vineyard, are taxed to support the road and at a higher rate than is charged by any other horse railroad in this country. The managers will naturally say they know how much it costs to run their road, and that the present rates are scarce enough to keep the line open the season round. Have they ever tried the popular fare scheme? Have they ever tried to cater to the masses and thus attempt to build up business? Do they ever think that prospectors for homes take the matter of horse car fares into consideration before they locate? Possibly they do, but the present rates indicate that they figure on the wrong basis.

It would not be a bad idea if the managers were to consider a new rate and make a trial of it for at least six months. See them adopt a schedule as follows: 100 rides between Woburn and Melrose, $10, and all way fares between Woburn, Stoneham, Melrose and Malden, 5 cents. This is a reasonable rate as compared with the present, and even these seem exorbitant in contrast with other lines. One can ride from Oak Sq. to City Point for 5 cents, or from any Northern and Eastern station to the Reservoir for the same amount, the distance being on an average of about 8 miles.

Then too comes the idea that if a low rate of fares were established the social public would become long distance patrons, where now they only ride between points. Hundreds of families, too poor to hire a horse and carriage, would soon get into the habit on summer evenings of taking an outing and refresh their bodies and minds with the beauties of nature, the fresh air of the uplands, for no suburban road is more varied with picturesque scenery than is noticeable all along the East Middlesex route from Woburn to Malden.

That there will be a united effort on the part of the road's patrons to induce the Company to lower their fares is certain, and for the benefit of that public, as well as the Corporation which will be legislatured into compliance with the demands if they do not accede to the wants of their patrons, these lines are written most dispassionately.

F. T. ROBINSON.

"John," said a wife to her husband, "what a goose you are. I really believe you cannot tell a yard of gingham from a cargo of brick. Here you have brought me ten cakes of that nasty, yellow, rosin soap when I told you to be sure and bring Brussels. Don't you believe in economy?"

Mayor Johnson For Congress.

A young man who has already made his mark in city politics is somewhat likely to be brought into the fifth district convention as a candidate for Congress. This is Mayor E. F. Johnson. He is a young man but has an old head. He has great tact and judgment in the selection of men. He is a descendant of one of the oldest families in the valley, and he has always had ex-Congressman Hayden's aid and support. When the Woburn men asked Hayden to come back from Congress and run for Mayor so that they might have the city administered as they would wish, he said, "No; you could not get a better man than Johnson."

So it proved, and although Woburn's Democratic majority is 400 to 500, Johnson has been elected and re-elected. He is a clever lawyer and conversant with the needs of the district.—Woburn Corr. Boston Record.

Every one who buys cotton cloth will be attracted to the advertisement in this issue with the heading "The Continental Army." To buy standard brands of cottons at these prices will be an unexpected privilege to many a New England housekeeper. Read the advertisement and remember the firm's name. It is Hollander, Bradshaw & Folsom, 615 Washington Street, Boston.

W. M. B. A.

The Woburn Mutual Benefit Association starts off auspiciously, several members being taken in at each meeting.

This organization is destined to be a very popular one, men and women being admitted between the ages of 18 and 50 years, and there is no medical examination.

The benefit money will be paid within 24 hours after death of the insured member, thereby carrying relief at a time when in many cases it is most needed.

The amount paid will be one dollar for each surviving member.—X.

The man who yet votes for General Jackson never heard of Brussels soap.

Rapid Transit in Cities.

The growth of rapid transit facilities from 1880 to 1889, inclusive, in cities having over 50,000 inhabitants, has been great. In this period, the increase of street railway mileage, in the length of lines operated, has been from 1690 miles to 3151 miles, or an increase of 86 1-2 per cent. The greatest increase has been in the cities of Chicago and Boston. At the present time, the city of Philadelphia has the greatest mileage, followed in their order by the cities of Boston, Chicago, New York, and Brooklyn. It will be seen that in length of line New York ranks fourth, but in considering the length of all tracks including sidings, this city stands first, with 324 miles. The increase in mileage was much the greater in the last three years of the decade than in the seven previous years. Nearly 60 per cent of the increase was in these years. Considering the mileage in connection with the kinds of power employed, and it is noticed that 75 per cent of the total mileage is operated by horse power; 8 per cent by electricity; 8 per cent by cable; and 9 per cent by steam. Boston leads all other cities in the use of electricity as a motive power; Scranton, Pa., Omaha, Neb., and Pittsburgh, Pa., coming next. It is noticed as a peculiarity of Boston and Philadelphia roads, especially of the latter city, that the tracks usually occupy different streets in going to and from a terminus instead of being laid upon the same street.—Boston Journal of Commerce.

The posters for the Agricultural Fair will soon appear.

The schools began Sept. 2. There is no change in the corps of teachers.

Superintendent Rounds and his force of men have been repairing the road in the centre of the town.

Next Tuesday evening Sept. 16, a grand entertainment will be given in the Town Hall for the benefit of the committee on athletic sports for the Agricultural Fair Oct. 1, 1890. Father Locke of Maine will furnish the entertainment. The young men will give a baked bean supper in the upper hall. Entertainment at eight o'clock. Admission 15 cents. Supper tickets 15 cents.

The following is the result of the first week's voting for the most popular farmer in the town, the prize to be presented to the one getting the largest number of votes to be a nice plow. The polls will close at 1 o'clock on the day of the Annual Cattle Show and Fair. A weekly report of the voting will be made to THE WOBURN JOURNAL, the farmer's friend: Charles Woodman, 1; William Walker, 1; J. Simonds, 1; Edward Reed, 2; Walter Skelton, 3; David O'Brien, 111.

VOLTAIC BELT CO., Marshall, Mich.

To Be Free and Candid.

What will be the result of the convention of the 5th Congressional district is now difficult to foretell. The situation as we now see it resolves itself into this. If Gen. Banks is in the field his own city will stand by him. Should he not be a candidate the unquestioned desire of our people points to Chester A. Kingsley of Cambridge. Should Mr. Kingsley utterly refuse to be considered a candidate there can be no question but that our people would prefer the ex-mayor of Somerville to the ex-mayor of Cambridge. So far as the claim made by Mr. Fox's friends that he had a mortgage on the nomination because of his chivalrous conduct two years ago in permitting General Banks to be nominated when he couldn't help himself, that is all nonsense. Captain Fox has no claim which cannot be easily and wisely ignored. To be free and candid we hope somebody else will be nominated. —Waltham Free Press.

Boston Theatres.

The charming emotional actress, Miss Kate Claxton, assisted by Mr. Chas. A. Stevenson and competent company, will begin a week's engagement at the Grand Opera House next Monday night, Sept. 15, in a magnificent spectacular production of the romantic melodrama, "The Sea of Ice." New and elaborate scenery will be used for the presentation and several novel mechanical effects introduced. Miss Kate Claxton enjoys an enviable reputation as an actress and is a prime favorite with the best class of theatre-goers in Boston. No doubt but that her appearance next week at the Grand Opera will be greeted with crowded houses.

"Chipman's Liver Pills

the best in the world. Never gripe or make you sick. They are purely vegetable, and will sure cure your bilious trouble. All who use them speak well of them. Sold by all druggists."

Must Be Aware.

The Republicans of the Fifth Congressional District must be aware that it is a duty they owe to the Republican party to elect a Republican from that district. With their preferences we have nothing to do, but we feel certain that the course to be pursued to bring about this result is to send unpledged delegates, men of position and high character, to the convention. With a body of men thus selected there is no danger of a mistake being made which will be detrimental to a delegation. Whether General Banks shall be renominated, or some one else, should receive careful consideration. Delegates left entirely free to act should be chosen.—Boston Journal.

WINCHESTER.

Miss Edith Currie has been to Newport, R. I.

Rev. Mr. Newton has resumed pastoral and ministerial work in his parish.

The Congregational Sunday School will open next Sunday with considerable ceremony.

Deacon and Mrs. Conant like Cottage City firstrate, and they are good judges of summer resorts.

Mr. Neil Cullen, a popular young man of this town, started from here last Tuesday for Denver, Col.

It would be pretty hard to scare up more enterprising merchants in this part of Massachusetts than C. F. Lunt & Co. are.

Charlie Conant, one of the brightest of Boston newspaper men, now a Washington correspondent, has been looking over his old stamping grounds lately.

The desire to see Hon. J. F. Dwinell a member of the Governor's Council is very general and strong in this town. The office could not fall to the lot of a better man.

The Boston Traveler suggested Hon. A. B. Coffin for a place on the Bench and it could not have named a better man for a high judicial or any other important public position.

Last week Thursday George C. Reynolds of Woburn had one of his feet badly mangled here by getting run over by a market wagon. He was taken to the Mass. Gen. Hospital.

The Star is up to its chin in politics. It has more candidates on hands than a dozen boys can shake sticks at a horse in a month, and my idea is that it is bound to slip up on some of them. What a passion some people have for office!

Our respected townsman Mr. S. C. Small is getting to be quite a dominie. He has done considerable lay preaching at the Unitarian church in recent times and it wouldn't surprise me any if he should don sacerdotal robes one of these days.

Mrs. William Richardson, who lives on Main street, near Cutter's Village, met with a painful accident last Monday. While trying to sharpen a knife it accidentally slipped and cut her knee so badly that three stitches had to be taken in it.

Invitations have been issued for the wedding of Miss Florence Avis, daughter of Mrs. Julia R. Holbrook, and Mr. Joseph E. Gendron. The ceremony will take place on Tuesday evening, the 16th, at the residence of Mrs. Holbrook, Highland Avenue.

The Star went into ecstacies last week over the discovery of peat in Turkey Swamp. Failing to coin phrases sufficiently glowing in which to set forth the great merits of the "find," it printed a long lockum story anent the theme by Noah Webster, and warmly endorsed the old dictionary-maker's ideas. Big thing for Winchester—peat is.

Mr. Abijah Thompson proposes to present to the Congregational Church, free of cost, a manuscript history of the pedigree and individual life of the Winchester First Church, with sketches of the various departments of its organized activity, biographical notices of its pastors, etc. The gift is proffered on the condition that the history, prepared by Rev. Leander Thompson, be put into permanent form.—Star. It would be a good thing for Winchester if she had a few more as public spirited men as Mr. Thompson is. He is always ready to contribute to the public good.

Last Tuesday evening Miss Edith W. Kinsman and Arthur W. Hale of Winchester were united in marriage, at the residence of the bride's father, the late Captain William H. Kinsman. The ceremony was performed by Rev. R. W. Waters of Ipswich and Rev. J. Augustine of Winchester. A reception was held, followed by a dinner. Mr. and Mrs. Hale left at once after the reception, for a short bridal tour, and upon their return to Winchester will reside at No. 7 Central street. Fully 200 invitations were issued, and a large party were present at the wedding ceremony. Mr. Hale is a member of the firm of C. N. Putnam, bankers, No. 17 Congress street, Boston. May their life be long, prosperous and a merry one.

A terrible accident occurred to Joseph DeLong of Winchester last Saturday, which will no doubt cause his death. DeLong is employed by Beggs & Cobb in the yard of the tannery at North Winchester. He attempted to turn a valve with a wrench while standing on a beam where the shafting runs, and lost his balance and fell on to the shafting and running pulleys. The pulleys caught him and broke several of his left ribs and his collar bone, and also bruised his head. DeLong then fell into a vat of boiling hot liquor in what is called the "junk." He was completely submerged and fearfully scalded, so that the skin came off when his clothing was removed. DeLong has a wife and five or six children.

LATER. He died Saturday evening. DeLong had three ribs broken, and the bones forced into his lungs, his collar bone broken, his head badly injured, all from falling on to running pulleys and shafting, besides being horribly scalded by falling into a vat of hot tanning liquor. He was conscious for several hours after the accident.

A Humorous View of Advertising.

In this age the business man who does not advertise is doomed. Every style of advertising pays, but the greatest results are acquired from utilizing the advertising columns of a properly conducted journal.

We never knew of but one case in which advertising did not pay. It occurred in Chicago. A burglar overlooked eighty dollars in a bureau drawer, and the papers so announced. He returned the next night, and not only secured it, but a suit of clothes besides.

The man who doesn't hang out his shingle and advertise dies and leaves no sign. The right kind of eyes for business men is advertise. Puffs in newspapers help many merchants to "raise the wind."

Death and discontinuance of an advertisement is regarded as positive evidence of going out of business.—S., in Texas Sift tings.

Misfortune and poverty bring out the good points of a man—including his elbows.

A railroad in Asia Minor from Scutari to Ismidt is to be extended into India, and will be the grand transdivision line between Europe and Asia. It passes near the tomb of Hannibal. Nicomedia is a way station. It crosses streams on repaired bridges that were built by Justinian, and altogether has a right of way through more ancient history than any other road on earth.

PARABLE OF THE POUNDS

LESSON XI, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 14.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xix, 11-27—Commit Verses, 12-13—Golden Text, Luke xix, 26—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

11. "And as they heard these things, He added and spake a parable, because He was nigh to Jerusalem, and because they thought that the Kingdom of God should immediately appear." Although He had said again and again that He was going to Jerusalem to be crucified and to rise again from the dead (chap. xviii, 3-34; Matt. xvi, 21; xvii, 23), yet they understood not, and thought that now they should see Him proclaim Himself king of Israel and restore the throne of David, or the throne of the Lord, at Jerusalem, on which David and Solomon sat as the representatives of Jehovah (I Chron. xxix, 23). That this was the Kingdom they expected is clearly stated in Luke xxiv, 21; Acts i, 6; and that they had a right to expect this is seen in the Davidic covenant (II Sam. vii, 12-16; I Chron. xvii, 11-14); also in all the prophets (see Isa. ix, 6, 7; Jer. iii, 17), and in the words of Gabriel to Mary (Luke i, 32, 33).

That they had much ground for expecting the Kingdom at that time is seen in the fact that John the Baptist, Jesus himself, the twelve, and the seventy, all preached that the Kingdom was at hand (Matt. iii, 2; iv, 17; x, 7; Luke x, 9). Why then this parable, and why was the Kingdom not then to be established? The Kingdom in the person of the King—Jesus, the son of David—had been at hand and in their midst, but they knew Him not, received Him not, and were now about to kill Him. Therefore He said: "The Kingdom of God is taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matt. xxi, 43). Their rejection of Him as a nation postpones the restoration of the throne of David until His return (Acts iii, 21), and they have lost certain high privileges which will be given to another elect nation, even the church or body of Christ, now being gathered out of all nations (Acts xv, 14; I Pet. ii, 9).

12. "He said, therefore, A certain nobleman went into a far country, to receive for himself a kingdom and to return." He refers to Himself and the Kingdom now postponed, but to be established on this earth at His return. His approaching death he speaks of as a journey into a far country.

13. "And He called his ten servants, and delivered them ten pounds, and said unto them, Occupy till I come." While He is absent He expects His servants to be busy in His affairs, and He gives them something with which to work or do business for Him. In this parable each one receives the same, while in the parallel parable of the talents (Matt. xxv, 15) each receives according to ability. The pound to each may signify the Spirit, which is given to every man to profit withal, while the talents may refer to the special gifts of the Spirit given to each as He (the Spirit) willeth (I Cor. xii, 7, 11).

14. "But His citizens hated Him and sent a message after Him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us." In verse 27 these citizens are called enemies.

15. "And it came to pass, that when He was returned, having received the Kingdom, then He commanded these servants to be called unto Him, to whom He had given the money, that He might know how much every man had gained by trading."

16. "Then came the first, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds."

17. "And He said unto him, Well, thou good servant; because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities." All that is intrusted to us to do here in this present time is but a very little compared with our service in the Kingdom when it shall come; and it is not success that He commends, but faithfulness.

18. "And the second came, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds." Each one shall give account of himself. Every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor (I Cor. iii, 8).

19. "And He said likewise to him, Be thou also over five cities." There is no reproof because his pound had not gained ten. In his measure he has been faithful, and in that measure he is rewarded. Every one according to his own labor.

20. "And another came, saying, Lord, behold, here is thy pound, which I have kept laid up in a napkin." The Lord's gift unused and therefore not improved. Like some who say that years ago they were converted; but no one ever heard them tell another how to get eternal life. They can talk, but not of Jesus and His love; they can sing, but not of Him; they have time enough at their disposal, but instead of using it for Him they labor to while it away; they have money, but it is spent upon themselves; yet they profess to have eternal life, and are members in good standing of some orthodox church.

21. "For I feared Thee, because Thou art an austere man; Thou takest up that Thou layedst not down, and reapest that Thou didst not sow." Having received salvation as a free gift from God, we are then to work it out with fear and trembling, for it is God who worketh in us (Phil. ii, 12, 13). We are to fear lest we grieve one who so loves us, and to tremble lest we misimprove so important a trust, or hinder God from working. Had this servant had in him this proper and filial fear he had not brought his pound thus misimproved.

22. "And He saith unto him: Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant." By our words we shall be justified or by our words condemned (Matt. xii, 37). God reads the heart, but out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. Jesus is the Word of God and the faithful manifestation of what God is. As the Father sent Him, so He sends us, to be His witnesses; and no matter what, or how much, profession we make, unless both words and deeds testify of Him that He is a loving, soul satisfying Saviour, we must be wicked servants, liars, false witnesses.

23. "Wherefore then gavest not thou my money into the bank, that at my coming I might have required mine own with usury?" It is God who giveth us all things, and whether it be eternal life, His holy spirit, or the ordinary temporal blessings of daily life, all come under the head of "His money," "His own," which He expects us to use for His glory. Glorify God in your bodies and spirits.

24-26. "Take from him the pound and give it to him that hath ten pounds." So every one who uses well what he has will have more intrusted to him, while the wicked servants who bear the Master's name but know Him not shall lose what they have, or rather what they seem to have, or think they have (Luke viii, 18 and margin). For what we do not enjoy or make some use of we cannot truly be said to have.

Remarkable Rescue.

Mrs. Michael Curtain, Plainfield, Ill., makes the statement that she caught cold, which settled on her lungs; she was treated for a month by her family physician, but grew worse. He told her she was a hopeless victim of consumption and that no medicine could cure her. Her druggist suggested Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption; she bought a bottle and to her delight found herself benefited from first dose. She continued its use and after taking ten bottles, found herself sound and well, now does her own housework and is as well as she ever was. Free trial bottles of this Great Discovery at H. L. Flanders & Co.'s Drug Store, large bottles 50c. and $1.00.

In the midst of the summer humidity there is a lively preparation for Christmas. Magazines are getting ready their holiday numbers, manufacturers are preparing novelties and in many branches of trade there is work in progress for cold weather.

WISTFUL.

Dear, it is hard to stand
So near thy life, yet so apart;
So near—I think so near—thine heart;
So near that I could touch thine hand,
And yet so far I dare not take
That hand in mine for love's dear sake!

So near that I can look my fill
At stated times upon thy face;
So far that I must yield a place
To others, sore against my will!
So near that I can see thee smile;
So far my poor heart aches the while!

Dear, it is hard to know
Whate'er the stress, the storm, the strife,
The fret, the sadness of thy life,
I have no power, no right to show
Love in my heart, love on my lips,
To comfort thee in life's eclipse.

No right to claim before the rest
The privilege to weep with thee;
No right, across life's stormy sea,
To bid thee welcome to my breast;
No right to share thy hopes, thy fears,
Through all the weary, weary years.

Dear, it is hard to feel
That bliss may meet thee full and fair,
Wherein poor I can have no share;
That thy wide future may reveal
The joys of harvest manifold,
While I stand lonely in the cold.

Dear, it is hard, but God doth know
How leal the heart that beats for thee;
It is enough, enough for me
To love thee. Let the future show
Love can live on for its own sake,
Though eyes may weep, though heart may ache. —Boston True Flag.

A Tramp's Large Estate.

The Abbe Martin, a French parish priest, was one day accosted by a miserable, poverty stricken man in rags, who said he belonged to a great and wealthy family which he had dishonored in many ways. He begged the abbe to get him into a monastery, where he could live and die in obscurity and unknown. The abbe procured his admission into a Spanish monastery as lay brother. A few years after he received a letter to the effect that he had been appointed sole legatee of a person who had died in a monastic establishment in Spain possessed of property in France worth many millions of francs.

Armed with his papers he visited the deceased's family to find that a brother had taken possession of the paternal property in the belief that the heir had died in penal servitude. An agreement was arrived at under which the abbe received an annuity of £2,400 on condition that he never disclosed the name of the family of the defunct monk. The romantic story came out in a court of justice recently, where the abbe appeared to prosecute two thieves who had stolen the whole of his annuity just received. He steadfastly declined to mention the source of his wealth, but admitted that the family was noble and great.—London Tit-Bits.

Masonry.

The Order of Freemasonry is said to have been established by Solomon at the time of building his temple. The order has been derived from many sources, but not till about 1717 did the second stage of its history begin in London, which is, in fact, the home of Masonry as now taught. The first lodge in the United States was organized in 1729 and was then under the jurisdiction of the grand lodge of England. The emblem of the order in most common use is the square and the compass worn by members of the Blue lodge. Besides this there are several designs worn by more advanced members, among them a keystone for the Chapter degree and a Maltese cross for the commandery. There are also hundreds of men entitled to wear the Consistory, or thirty-second degree badge. The general design of this emblem is a cross on which rests a crowned double headed eagle, with the figures "32" on a smooth triangle on the breast.—St. Louis Republic.

Better Than a String.

"I want something," said a farmer as he entered a Michigan avenue drug store the other day.

"Well, what is it?"

"I didn't tie a string around my finger, but I guess I can get around to it all the same. What's the name of the lake below us?"

"Lake Erie."

"Exactly. What's the name of the bay which the boats run to?"

"Put in Bay."

"Correct. Now, then, who put in there?"

"Perry."

"Straight as a string. I want ten cents' worth of perygoric. My old woman said I'd be sure to forget it, but here's the proof that I didn't."—Detroit Free Press.

A Mixture for Vermin.

Dissolve alum in hot water, making a very strong solution; apply to furniture or crevices in the wall with a paint brush. This is sure destruction to all noxious vermin, and invaluable because easily obtained; is perfectly safe to use and leaves no trace behind. When you suspect moths have lodged in the borders of carpets wet the edge of the carpets with a strong solution. Whenever it reaches them it is certain death.—New York Telegram.

BUMMER AND LAZARUS.

Two Amiable Friends That Used to Be in San Francisco Together.

There were many other "characters" in San Francisco in those early days, but I will simply allude to two four legged celebrities who will be easily remembered by the early residents. Bummer and Lazarus were two dogs that were as thorough vagrants as any old tramps. Just when it was that Bummer made his first appearance I cannot say, but when I first knew him, in 1860, he was recognized as a kindred spirit by all the bummers in town, which gave him the name he wore with so much credit to himself. He was a mongrel, having evidently a mixed ancestry.

The noble Newfoundland blood coursed through his veins, mingled with that of the brave but somewhat vicious bull. He could not be termed a sociable dog, for he would recognize no master, nor would he respond to any courtesies paid him, but treated all with the most sublime indifference. He frequented all the bar rooms and lunch tables, though he was never known to ettiulate his namesakes. He was always a welcome guest, however, and never failed to have abundance to eat. He never was known to snarl or bite, and was never ill used; indeed, it would have been a bold man who would undertake to offer him an insult, for the freedom of the city had been granted him by the board of supervisors, and none but friends were to be found wherever he went.

On one occasion he found a mangy cur dog, who had been stoned by the boys and generally maltreated. The poor dog had come sadly to grief, having his leg broken and being entirely disabled. The sympathies of Bummer were roused. He took the poor dog under his care, supplied him with food and acted the "Good Samaritan" toward him until his leg had healed, when he adopted him as his companion, and thenceforward wherever one dog was seen the other was sure to be seen also.

The intimacy was noticed, and the name of Lazarus was bestowed on the newcomer. The ordinance relating to Bummer was revised, and Lazarus was included in the general freedom of the city. No dog catchers could in any way reach them. No licenses were required from them. Thenceforward life was a picnic for them both. But in 1865, I am sorry to say, some miscreant took advantage of the confidence displayed by the dogs and gave Lazarus some poisoned meat, and Bummer remained alone. A cry of indignation went up from the entire city, and the newspapers were outspoken in their opinions of the action. In what year Bummer entered the "Dog's Paradise" I do not know, but after his death his body was stuffed and decorated the bar room of Martin & Horton for many years, I am told. It has now been consigned to their cellar.—Boston Saturday Globe.

Effect of Vichy Water in Diabetes.

The effect of Vichy water cannot be disputed. The treatment lessens the amount of sugar, the feeling of thirst, the great secretion of the kidneys, etc., and many a patient leaves the spring with every appearance of health. But we must not hope for a definite result any more at Vichy than elsewhere. Mineral waters modify and check the course of diabetes, but so far as we know it is very seldom that they cure it.

Vichy is especially suitable for diabetic patients who are fat and blooming, for persons with vigorous constitutions, apparently in good health and without bronchitis or other complications. As a general thing every accident or complication of diabetes appears to me to be a counter indication to the use of mineral waters, and especially those of Vichy.—Paris Herald.

Free Speech in Russia.

One cannot speak or work against the church in Russia. A Lutheran pastor of Riga called the Greek church a "heathenish church," and confirmed a girl belonging to the orthodox faith. He was condemned by the district court to the loss of all private rights and privileges, with banishment to the province of Perm without leave of absence from the place where he lives for a period of two years. He was prohibited from entering other provinces for a further period of ten years, and excluded for another term of ten years from the capitals and from the governments in which they lie.—Exchange.

Henry Ward Beecher's Love for Gems.

Henry Ward Beecher was very fond of gems of all kinds and was a constant purchaser. I don't know that he had any special superstition regarding them, but he loved them as one may love any beautiful thing. To him they meant something more than mere adornment. They represented not so much money value as artistic merit. And that, by the way, is always true of your genuine gem lover. Anything like ostentation or display is hateful to him.—New York Letter.

Thousands Poisoned.

In a recent work on Heart Disease, Dr. Franklin Miles—the noted specialist—gives many new and startling facts. Thousands of people are slowly poisoning themselves, weakening their hearts by the use of tea, coffee, tobacco and alcohol. These are Heart Whips, causing it to beat rapidly, thus gradually wearing it out, producing shortness of breath when exercising, pains in side and shoulder, hungry and faint spells. Finally heart failure and sudden death. For weakened and irritated hearts the press everywhere highly recommend the New Heart Cure discovered by Dr. Franklin Miles, which is for sale by Charles H. Buss.

Gen. Adolph Meyer, the lottery and "tariff reform" candidate in the First Congressional District of Louisiana, will be opposed by a pronounced anti-lottery man, United States Marshal Donnelly. The district has a large Democratic majority, and the lottery and "tariff reform" nominee will probably win, in spite of the efforts of the intelligent and conscientious people of the district to prevent it.

Why the Dreamers Fail.

Utopists and communists are set at work by the belief that equal justice is the natural law of the world, and that nothing keeps us out of it but the barrier of artificial arrangements set up by the power and in the interest of a class. Break down that barrier by revolutionary legislation and the kingdom of equal justice, they think, will come. Would that it were so! Who would be so selfish and so ignorant of the deepest source of happiness as not to vote for the change, whatever his wealth or his place on the social coach might be? Unhappily, neither equal justice nor perfection of any kind is the law of the world, as the world is at present toward whatever goal we may be moving.

Health, strength, beauty, intellect, offspring, length of days are distributed with no more regard for justice than are the powers of making and saving wealth. One man is born in an age of barbarism, another in an age of civilization. No justice can be done to the myriads who have suffered and died. Equal justice is far indeed from being the law of the animal kingdom. Why is one animal the beast of prey, another the victim? Why does an elephant live for two centuries and an ephemeral insect for a few hours? If you come to that, why should one sentient creature be a worm and another a man? In earth and skies, in the whole universe, so far as our ken reaches, imperfection reigns.

The man who in "Looking Backward" wakes from a magnetic slumber to find the lots of all men made just and equal might almost as well have awakened to find all human frames made perfect, disease and accident banished, the animals all in a state like that of Eden, the Arctic regions bearing harvests and Sahara moistened with fertilizing rain, the moon provided with an atmosphere, and the solar system, which at present is so full of gaps and wrecks, symmetrically completed. Society, like the frame of the individual man, is an imperfect organism. You may help and modify its growth, but you cannot transform it by revolutionary violence, and if you try to do this the result will only be laceration.—Professor Goldwin Smith in Forum.

Sea Turtles in New York.

Nearly 1,500 pounds of turtles are made into soups, steaks, cutlets and patties every week in this city. The turtles vary in weight from 10 to 400 pounds. They are captured on the Florida coast and are brought to the city by steamers. In order to keep the turtles from crawling overboard their flippers are tied together and the marine reptiles are laid upon their backs in coils of rope made for that purpose. On arrival in this city the turtles are placed in wooden boxes floating in the East river just behind Fulton market. They are fed upon cabbage leaves and watermelon rinds. It is an interesting sight to see a 400-pound turtle come to the surface and take a bite of watermelon. A few are kept in the market to attract buyers. As they lie upon their backs day after day and gasp for breath they excite the pity of passers-by. Their helpless and suffering condition is markedly at variance with their former liberty in the cool, green sea.—Ernest Jarrold in New York Journal.

Whereupon the Youngsters Tittered.

The Arounder is authoritatively informed that the following was an actual occurrence at the gospel tent meeting on Niagara street, near Hudson. A member had just ceased speaking about a cure of asthma effected by prayer when a lank individual arose and asked for the privilege of the floor.

"If you have had experience you may speak, brother," said the presiding officer.

"I have had experience. My father was sick with the asthma for fifteen years, and he was finally brought to pray for his recovery. (Intense interest manifested among the hearers.) He prayed fifty years and (emphatically) he died of the asthma."

Signals from a Police Club.

A police officer of Chicago has devised an ingenious mode of signaling for the patrol wagon. He has a brass plate fixed in the end of his club, having an opening of suitable shape to correspond with and act as a key or wrench to turn the lever that sends in the alarm. This opening also serves as a mouthpiece to a whistle set in the base of the club. This is a most practical device, for the subjects of arrest are, as a rule, neither very obliging nor amiable, and certainly not prone to remain peaceful and inactive while an officer is extracting his keys from his pocket to send in an alarm.—New York Telegram.

Many More Like It.

A dispatch from Chicago says that a young inventor of that city has "all but accomplished" his ambition in devising an electric propeller to run steamers of any size by means of a storage battery, and also a device for the economical development of the electricity. The highway of progress is strewn with the bones of dead hopes and ruined fortunes accounted for by "all but accomplished" inventions. —Detroit Free Press.

The Best Advertising.

The most efficient advertising in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla is that which comes from the medicine itself. That is, those who are cured by it, speak to friends suffering similarly, who in turn derive benefit and urge others to try this successful medicine. Thus the circle of its popularity is rapidly widening from this cause alone, and more and more are becoming enthusiastic in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla as it actually demonstrates its absolute merit. All that is asked for Hood's Sarsaparilla is that it be given a fair trial. If you need a good blood purifier, or building up medicine, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

There lay in New York harbor the other day a large Italian steel sailing ship, said to be one of the finest vessels that had ever visited that port. The ship was built in an Italian shipyard at a figure 10 per cent. below the price it would have cost in England. Evidently the Italian subsidies are beginning to make themselves felt in a way that the Clyde and the Tyne will hardly appreciate.

Woman's Column.

A Modern Instance.

In one of the classes for the study of the New Testament, Rev. B. F. Cherrington, eighteen years a missionary in India, and a man of great power and fine intellect, related an incident bearing on that much-quoted passage in Paul's letter to the Corinthians. He said he had known what he considered a parallel case. There was a native helper, a woman named Betsey Paul, who had wonderful power and moved the people as much as Mrs. Van Cott. She had worked in other places, but in Lucknow the only educated women, and the only ones taking part in any public exercises, were the Nautch or dancing girls, women of known bad character. Because of this, and of the natural inference as to the character of this Christian woman if she spoke in public, the ministers begged her to keep silent, though feeling that they were losing much. "Times have changed," said Dr Cherrington, "and today she is speaking with great power and marvellous results." Such a reason he considered the one and the only one for Paul's injunction to the women to keep silent in Corinth, a city of notoriously bad morals. Paul certainly could not have been averse to women workers in the church, said the speaker, as the first church in Europe was started in a woman's prayer-meeting, in the house of Lydia, and from them he consented to receive aid.—Emma Harriman in Woman's Journal.

Madame Carnot, wife of the French President, is said to have done more to strengthen the republic than all the politicians have accomplished. The French like a democracy tempered with splendor and associated with fine manners, which the plebeian and commonplace administration of the Grevys omitted. Madame Carnot's personal grace, elegance, and charm, and the good taste of the entertainments at the Elysee, are now reconciling the irreconcilables to a President in place of a King.

Miss Nellie O'Donnell, who is but twenty-four years of age, is the Superintendent of Education of Shelby County, Tenn., of which Memphis is the seat. Miss O'Donnell was elected by a large majority over her male competitor and predecessor who however attempted to assume the office, claiming that it was unconstitutional in Tennessee for a woman to hold the position. The little woman maintained her ground, and public sentiment was so greatly in her favor that the Legislature has passed a law making women eligible to the post.

Miss Alli Trygg, of Finland, who is so pleasantly remembered as one of the International Council at Washington, has started a workmen's kitchen, where 300 workmen are taking their meals every day. There is a reading-room attached. She has also started a monthly journal for woman's rights in the Swedish language. The State also furnishes her money for a building containing a large library, a reading-room, a school for workmen's children, that is, a kindergarten, and a home for babies when their mothers are at work. There will also be a room for workingmen and women to have meetings and music in the evenings.

A novel wedding journey is reported from Detroit. David G. Gale and Jennie Matthews were married there June 15 and at once started on their wedding trip in a boat 15 feet long, carrying nine square feet of sail. The first day they had head winds and made but twenty miles, and found lodging for the night at a farm house. For two subsequent days they had delightful rowing weather, and got along swimmingly. The third day came a storm, and it was thought advisable for Mrs. Gale to get out and walk along the beach, which she did a distance of about eight miles, while her husband pulled along in sight. Wind and oar and an occasional tow from a steam barge and launch took the bridal couple along rapidly, and the fifth day they arrived at Oakdale harbor, just 340 miles by the coast line measure. They returned by rail, delighted with their experience.

A gentleman who wrote concerning the price of board in a country town is said to have received this telegram in reply: "Board, $20 a week, including washing up the carriage and piano agent. Robinson." He wrote in answer that, though both piano agent and carriage needed cleansing, he was not accustomed to such charges in a board bill, and soon after learned that the original copy had run thus: "Board, $20 a week, including washing, use of carriage and piano. Agnes Robinson."

What Stronger Facts and Figures

RECOMMENDATION can a medicine have than the testimony of those whom it has cured? One such case is worth columns of puffery. We would request all who are afflicted with Blood Diseases to read the following:—

SALT-RHEUM.—Mrs. T. P. Cushing, 87 Suffolk st., Chelsea, Mass., writes: "For a long time I was troubled with salt-rheum. My hands would crack open, bleed, and itch terribly, causing great suffering. I tried almost every remedy I saw advertised, but received no benefit, until I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, four bottles of which cured me."

CANKER.—Mrs. W. Gaige, Poultney, Vt., says: "I have suffered much from canker humors. At times, I was unable to eat or swallow solid food. Last spring I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and quickly found relief. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured."

RHEUMATISM.—E. F. Harris, Buckland, Mass., certifies: "Eight years ago I had so severe an attack of rheumatism that I could not move from the bed, or dress, without help. I tried many remedies, but received no relief until I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which restored me to health."

CATARRH.—Seth Schreiver, Sag Harbor, N. Y., testifies: "My daughter suffered for years from an obstinate and offensive catarrh. Having heard Ayer's Sarsaparilla highly recommended, I resolved to try it. Before my daughter finished ten bottles she was entirely cured."

ERYSIPELAS.—Rev. S. J. Graham, Buckhannon, W. Va., writes: "Having been afflicted with erysipelas for nearly twenty years, I was at last induced by a friend to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I procured a bottle, which gave me relief before I had used half of it. I took three bottles, and have had no indication or symptom of the disease since."

BLEEDING PILES.—My wife has been more or less troubled with bleeding piles for thirty years. She tried many doctors and remedies, but obtained no relief until she began to take

Show that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has been in greater demand, and made more remarkable cures, during the past twelve months, than any other medicine that can be named. Here are only a few specimen facts:—

New York.—"My sales of Ayer's Sarsaparilla nearly doubled last year."—L. S. Freeman, Middleport.

"I always recommend Ayer's Sarsaparilla because I believe it to be the best blood-purifier in the market."—Joseph Myer, Jr., Elmira.

Pennsylvania.—"Ayer's Sarsaparilla remains the favorite in spite of all competitors."—Hugo Andriesson, Druggist, Beaver.

West Virginia.—"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is very popular here."—J. H. Purdy, Cameron.

New Hampshire.—"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best preparation known for the cure of blood disorders."—J. W. White, Druggist, Nashua.

Massachusetts.—"We have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla ever since it was first placed upon the market, and have yet to learn of a case where it has failed to give satisfaction."—F. & E. Bailey & Co., Druggists, Lowell.

New Jersey.—"We keep other kinds, but find Ayer's Sarsaparilla does more good."—Mullens & Son, Gloucester.

Virginia.—"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is very popular here."—Robert Lecky, Druggist, 724 Brook av., Richmond.

Texas.—"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is in greater demand here than any other similar preparation."—N. W. Lewis, Druggist, Manor.

North Carolina.—"Ayer's Sarsaparilla sells better than any preparation of the kind, and gives better satisfaction."—R. J. Mitchell & Son, Oxford.

Ohio.—"Ayer's Sarsaparilla sells better than all other blood-purifiers put together."—T. H. Armstrong, M. D. and Druggist, Powhatan.

An extraordinary case of heroism is narrated in the Philadelphia Press. Bessie Criswell, aged 14, living three miles from Dauphin, was about to prepare supper last Wednesday when she found the fire in the cook stove very low. She poured coal oil on the kindling wood. It ignited, the can exploded, and the burning oil set fire to her clothing and to the house. The frightened girl ran to the spring house twice while her clothes were blazing, secured a pail of water each time and put out the fire in the house. A third time she went to the spring and dipped her head and neck in the water. Then she ran to a small stream and threw herself in. Having extinguished the flames, she went to her mother, who was milking, and reported the matter. She was fatally burned, however, and died the next day. She sacrificed herself to save her home.

George Pepper, an 18-year old colored lad living near Laurel, Del., is changing from a deep black to a pure white color. The process of change began over three years ago, and has progressed steadily. It first appeared as a small white spot upon his breast, but now completely covers all his trunk, arms, neck and one side of his face. The color is as clear and pure white as that of a babe, and seems perfectly healthy. The subject has suffered no annoyance or any unpleasant sensation at any time. If the process should continue he will in less than one year hence be a white man all over. Prominent medical men have conferred upon his case, but are at a loss for any explanation.

The Republican Committee of Maryland has appointed a committee to examine the new ballot law of the State and if thought best, to test its constitutionality. The ground of uncertainty in this matter is the fact that nine counties of the State are exempt from the law. These counties form parts of three Congressional districts, and the consequence is that in a part of these districts the elections must be under the new law, and in part of them under the old. It is claimed that this absence of uniformity makes the Act unconstitutional.

A pair of belligerent bulls, says the Portland Oregonian, engaged in a fierce battle on the track of the Astoria and South Coast Railroad the other day, and for nearly half an hour the trainmen were unable to drive them away in order to get the train through. Huge clubs were worn out over the heads and backs of the animals, but without avail, until at last they grew weary and sullenly scrambled away.

Members of Congress should bear in mind that the eager agents of the Louisiana Lottery are not the only people who are watching intently the action of Congress on the proposed anti-lottery legislation. The country at large is taking a profound interest in the matter, and it desires to see a really effective bill against this giant evil enacted.

The usual treatment of catarrh is very unsatisfactory, as thousands of despairing patients can testify. A trustworthy medical writer says: "Proper local treatment is positively necessary to success, but most of the remedies in general use by physicians afford but temporary benefit. A cure cannot be expected from snuffs, powders, douches and washes." Ely's Cream Balm is a remedy which combines the important requisites of quick action, specific curative power with perfect safety and pleasantness to the patient.

Considering the future American, the sociologists claim to know that he will not live at home, in fact that he will not have a home, as he will board in a hotel or club when he is not indulging in the pastime of globe-trotting. He will be a bachelor, irritable and discontented.

"The art of eating a peach" seems to be confined this season to canned fruit, but it is interesting to hear of a controversy upon the etiquette of the subject. One authority says that a peach should be pricked with a fork, quartered, peeled and eaten piecemeal.

The introduction by Senator Edmunds of a resolution looking to the shortening of debate on the tariff question indicates that the position of the Vermont Senator upon the inviolability of the Senate traditions has been misunderstood, or else that he has seen reason for modifying it.

The Tennessee Democratic State Committee, for what doubtless seems to it good and sufficient reasons, has summarily terminated the custom of beginning the campaign by series of joint debates between the Democratic and Republican candidates for Governor.

A matrimonial agency in London advises young ladies not to marry young men, and not to marry a man at all without money. Penniless young men are said to become spendthrifts and wife-beaters England.

A countrymen visiting the surrogate's office, and observing the huge volume of wills on the shelves, asked if they were Bibles. "No sir," said the clerk, "they are testaments."

Every tissue of the body, every nerve, bone and muscle is made stronger and more healthy by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Why is Chicago so dirty?" asked the invidious stranger. "Her envious neighbors are all throwing mud at her," explained a resident.

Here's a conundrum for this hot weather: When a young man steals a kiss, does he take the same from the girl or give it to her?

"I was in arms all through the war and I want a pension." "You! You are not over 28 years of age." "I know it. I belonged to the infantry."

WINNING HER WAY.

"It's heart-breaking to be kept in on this lovely day, missing the skating simply because mother insists that Aunt Charlotte's absurd hobby of girls qualifying themselves in the art of housewifery is right. Art of fiddlesticks, I say!"

"Rosalind, you should not speak in that manner. You know Aunt Charlotte has been very kind to us."

"I don't care, Winnifred! I think its outrageous—her proposing our learning housework. The very thought is sickening!" And Rosalind Bailey spitefully threw the feather duster she was using to the floor.

"Rosalind, why do you give way to such uncomfortable feelings. Consider how it troubles poor mamma."

"Great deal she cares, making us do work that belongs to servants, when we might be out having a good time."

"I'm sure mamma knows what is best for us. Besides, there is more work than Jane and Mary can attend to."

"Papa can hire more servants, then; he is as rich as Minnie Brown's father, or Cora Blake's, or scores of others I could name."

"I am sorry you are so unhappy in obeying mamma's wishes," said Winnifred with a little sigh.

The violent ringing of the door bell, which Winnifred hastened to answer, checked Rosalind's angry response. A moment elapsed, then someone said in an excited voice:

"Good morning, Miss Winnifred. Your father has been taken suddenly ill, he will be brought home at once; you must prepare Mrs. Bailey."

Scarcely knowing what she did, Winnifred turned toward the nursery, sure of finding her mother with baby Edgar. Gently the bad news imparted together with encournging words. Then, hurrying back, she reached Rosalind's side just as the unconscious form of their beloved father was carefully borne to his room. Two days of agonizing suspense, then an oppressive silence reigned throughout that closed house, hot, scalding tears falling fast over the form, still in death, of a kind husband and father.

Days came and went, making serious changes in the circumstances of the once wealthy Bailey family. After the death of Mr. Bailey came the announcement that all his fortune was involved in financial ruin, then the full comprehension of their loss, which fell on none more heavily than Rosalind, the elder daughter, who was about sixteen. Winnifred, not quite fifteen, mourned deeply her father, whom she had loved with fond devotion, while the bitterness of Rosalind's sorrow was in the thought of poverty.

Giving up their pretty home was a necessity painful to all. One day, when talking the matter over, Winnifred said:

"How long are we permitted to remain here, mamma?"

"Until the house is sold, dear—an event not far distant."

"Then we must hope for a substantial answer from Aunt Charlotte," dismally remarked Rosalind.

"She may not have received my letter; I was not quite certain about her European address."

"Goodness knows what we shall do without her assistance," said Rosalind, gazing into the open grate.

"You and I, Rosa, must find work. I shall try for a place in Brown & Taylor's.

"You can do as you please, Winnifred; I shall not disgrace myself by entering a store as a shop-girl, unless obliged to do so. Probably mamma will hear from Aunt Charlotte before the house is sold."

So the discussion ended, and days became weeks, only to bring disappointment. The pretty house was gone, and at last, depending upon their own labor Winnifred and Rosalind entered the store of Brown & Taylor in search of employment, unsuccessful, save for promises when the first vacancy occurred. From place to place they went with no better success, returning home at dusk, weary and dispirited.

A week of unavailing search for work, and Winnifred, slowly walking along a pleasant street, as wondering, almost discouraged, where she should try next.

"I must find something," she mused. "The look of anxiety on poor mamma's face is proof that the money is almost exhausted."

Engaged in her thoughts, she heeded not the faultless equipage stopping a short distance in advance until a voice called:

"Winifred, Winifred Bailey, where are you hiding? It's ages since I have seen any of you. I really believe you were not going to speak this morning."

"Oh, good morning, Mrs. Graham," stammered Winifred. "I—I did not see you until you spoke."

The fact of having received many rebuffs from fashionable acquaintance since their reverses did not lessen the girl's surprise at the cordiality of Mrs. Graham's greeting.

"Won't you join me in a drive this beautiful morning, Winifred?"

"I should enjoy it, Mrs. Graham, but—"

"No excuses! James, open the carriage door for Miss Bailey."

Soon Winifred was seated in the barouche. After an extended drive, Mrs. Graham said:

"My husband is away, Winifred, and you must keep me company at lunch."

Already the horses were standing before Mrs. Graham's residence, therefore politeness forbade the non-acceptance of the invitation.

As they enterek the house, two servants in an angry dispute attracted their attention.

"Lay off your hat, Winifred, and I will see what that loud talk means," said Mrs. Graham, hurrying away. Returning presently, with a look of deep annoyance, she said, "Another of my handsome statuettes broken."

"That is too bad; how did it happen?"

"Two girls in dusting managed to tip it from the pedestal. Dear me! If I could only fine someone who could do particular dusting without constantly breaking things!"

"Mrs. Graham! I wish you would try me?"

"You, Winifred? Surely you are jesting!"

"No, I am in earnest."

"I shall be delighted, Winifred, if your mother approves. When would you like to begin?"

"Tomorrow, if not too soon for you."

"Very well; that will suit me nicely."

"Feeling reasonably sure of her mother's consent, Winifred on her way home bought three yards of soft cheese cloth for dusters.

"What have you in that package, Winifred?" exclaimed Rosalind, as the small roll was tossed upon the table.

The question passed unnoticed, Winifred's attention being attracted to a gray-haired, blue-spectacled lady who was energetically showing Mrs. Bailey the small wares she carried in a basket.

"I should like to patronize you, but we are poor ourselves," Mrs. Bailey was saying, when Rosalind broke in with—

"What in the world did you buy this for, Winifred?"

"Dusters, Rosalind. Don't you remember Aunt Charlotte said that soft cheese-cloth made the best?"

"What do we want of them? Our furniture is not so elegant as to need extra care," and Rosalind disdainfully cast her eyes over the plainly furnished room.

"They are not to be used here."

"You talk in riddles. Where if not here?"

"At Graham's."

"Mrs. Graham's! Winifred how can that be?" said Mrs. Bailey.

Relating the incidents of the morning, Winifred replied:

"Mrs. Graham, with your consent, has engaged me to work for her. You will say yes, won't you mamma?"

"What is the work you will have to do?"

"Dusting and arranging. I am to go in the morning, work as many hours as necessary, and then come home."

"Winifred Bailey, haven't you any pride, that you would disgrace yourself, and mamma and me as well, by going out as a common scrub-girl?" exclaimed Rosalind.

"Sister, if you choose to regard the situation in that light you must; with mamma's consent, I shall accept the offer."

"I wish, Rosalind, you were less sensitive regarding honest labor," expostulated Mrs. Bailey, gently. "Remember what Aunt Charlotte used to say, that pride and poverty can never travel together."

"Don't mention her name to me!" vehemently broke forth Rosalind. "Her obnoxious country ideas are well instilled into Winifred, but, thank Heaven! I have escaped them."

In her irritability Rosalind had forgotten the presence of a stranger until reminded of it by her picking up her basket and saying to Mrs. Bailey:

"Thank you, missus, for allowing me to rest a bit." Then, turning to Winifred, she added, "If an old woman's good wishes are worth anything to you, little miss, you have mine for your future success."

The door closed, and she was gone.

The next morning Winifred, with a cheerful heart commenced her labors for the stipulated price of three dollars a week. Mrs. Graham wished to increase the amount, but Winifred said:

"I shall have plenty of spare time, Mrs. Graham; if you could remember me to your friends, I might have two more places; that would give me nine dollars a week."

She performed the duties required of her satisfactorily, and ere the two weeks had passed the three places were secured.

Time passed, and Winifred, bright and happy, gained friends wherever she went. Under the judicious management of Mrs. Bailey, Winifred's income, together with what she herself earned by doing light needlework, maintained them humbly, and left a little for a rainy day.

While employed at the house of Mrs. Blois, one of her patrons, Winifred accidentally drifted into a new line of business. A large basket of cut flowers in a confused heap, accompanied by a note from Mr. Blois, had arrived, stating that some gentlemen would dine with him that evening. After several futile attempts to arrange them Mrs. Blois hopelessly said:

"I wish, Winifred, you would help me to reduce this chaos of flowers to something like order."

Quickly responding to the call, Winifred, with bright eyes and glowing cheeks, deftly arranged the flowers she loved.

"You have combined them exquisitely!" exclaimed Mrs. Blois, gazing with admiration on the girl's work.

After a lapse of a few days she was again called upon to perform what to her was a pleasant duty, the occasion being a tea-party given in honor of a select few of Mrs. Blois' lady friends. The outcome to herself was a generous remuneration from Mrs. Blois and frequent orders from the ladies present on that occasion, who greatly admired the artistic arrangement of the floral display.

The demand for Winifred's services rapidly increased until she was crowded with all the work one pair of hands could do.

"Mrs. Graham has decided to accompany her husband to Chili, mamma," said Winifred one evening, as the Bailey family lingered over their tea.

"Indeed! Then she will not need you much longer?"

"That was what I supposed," replied Winifred, "but such was not the case. This morning she made me a proposition that greatly surprised me."

"What was it?"

"Probably an offer to take Winifred with her, as they are so bound up in each other," suggested Rosalind, illnaturedly.

"You are mistaken, sister; Mrs. Graham would not offer what would be impossible for me to accept."

"Dear me—such deliberation! It takes you forever to tell anything, Winifred!"

"Well, then, the Grahams desire us to live in their house and care for it during their absence; they also insist on compensating us liberally."

"How kind of them!" exclaimed Mrs. Bailey, the tears filling her eyes.

"Yes," continued Winifred, "Mrs. Graham declared she should feel better knowing friends were occupying the house than to have it closed."

"Oh, certainly!" interrupted Rosalind. "Her friends most heartily approve the good sense she displays in the matter. Really it will seem quite like old times to live in a decent house like that once more."

Winifred could not entirely overcome her vexation at Rosalind's ungrateful selfishness, but bit her lip and was silent.

Two weeks later found them installed in Mrs. Graham's pretty home. Now that no rent was to be paid, Mrs. Bailey and Winifred laid aside all that could be spared of their income, and with pleasure found the sum in their treasury rapidly increasing.

Thus the weeks glided swiftly into months, until nearly a y ar had passed since the Baileys first took up their residence at Mrs. Graham's.

Christmas was fast approaching, and Winifred was looking forward with pleasurable anticipations to the surprises she had in store for those dear to her. So prosperous had been the past year that she felt she could well afford a handsome gift to mother, sister, and little brother.

"I do wish Aunt Charlotte was here to pass Christmas with us," said she, while talking over their plans for that day.

"Yes, I wish she might be. It is strange we have never heard from her since your father died; my letter could not have reached her," said Mrs. Bailey, thoughtfully.

"For my part, I do not know that I am very anxious to see her; but I wish she would open her heart and her pocket-book sufficiently to send along some nice presents," said Rosalind.

"I should not want to accept presents from one who aroused the antipathy you seem to feel for Aunt Charlotte," replied Winifred.

"You have a right to think as you please, and I suppose I am allowed the same privilege." And Rosalind walked away to answer the postman's ring. "A letter for you, Winifred. It looks like Mrs. Graham's writing."

"Yes, it is from Mrs. Graham," said Winifred, after perusing the closely written sheet. They are to return home the middle of next month."

"Oh, dear! That means that we must go back to four or five rooms." And Rosalind, with tears in her eyes, threw herself into one of the softly-cushioned chairs.

"Consider, Rosalind; but for Mrs. Graham's kind generosity, the months you have passed here so pleasantly must have been spent far otherwise, and try to be content now."

Rosalind unclosed her lips to answer, but instead moodily tapped her foot on the carpet and gazed discontentedly out of the window.

Agreeing that nothing more should be said concerning their removal until after the holidays, the subject was dropped.

The sunlight of a bright Christmas morning dawned. With a hearty kiss and a merry Christmas to all, Winifred joined the family on that king of mornings, bestowing on each the gift that love and generous impulse prompted.

Breakfast being over, Rosalind, looking from the window at the beauty of the morning, was surprised to see a covered sleigh before their door. Her first thought was that the Grahams had returned sooner than they expected, but the next moment she called out:

"Aunt Charlotte, as I live!"

Winifred and Mrs. Bailey were at the door to welcome her almost before Rosalind ceased speaking. With affectionate caresses she was led to the morning room, where Rosalind, with something like embarrassment, bade her welcome.

"I know, Charlotte, you miss the warm embrace of a brother," said Mrs. Bailey, in a subdued tone.

"Yes, sister. When I first learned of his death the shock seemed more than I could bear."

"Aunt Charlotte, you are tired after your long journey," said Winifred, "and need a refreshing cup of tea."

"It is but a short time since I had breakfast, my dear."

Little Edgar, intently watching the new comer, said:

"Isn't you my Aunt Charlotte, too?"

"Yes, darling."

"Didn't you bringed Eddie some'sins in that?" pointing to a large travelling bag.

"Yes, darling, auntie has brought gifts to all and will distribute them at once."

After placing several packages in the hands of little Edgar and his mother, Aunt Charlotte extended towards Winifred a long, well-filled envelope.

"This is for you, dear niece, in appreciation of the way in which Aunt Charlotte's words of advice have been accepted and utililized."

Rosalind was looking with wonder on the envelope. Winifred opened it, when her aunt said:

"It was a difficult matter for your Aunt Charlotte, with her obnoxious country idea, to select for you a gift. My advice has been repudiated in the past, Rosalind, but I hope that never again will you speak in disrespectful tones of one who has your interest at heart; for she may be present, even behind gray hair and blue glasses."

Rosalind, with a scarlet face, a small package extended to her, which proved to be a very handsome watch and chain, enrolled with a pair of blue glasses and a gray wig.

"You were the old peddler!" she exclaimed.

"Yes; I came to see how you bore adversity."

Winifred, with a heart too full for utterance, gazed for a moment on her gifts, then joyfully cried:

"A deed of our dear old home! Mamma, we are going back to the dear old home."

With eyes swimming in tears, Mrs. Bailey read the paper. The home with its furnishings complete was Winifred's to be shared with her mother.

"How can we ever thank you enough?" exclaimed Winifred, throwing her arms about her aunt's neck.

"By allowing me to pass part of my time with you, and cherishing the lesson that honest endeavor is no disgrace."—Waverley Magazine.

Does your Cake Dry up Quickly?

If so, your baking powder is adulterated with ammonia or alum, ingredients which are injurious to health and are used by unscrupulous manufacturers simply to lessen the cost of the powder and increase their profits.

Housekeepers who use Cleveland's Superior Baking Powder know that food raised with this pure cream of tartar powder keeps moist and sweet, and is palatable and wholesome.

"Cleveland's Superior" has the peculiar property, possessed by no other baking powder, of producing light, wholesome bread, biscuit, cake, etc., that retain their natural moisture and sweetness. This desirable quality, in a baking powder shown by the Official Reports to be the strongest of all pure cream of tartar powders, makes Cleveland's Superior "Absolutely the Best."

IN THE 5TH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

The question as to who is to be General Banks's successor as Representative in Congress from this District is by no means settled notwithstanding the "claim" put forth by Capt. Fox of Cambridge that he will have a good working majority of the delegates at the convention. He has not only failed to secure a majority of the delegates up to this date but according to other and quite as reliable accounts his nomination is exceedingly problematical, if indeed it is not impossible. At anyrate he lacks the requisite number of delegates at the present time to insure his nomination and the general belief is that his following will not increase any between this and the day of the convention, but that it will go the other way, if anything. The manner in which many of his men were chosen was not relished very well and will be likely to do him no good in the end. The better element of the Republican party in Cambridge strongly oppose Capt. Fox's candidacy.

Since he failed to carry his own city as a unit the staunchest supporters of Mayor Burns of Somerville do not pretend to believe that their candidate stands any show of getting the nomination unless they can strike up a "dicker" with somebody, for which the prospect is not flattering at the present time. He and his friends are not at all backward in putting in their "claims" but with those who are at all conversant with the real situation they do not count for much. There is never any telling where lightning is going to strike, but from the best information that can be obtained it is safe to say that Burns is in no very great danger of being smitten by the Congressional bolt this time.

General Banks's workers—and the woods are full of them—likewise put in "claims." They have a pretty firm foundation to rest on too. The General's chances are vastly superior to Burns's, more than equal to Fox's, and with good management he stands at least an even chance of obtaining the nomination.

This brings us to the consideration of Woburn's candidate, for the several others who have been "mentioned" for the place have no "claims" worthy of being seriously thought about.

The friends and supporters of Mayor Johnson of this city will be in the convention to stay. They believe in their man and are going to nominate him if possible. They think they see a chance for accomplishing this and the chance will certainly be improved. Johnson is better fitted for Congressman than Fox is; he is Burns's peer in everything; Banks's support is a sort of sentimental movement anyway; and it is reasonable to suppose that there will be many delegates in the convention besides those from Woburn who will prefer Johnson to either of the others and vote for his nomination.

At anyrate, Banks and Fox and Burns will find Mayor Johnson a formidable competitor for the honor and unless things change materially between this writing and the day of the convention we would pay as much for Johnson's chances for the nomination as for those of any of the other candidates in the field.

STATE CONVENTION.

The Republicans of Massachusetts held their annual State Convention at Tremont Temple, Boston, last Wednesday. Great enthusiasm prevailed notwithstanding the raging of the autumnal equinox outside.

Gov. Brackett, Lieut. Gov. Haile and Treasurer Marden were re-nominated by acclamation. Col. Olin was nominated for Secretary of State after a sharp contest; A. E. Pillsbury for Attorney General by an easy walkover; J. H. Gould (objected to on account of parting his name in the middle, to wit, J. Henry) for State Auditor. Thus two worthy incumbents, Waterman and Ladd, were dropped and two new men put into their places. This was accomplished at the behest of the politicians, as it also was in the case of Secretary of State. The machinists were determined to have Col. Olin (just as good a man as breathes), but the common people wanted Howland bad. The machinists won.

The work of the convention (except platform) may be seen by glancing the eye over the ticket at the head of these columns. They are all good men and if the whole list is not elected by a larger majority than the Republicans have had in this State for years then the JOURNAL's prophetic vision is becoming dimmed.

MORE NAMES.

Since the last issue of the JOURNAL several new names have been mentioned for the office of Mayor by members of the Citizens or Independent movement anyone of which would make a good successor to Mayor Johnson. Three of them are Joseph B. McDonald, John R. Carter and James Skinner. Better men for the place cannot be found in this city.

Now, not only have the names of these gentlemen been seriously talked over in connection with the Mayoralty by those who want to see a good city government, but it is said that more than one of them could be induced to accept a nomination if tendered by a genuine movement on the part of respectable citizens for the election of good men to fill city offices. Not that they crave the Mayoralty, but if a considerable share of the tax-payers and clear-handed voters of the city should demand the sacrifice on their part one at least, and perhaps anyone, of the three gentlemen named above would contribute an important share to the maintenance of good local government by accepting the post.

IT WILL BE SENATOR WYER.

Intelligence from the towns composing the 5th Middlesex Senatorial District indicates that Capt. Wyer will have a walkover at the convention on the 1st of Oct. There will be no opposition to him worth mentioning and it is probable he will receive a unanimous vote for the nomination on the first formal ballot.

With all due respect to everybody who has preceded him it is not too much to believe that Capt. Wyer will make as good a Senator as this part of Middlesex ever had. He will wield an influence in that august body and prove a credit to the 5th District. Or else the JOURNAL don't know him.

FOR REPRESENTATIVE.

It is conceded on all hands—at least that is the way we hear it stated—that Mr. Elmore A. Pierce will be one of the Republican nominees for Representative to the Legislature. The Woburn delegation will vote solid for him in the convention and that will insure his nomination.

Pierce comes into this on his own merits, without any "combines," and the unanimity of sentiment in his favor speaks very loudly in his praise.

REPUBLICAN CONGRESSIONAL CONVENTION.

The Republican convention for this Congressional District will be held at Wesleyan Hall in Boston on next Wednesday, Sept. 24.

— Miss Alice L. Frye, daughter of N. W. Frye of this city, who has been connected with Almira College in Greenville, Illinois, for some years, has been chosen Lady Principal of Grand Traverse College, Michigan, and left here on Wednesday last to assume the duties of that position.

— G. R. Gage & Co. are opening their stock of fall and winter goods for coats, pantaloons, vests, overcoats, ulsters, etc. and it is a fine one. The styles for gentlemens suits are much handsomer than they have been for some time, and G. R. G. & Co. have full lines of the best and latest there is going.

— Last Saturday morning Mr. and Mrs. Chase Cole of Pleasant street were obliged to call in an executioner and have their dog Spot killed. Showing symptoms of dumb rabies they tied him up on Friday and on Saturday it was thought advisable to put a period to his existence. Spot was a great family favorite.

— Mr. Sparrow Horton showed us a copy of a local war-time publication "extra" in which was given an account of a recent battle in the South and among the list of dead was the name of Charles K. Conn. It was a mistake. Capt. Conn was severely wounded, but not killed. He is still a very lively and healthy Old Vet.

— The concert and ball given at Lyceum Hall on last Wednesday evening for the benefit of Miss McDonald, an estimable young lady of this city who was for several years a prominent member of the choir at St. Charles Church, was a grand success. The attendance was very large and everything passed off very finely indeed.

— Rev. Hugh Montgomery, the stalwart temperance orator, has been taking an imposed rest. Even his robust constitution had to succumb to overwork, but he is in a fair way of recuperating—Boston Traveller. Mr. M. has worked hard during the last year but he will get into fighting trim again long before the city election.

— The Fall Exhibition at Paine's Furniture Warerooms, 48 Canal street, Boston, takes place this month. No one should visit Boston without attending it. All the new styles can be seen and studied. A half a day can be profitably passed here. Visitors are entirely welcome, and thousands of persons attend with no thought of purchasing.

— The JOURNAL Book and Job office is complete in all its appointments and has the reputation of turning out as fine work and as much of it as any printing establishment in Middlesex county. It is fully supplied with presses, all the latest styles of type, stock and men to use them, and gentlemen, your work is respectfully solicited. —tf.

— Mr. L. Houghton Allen, after spending nearly all summer in the White Mountain region of country, returned to this city a few days ago, but not for a long stop. He will stay with his son in Milwaukee until the approach of winter when he will go to a milder climate—probably Southern California—in which to spend the season.

— Few people have any idea of the number of Crawford Grand Ranges that are being sold in our city this fall. E. G. Clough, the only dealer in the city who can buy them direct of the manufacturers, has delivered two a day part of the time, and still the demand continues, the supply holds good and every stove warranted to work satisfactorily.

— Rev. Mr. Washburn, pastor of the No. Woburn and Burlington Congregational churches, has accepted a call from the Congregational church at Yarmouth, where he preached several sermons this summer. He is a good preacher, a faithful pastor, full of energy, a devout Christian, and one of the best "all round" clergymen in this neighborhood.

— Last Tuesday we received a pleasant call from Mr. J. R. Lane of Methuen, a native of Bedford, and once a resident of Woburn. He has many old friends and acquaintances in this city, to see whom and have a good time with he comes down about once a year. Mr. Lane is a prosperous Essex county farmer but not just now in the enjoyment of robust health.

— There was quite a heavy thunder storm on Tuesday morning. According to the almanac dog-days came to an end on Sept. 5, but the real article kept right on giving us heat and humidity in unlimited and very disagreeable quantities regardless of almanacs, weather bureaus, and all that sort of trash. A tremendous amount of rain has fallen since Sept. came it.

— Mr. Hubbard Copeland, senior member of the dry goods firm of Copeland & Bowser of this city, has hired of John W. Johnson, Esq., acting for the Unitarian Society, the new tenement on Hammond Square recently occupied by Mr. Place and will take possession at once. It is one of the most desirable houses in this city and will make Mr. and Mrs. Copeland a very pleasant home.

— This is a great year for political candidates to make "claims." The most of them "claim" the earth. But while Capt. Horace N. Conn lays no "claims" to anything it is pretty certain that he will stand well in the 14th Middlesex Republican Representative convention and it would not be a surprising thing at all if he should capture delegates enough to nominate him for the Legislature.

— Miss Emma Fosdick, the accomplished guitar and banjo teacher of this city, has a card in the JOURNAL this week, to which attention is called. This lady has had great success as a teacher here and in neighboring towns and her classes have increased in size from year to year. The outlook for a liberal patronage this fall was never better. Miss Fosdick's terms for guitar and banjo are moderate.

— Dr. Ephraim Cutter of New York city, whose fame as a medical scientist, specialist and author is not confined to America, is about to open an office on Boylston street, Boston, for the particulars of which the reader is referred to his card in this paper. The Doctor's numerous good Woburn friends will be glad to learn of his periodical professional visits to the Hub and of his proximity in times of need.

— Mr. Elisha F. Hayward has been appointed special agent to collect statistics of manufacturing establishments in this city. To carry out the design of the Bureau fully 160 general schedules and 80 special schedules will be necessary to report on to headquarters, for the information demanded must relate to every kind of manufacture carried on. Mr. Hayward will enter on the discharge of his duties in a few days.

— Mrs. Buffum has taught the polite art of dancing in this city successfully for several years and is very popular both in and out of her profession. She possesses remarkable skill in teaching juvenile classes, which has been her particular forte of late. By reference to our advertising columns it will be seen that Mrs. Buffum will soon open a fall class at the Dow building, which for her is a change of base. Please read her card.

— The concert of the First Congregational Sunday School to be given in the vestry of the church at 7 o'clock next Sunday evening will be one of unusual interest. Supt. Carter names it, "An Evening With Soldiers," meaning an hour's study of some of the Bible Heroes, for which he has arranged a full programme. An address will be delivered by Major W. H. Hodgkins of Somerville on an appropriate theme, besides which there will be recitations, responsive readings, singing, etc. by the pupils, the whole to be under the personal direction of Supt. Carter. The attractive order of exercises, and especially Major Hodgkins's address, will be likely to fill the vestry to its utmost capacity.

— Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Gerrish got back from a three weeks Western trip last Monday well satisfied with all they saw and heard while away. They visited in Pennsylvania; spent some days in the rich and beautiful Blue Grass region of Kentucky; made a considerable stay at the National Capital; and indulged in other halts in their journeyings to and fro. Mr. and Mrs. Gerrish enjoyed the whole trip very much especially the Washington part of it.

— The Reuben Glue Co. gave a rattling old performance at Lyceum Hall last evening to an immense audience that filled the place alow and aloft. The Company give dead loads of the richest kind of fun at comparatively low figures and therefore they never fail to draw houses packed from underpinning to collar-beam. If any of our readers should happen to be at any time within hailing distance of where the Reuben Glue Co. are acting they oughtn't to fail to drop in.

— Mrs. J. H. Parker, the leading modeste in this city, is prepared to give the ladies of Woburn and vicinity the very latest styles in dress cutting and making, in which she is thoroughly posted. Mrs. Parker does a very large business and has for years, and is patronized by the bon ton of this city, Winchester and other neighboring places. Her work never fails to give perfect satisfaction, and the richest and costliest kinds of it always find their way to Mrs. Parker's elegant dressmaking parlors on Salem street.

— There was a pleasant gathering in the parlors of the First Congregational Church on last Thursday evening when Mr. John R. Carter, Superintendent of the Sunday School, gave a reception to the teachers, a large number of whom were present. Tea was served at half past six o'clock, after which interesting papers were read by Mr. Frank B. Richardson, Mrs. D. Wilbur Brown, and Mrs. E. G. Preston. It was a season of rare enjoyment. If he keeps on doing thus Superintendent Carter will grow more popular than ever, if possible, with his school.

— There has been no frost here this fall or any signs of one and yet considerable foliage looks as though it was frost-bitten. Here and there an elm looms like a huge bouquet composed of the most gorgeous flowers; others show less signs of "the hectic of a dying year;" and all about "autumn leaves are falling fast." A theory has been gaining ground of late years that the dazzling brilliancy of the forests and groves in autumn is not due to frost attacks but to the natural decay which overtakes vegetation at the close of the year, and we begin to think the theory isn't far wrong.

— The Globe gives the following as a list of Woburn people who teach school outside of our city. The list is far from being complete, but will do for a starter: Miss Fanny French, Salt Lake City, Utah; Miss Stella M. Haynes, Worcester, Mass.; Miss Annie E. Bancroft, Allston, Mass.; Miss Parthenia Boutwell, Natick; Miss Mina J. Wendall, Somerville; Miss Lena H. Brown, Natick; Miss Sarah S. Waterman, Somerville; Miss Emma L. Wyman, Boston; Miss Sarah C. Fisher, Roxbury; Oliver F. Bryant, Boston; Miss Helen L. Brown, Allston; Miss Emily Perkins, Tewksbury; Miss Effie C. Sweetser, Melrose; George Perkins, Boston.

— The fight last Friday night between Thomas McCarty, the well known pugilist of this city, and Mike Brennan of Montana at Hoboken, N. J., for a purse of $300 was declared a draw at the end of the 10th round. McCarty had the best of it from the beginning to the end, but the referee, Jack McAuliffe, decided it a draw. Mr. McCarty left here about 14 months ago for San Francisco and since then has travelled the greater part of the United States, Mexico and Central America. He started for home immediately after his fight with Brennan and arrived here last Saturday night. He is now staying at Mr. Patrick Nelson's home in Winchester.

— There was held an interesting meeting of the Board of Trade on last Tuesday which, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, was fairly well attended. No especial business was transacted but the members present listened to an informal talk by Leonard Thompson, Esq., on Alaska, Vancouver, etc., from which country he has but recently returned. Mr. Thompson is a careful, intelligent observer and a good narrator, and his theme being one of much interest to people in the East, his talk was very entertaining and instructive. Familiar faces of old stand-bys—James Skinner, F. H. Lewis, Buchanan, etc., were noticed in the gathering. The Board expect to hold some interesting sessions this fall and winter.

— Mr. D. Fuller Appleton entertained a large company of gentlemen interested in the improvement of American dairy products, at Appleton Farm, Ipswich, on Saturday. His guests members were of the American Breeders Association and leading agriculturists and butter makers from all over the United States, drawn together to see Mr. Appleton's butter producer, the famous Essex cow Eurotisania, a member of the Jersey family whose remarkable record has fully upheld the prestige of her race. Among the gentlemen present was Hon. John Cummings of this city who has always manifested a deep interest in the improvement of stock, as well as in agricultural, horticultural and pomological matters.

— Some 75 members of G. A. R. Post 161 and Relief Corps 83 visited the Soldiers Home at Chelsea last Wednesday evening and had a wonderful good time. The company filled two of the East Middlesex street cars which were drawn by 4 horses each. At the home an entertainment was given which included some fine selections by the Woburn Orchestra, songs and readings. After the spread speeches were made by members of the Post, toasts were responded to, anecdotes were related, and music. At the close of an evening frought with the highest enjoyment for them the party re-embarked on the cars and after a pleasant and quite merry drive reached home in the neighborhood of 1 o'clock, a. m. The verdict was unanimous that a pleasanter evening was hardly ever spent by Post 161 and R. C. 83.

— In a private note our California correspondent says: "Hope Ed. Johnson goes to the Senate." It wasn't settled that way but we are in hopes to send him to Congress, which will do equally as well, eh?

— Mr. Samuel A. Grammer has nearly recovered from the injury received from being thrown to the pavement by a big dog the other day and is at his post of duty again. It was a wonder the fall didn't killed him.

— The engagement is announced of Mr. Harry L. Flanders of this city and Miss Victoria Maxwell of Winchester, Mass. Mr. Flanders is proprietor of the principal drugstore in Woburn, President and Business Manager of the Flanders Tonic Company, and one of the most promising young men in this section. Miss Maxwell is a daughter of Mr. John Maxwell of Winchester Highlands, up to a recent date one of the largest and most prosperous leather manufacturers in New England, and at present a heavy real estate and mine owner in the South. She is a young lady of many accomplishments, a favorite in social circles, and has hosts of warm friends who congratulate her on her prospective Hymenial union with so estimable a gentleman as Mr. Flanders.

— We learn from an authentic source that electricity is likely to be introduced on the East Middlesex Street Railway lines at almost any time, and that while the Company might prefer the storage battery system, it is not deemed wise to wait for an indefinite period until this system is proved a success. The trolly system will probably be adopted when a change is made.—Malden City Press. The East Middlesex and North Woburn Companies (the same virtually) will soon be run by electricity. No doubt of that. And we think it will be by the storage battery system which is growing in public esteem with great rapidity. Experiments East and West, especially very lately in the West, prove that the system is equal to all emergencies and is the system of the future. If the Companies above named have any doubts about it they had better wait a few months, in which time additional practical tests cannot fail to convince them that the storage battery system is the one they are looking for.

— The ground selected by the Commissioners for a Public Park and reported on at the meeting of Aldermen last Tuesday evening will meet with public approval, at least we can't see how it can very well be otherwise. The site chosen is the Kimball estate owned by the heirs of the late John R. Kimball, located near Central Square, containing 38 acres, and is unquestionably one of the most desirable spots for such a purpose in the city. It lies between Main and New Boston Sts., is elevated and sightly, and a considerable part of it is at the present time covered with woods. The lot is about 600 feet on Main street, over 600 feet on New Boston street, and is about 2300 feet long between the two. Nature has done a great deal to make it attractive and with what art can do, this city is destined to have one of the most beautiful parks in the county. The negotiations for this fine tract were successfully conducted for the city by Mr. Gilman F. Jones, who generously gave his services for the sake of securing so desirable a spot.

City Government.

ALDERMEN.

Last Tuesday evening the Board held a meeting and disposed of a large amount of important business. All the members were present. The following is a true record of the proceedings:

The Mayor made the following nominations of Ward officers:

Ward 1, Warden, Alva S. Wood; Deputy, Henry F. Davis; Clerk, John O. Ray; Deputy, Samuel W. Metcalfe; Inspectors, Arthur B. Wyman, Dennis C. Walsh; Deputies, Andrew O. Rowe, John J. Ward 7—Warden, J. Warren Ellard; Deputy, James Given; Clerk, William A. Lynch; Deputy, Jeremiah Sullivan; Inspectors, Cyrus H. Mentzer, James K. Doherty; Deputies, Phineas G. Hanson, Dennis Kelley; Inspectors as Ballot Clerks, Franklin Flint, William Breslin; Deputies, William Ellard, James Greeney.

A communication was received from the Park Commissioners relating to the grading and curbing of Hammond Square, and stating that they had no jurisdiction in the matter. Placed on file.

Another communication was received from the Park Commissioners, petitioning for the appropriation of $10,000 for the purchase of the Kimball estate for a public park. They stated that the lot contained 38 acres, and $7,000 was for the purchase of the land and $3,000 for developing it. The communication was referred to the Committee on Finance.

The Superintendent of streets was authorized to lay a concrete sidewalk on petition of George Perkins, in Ward 5.

The City Treasurer was authorized to hire $6,000 for the new conduit to the reservoir.

Louis Obest was granted a junk dealers' license.

The Overseers of the Poor reported for August that 28 families of 108 persons were assisted to the amount of $210.

The Auditor's report gave the monthly balances and showed uncollected taxes to to be as follows. 1888, $113.55; 1890, $6099.12. Adjourned to Tuesday next.

Reunion of the Old 39th.

The Committee of Arrangements selected to provide for and superintend the carrying out of the 24th annual reunion of the gallant old 39th Mass. Regt. in this city next Wednesday have completed their plans for the affair, for the details of which the JOURNAL is indebted to Mr. Abijah Thompson, one of the members. The arrangements have been made on a liberal scale and if the best reunion the Regiment ever had is not enjoyed it will not be the fault of the Committee nor that of our city authorities and people generally.

The Regiment is to be the guest of Company K of this city as it has been on two former occasions of the kind.

The following is a skeleton of the exercises as they have been mapped out by the Committee and as they will probably occur: On their arrival by train in this city the Regiment will form in line and, headed by the Woburn Bass Band, march to Hammond Square and countermarch to G. A. R. Hall, Post 161, when it will come to order, and the annual election of officers take place.

At the close of the business meeting a reception will be tendered to Mrs. General Warren in the parlors of the Y. M. C. A., after which the Veterans, with Mrs. Warren (widow of Major General G. K. Warren commander of the Fifth Army Corps of the Army of the Potomac) and daughter, and invited guests will march to Lyceum Hall and partake of the banquet which Capt. Tay will serve for the occasion.

After dinner there will be speaking by numerous gentlemen including Rev. Daniel March, D. D., Rev. L. Thompson, Hon. J. G. Pollard, Col. W. T. Grammer, Lawrence Reade, Esq., Hon. John Cummings, J. M. Harlow, M. D., and members of the Regiment.

Lyceum Hall will be elaborately and appropriately decorated for the reunion and so also will be G. A. R. Hall in the Savings Bank Block by Gen. Beals, the popular Boston decorator and venerable G. A. R. man, and if the weather should prove favorable this 24th annual assembling of the survivors of the old 39th will be the best of all that have ever been enjoyed.

The Mayor and His Critics.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE WOBURN JOURNAL:—A certain Woburn gentleman, holding a minor office in the city government, with abundant leisure at his disposal has been actively engaged for some time past in circulating fabrication and misrepresentation against Mayor Johnson. For the purpose of poisoning the public mind, the mischief-maker has stated among other things that Mr. Johnson is a "free trader" and a member of Mr. Mendum's select coterie of Cobden Club disciples. The statement is false. Mr. Johnson has not at any time been an advocate of free trade notions but on the contrary has always voted the Republican ticket in State and National elections.

Another charge brought against the Mayor by the aforesaid gentleman of abundant leisure is that he "has attended Irish parties and the exercises at the Patochial School."

In the first place, be it remembered that the man who makes this criticism was himself present as a private citizen at the reception lately tendered a distinguished citizen of Montvale upon his return from the House of Correction, and doubtless enjoyed upon that happy occasion the vituperative remarks hurled at the Mayor by the friends of the returned exile.

In the second place, it is quite true that the Mayor has when invited attended so called "Irish parties." In this he has simply followed the wise precedents set by the Mayors of other cities and the Governors of the Commonwealth, and in his official actions and movements has very rightly and properly recognized no race, religious or class distinctions, but has been Mayor of the whole city.

Acting upon this same principle he attended the closing exercises of the Parochial School last June just as he would have attended any other private or sectarian school of this city whatever its religious teachings, just as, for example, the chief executive of the Commonwealth has attended the commencement exercises of the College of the Holy Cross at Worcester. It may not be generally known, however, that so careful was Mayor Johnson not to have his presence at the Parochial School misconstrued that he frankly stated in his remarks that he did not believe in sectarian schools but was a staunch supporter of the public school system. This sentiment he so reiterated that one of the out-of-town clergy present regarded his whole address as an attack upon the parochial school system and replied to the Mayor with considerable feeling.

There are doubtless other similar criticisms of the Mayor that have not reached the writer's ears. The public should bear in mind that they generally come from someone with a grievance—someone, for instance, whose salary has been reduced or who has failed in securing some appointment to office. All the Mayor and his friends ask is that the facts in any particular case may be known, and then criticism becomes a matter of judgment, not of prejudice and falsehood.

It is just such sinister attacks as have been made against Mayor Johnson that deter many of the best citizens from participation in public affairs and such attacks merit the condemnation of all fairminded persons. H.

Ashley Hall.

A firstclass boarding school has been opened in the spacious and substantial old mansion house of Hon. Benjamin F. Whittemore at Montvale (one mile east of Woburn, Mass., Centre) by Miss Marcia G. Whittemore, daughter of the above named gentleman, and Miss Adaline M. Tirrell, who are ladies of not only rare literary attainments but possess executive and business ability to a degree which warrants the belief that Ashley Hall School (which is the name given it by the young ladies, and a very appropriate one it seems to be too) will prove an immediate and splendid financial and educational success.

A better place for such an institution could not have been found in the suburbs of Boston. The mansion stans in the midst of an extensive lawn, embowered in densly foliaged trees, close by a pretty artificial sheet of water, and contains some 20 spacious rooms admirably adopted to the ends to which Misses Whittemore and Terrill have applied them. The grounds are extensive and will admit of the erection of other buildings—gymnasium, halls for in-door sports, etc.—and are close by Montvale station on the Boston & Lowell Division of the Boston & Maine Railroad, only 10 miles from the State House in Boston, with the street cars of the East Middlesex Street Railway Co. which runs from Woburn Centre to Stoneham, Melrose Highlands, Melrose, Malden, Chelsea, Chelsea Beach, Lynn, Boston, etc., skirting them on the east and making frequent trips, with the finest of cars, each way over the line. The location is admirable for the accommodation of a large and prosperous school, and the estate and its surroundings are as beautiful and attractive as any rural institution of learning can possibly be, and will no doubt exert strong influence in filling it with pupils from all over the country.

The school is intended to be a high class boarding and day school for young ladies, for which the proprietors, Miss Whittemore and Miss Terrill, will employ only the most competent teachers, and to which a thorough education will be given. The curriculum will embraace all the studies taught in the best of colleges, the following being a partial list of the chief: Mathematics, Latin, Greek, History, Literature, Science, French, German, Music (vocal and instrumental), Elocution, Drawing and Painting.

Ashley Hall is destined to become a great credit to the city of Woburn, for which reason and others equally potent, the school should have the hearty support and encouragement of our people.

Fitzgibbon Family.

The celebrated Fitzgibbon Family, who had such a success at Mr. Keith Bijou Theatre in Boston, Philadelphia and Providence, will be at Lyceum Hall, Saturday night, Sept. 20, prices as usual.

Farewell Social.

A social was held in the Congregational church on last Saturday evening for the purpose of giving expression to the regret felt at the announcement of the departure of Mr. and Mrs. William Sentner from among us. Mr. Sentner has served on the Board of Trustees and as Treasurer of the church, as one of the teachers and Treasurer of she Sunday school, and as a faithful member of the society of Christian Endeavor, and as a testimonial of appreciation the three departments united in purchasing for him a life membership in the Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society. After brief literary exercises, refreshments were served in the vestry and a pleasant evening was enjoyed by the goodly number present.—Benicia (Cal.) New Era.

Mr. Sentner and family left Woburn for California a little over three years ago and are now visiting here with a view of remaining permanently perhaps, althoughthat is not yet decided on. Financially it would be for Mr. Sentner's disadvantage to quit Benicia, (where he has been employed at a good salary for three years past) and come to this city again, but relatives and friends are anxious to have him do so, and it would not be strange if he should yield to their wishes. Mrs. Sentner, who is a sister of Mrs. John C. Plummer of Sherman Pl., has another residing at Auburn, Me., and is very desirous of getting back among her relatives. Her relatives are equally anxious that she should come with her family, and the likelihood is that the Sentners will return to their old home here and settle down, although they like California and have many warm friends there.

Attractive HOMES!

How to make home attractive is an art that the ladies well understand.

We can suggest however, that a pair or two of Chenille Portieres add vastly to the looks of a room.

Yes, but we can't afford them just now, perhaps you say.

Wait until you hear the price.

New ones just in, only $4.95 a pair.

They are beauties too.

YOSEMITE VALLEY.

Last October while in San Francisco I made the acquaintance of a party of Philadelphia gentlemen who were preparing for a trip to Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Grove, and gladly accepted their invitation to accompany them. Yosemite Valley is 140 miles from San Francisco nearly due east, in the midst of the lofty Sierras. The name has little appropriateness except as the Valley has been the haunt of the horrible beast for which it stands, for Yosemite is the Indian word for "Grizzly Bear."

We left San Francisco on the morning of Oct. 15, and journied by train to Stockton 100 miles distant where the balance of the day and the next were occupied in securing a guide and procuring horses and the necessary camp equipage for the rest of the journey is made on horseback and atoot. We made an early start next morning with the intention of reaching the Valley in two days, but being all inexperienced horsemen, after a few hours ride we unanimously agreed that 25 miles per day was too much for our horses and governed ourselves accordingly. Our guide, Bil Hopkins by name, an old "forty-niner," was a valuable addition to our party, being thoroughly familiar with every foot of the country in this portion of the State. He proved an interesting companion on the march, but Bill's best hold was at the frying-pan. The way he would dish up partridge and quail (minus pale ale and Welsh rarebit) would put even "Woburn's Delmonico" in the shade. After supper he would light his pipe and entertain us for an hour or two from his inexhaustible supply of yarns and adventures, the strict truth of which I should hesitate to vouch for were it not for the fact that Bill received his early education in the Old Bay State.

On the afternoon of the 3rd day our guide informed us that we were nearing our destination and we soon found ourselves standing upon Inspiration Point looking down into the deep abyss and out upon this stupendous Valley of Valleys. From the edge of this precipice to its foot is 3000 feet, and at that distance down the elevation it is still 4000 feet above the sea level. The main Valley is seven miles long a mile and a quarter wide at its widest point and compprises an area of about 8,000 acres. Two-thirds of this space is beautiful meadow, the remainder is strewn with sand, stones and gravel which have washed down or torn from the enclosing cliffs. Like a river of silver, the river Merced—by the Spaniards called the river of Mercy—gleams here and there among the overhanging trees; a distant view is also gained of some of the beautiful waterfalls with which the Valley abounds.

Descending the cliffs to the Valley it seems beyond the power of human speech to describe the majesty of these mighty walls standing at the foot of the Yosemite Falls. We could hardly believe our eyes; it seems incredible that water should be precipitated from such a height; by official measurement it is more than half a mile, or 2641 feet, from the top to the bottom of this fall. The stream first glides over the edge of a granite cliff and plunges down in sheer descent 1587 feet. There it beats with deafening din upon a huge shelf of rock whence it falls again in a series of grand cascades 700 feet more. Then comes a further final fall of 428 feet, and after this the stream flows off through the meadows beneath the trees, as quietly and gently as if it had not been hurled from such a height or broken by such a fall.

Opposite Yosemite Fall a huge ridge of rock exteuds a third of a mile into the Valley and stands like a buttress against the wall at its back. From this rises a granite obelisk 300 feet thick at its base and 1200 feet high. This is called "Sentinel Rock," from its resembiance to a Watch Tower, for which purpose the Indians are said to have once used it. The entire height of the ridge from the river that flows beneath it is 3034 feet.

Mirror Lake, called by the Indians "Sleeping Water," covers about 8 acres and is nowhere more than 20 feet deep. From the water's edge a mile of massive cliff seems to extend into the lake below, and so perfect in the deception, that it is by no means easy to make sure which is the solid original and which the unsubstantial shadow.

After three days of unbounded enjoyment in this beautiful Valley we "broke camp," and turned our horses heads towards Mariposa Grove of which I will tell you later.

Unclaimed Letters in the Woburn Post Office, Sept. 13, 1890.

When call ng for letters advertised in this paper please state the fact and thereby greatly facilitate the delivery of the same.

Arthur Brown, John Conn, Mrs. Rose Conog, Mrs. J. A. Fowle, Miss Nellie Green, Mrs. T. B. Haines, care of G. Day, S. H. Harwood, Mrs. H. W. Smith, Miss Mary J. Wafer, 16 Canal street, Box 1620, Woburn, Mass.

The strongest endorsement of Mellin's Food is the multitude of healthy, active children who have been reared upon it. It has been thoroughly and successfully tried for years by thousands of mothers.

The New Scandinavian Church.

Mr. A. J. Simonson of Montvale Park, Woburn, has got the contract for building the Scandinavian Evangelical Free church of this city, his bid being the lowest of the four that had figured on the job, or $6,400 for the entire work over the cellar, except the seats. Mr. Simonson is a Scandinavian and has been in this city but two years but during this short time has gained the confidence and respect of all who has had any dealings with him. He has built several buildings in and around Woburn, and all give him credit for good honest work. No inspector is needed where Mr. Simonson has a job to perform. We are glad that the Scandinavian church Building Committee succeeded in getting Mr. Simonson to build their house of worship, for we know that this means that they will have a building that will be second to none, as far as the workmanship is concerned.

The work on the building will commence as soon as the lumber has arrived, which has been ordered from the Woburn lumber dealer Mr. E. G. Barker. How soon the completion of the church will be reached cannot yet be stated, as it depends a good deal upon how liberally the kind people of Woburn and surroundings subscibe towards the Building Fund which is hoped, and has already been shown by some. We like to see it carried through at an early date. This is and will be the best inducement that can be held out for the Scandinavian people to come and make their homes here—by helping them to get a church of their own which is a necessity on account of the language. May our good people heartily respond to this worthy cause. Chas. R. Rosenquist, 7 Greenwood Ave., this city is one of the committee and will be glad to hear from all who are willing to reach a helping hand in favor of contributions.

Mr. Hanson has relations and friends at home who want him to come, and who think he can do fully as well there at his trade.

Mr. Anton Hanson, 10 Allen street, wife and children, will start for Christiania, Norway, tomorrow (Saturday) on the steamship Cephalonia of the Cunard Line.

Several Scandinavians have bought land at Montvale Park this city; a few have erected dwelling houses thereon and a few more intend to do so before long. It bids fare to be a Scandinavian village at Montvale Park.

Rev. C. W. Holm of Philadelphia, Pa. (the first Swedish Minister of the Gospel that visited Woburn, about 8 years ago) visited his old friends in this place Wednesday last, when he also in the evening preached a good sermon in the Y. M. C. A. Hall to a large congregation. The sermon was in the Swedish language.

Several of the Scandinavians, mostly young people who have during the summer visited their old homes and relatives on the other side the great water, have come back together with others who have not been here before. They are pleased to be here once more and will probably stay for good. We give them welcome and would say there is plenty of room for more.

Rev. O. Z. Tinglof, Missionary among the Scandinavians in Mass., had charge of the meetings in the Scandinavian church last Sunday. He gave two very good sermons, and in the evening an unusually large congregation was assembled. The Scandinavian meetings are held regularly every Sunday morning at 10.30 and at 7 P. M., and on Wednesday evenings at 7.30 o'clock in the Y. M. C. A. Hall. All are invited. Services are held in the Scandinavian language.

A country editor said of his rival: "Aside from his beery flights and fancies his paper is pretty good, as it advocates the use of the economical Brussels soap."

Burlington.

The tax collector is distributing the bills.

On all property taxes paid on or before Oct. 1, a discount of five percent will be allowed.

The Fall meeting and Cattle Show of the Agricultural Society to be held Oct. 1, is the principal subject of thought and conversation among our good people just now. The posters and handbills have been widely distributed. The following is the programme of the day.

9 A. M. Ploughing match. Judges—Jonathan Simonds, Charles E. Marion, George Reed.

11 A. M. Coaching parade and display of town industries.

12 M. Trial of market and draught horses.

12.30 A. M. Dinner in the Coliseum.

Tickets 50 cents, now on sale by the committee, George L. Tebbetts, W. H. Winn, Samuel Walker. Post prandial exercises conducted by prominent public men, to be announced later.

3 P. M. Concert by the Woburn Brass Band. At the Town Hall there will be an exhibition of household manufactures, needle work, pictures and historic articles. Mrs. Emma Bennett, Mrs. H. F. Nichols and Miss Emily N. Reed superintend this department. The vegetables and flowers will be exhibited in a tent—Edward Reed, superintendent. To each of these exhibitions the admission is only 10 cents. There will be also the usual exhibition of cattle, horses and poultry.

A local newspaper, "The Burlington Rooster," will be published on the day of the Fair. If very stormy the Show will be held, the next fair day.

The officers of the day are J. F. Rice, Chief of Police; F. E. Ham, Superintendent of Grounds; T. I. Reed, Chief Marshal.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

The Best Salve in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by H. L. Flanders & Co.

"My feet are so slim I never can get a good fit unless I pay quite a high price." Then try Stetson at his well-known store, corner of Hanover and Blackstone streets, and see what he can do for you in the way of a Ladies' fine boot. Goat or Kid for just $2.

"Chipman's Liver Pills

the best in the world. Never gripe or make you sick. They are purely vegetable, and will sure cure your bilious trouble. All who use them speak well of them. Sold by all druggists."

All Others Fall Short.

None can imitate Shakspeare or Milwith success; Edison has no duplicate on earth; American push and individuality have no peer. In other words there are things in this world that can not be successfully counterfeited. And among them must be counted Brussels soap. Though destined to work about the dirt of earth, yet there it fulfills its mission to perfection and with ease. It's economical.

WINCHESTER.

Hose 4 have elected James O'Connor for Clerk, and Felix O'Connor for Steward.

Harry Lunt is desporting himself on the banks of the classic Sabastacook at Newport, Me.

The K. of H. have paid over to the family of the late G. W. Spurr his insurance of $2,000.

The Y. M. C. A. here is in a flourishing condition. The annual meeting for election of officers will be held on this, Friday, evening, Sept. 19.

Mr. William Nelson, who went to Denver, Col. a short time ago, is doing well out there being engaged in a successful business.

Col. "Nat." Richardson has done good work on our roads this season. There are very few men who understand the business so thoroughly as does Colonel "Nat."

A series of Gospel Meetings, under the auspices of the Mass. Advent Christian Conference, is being held this week under a tent on Salem street. There is a service of song and prayer followed by short Gospel sermons every evening at 7.30.

The following delegates were chosen at the Republican caucus last Saturday evening: State, Hon. J. F. Dwinell, F. C. Manchester, W. H. Coolidge; Congressional, J. L. Ayer, E. Hatch, W. H. Herrick; Senatorial, A. C. Vinton, J. W. Sweeney, F. O. Covell; County, George P. Brown, Monroe Brown, J. W. Richardson; Councilor, Fred Joy, J. P. Boutwell, F. V. Wooster; Town Committee, Frank O. Covell, E. H. Rice, F. L. Hunt, Luther Holton.

The following is the programme arranged for a course of entertainments by the Y. M. C. A. for which the price of tickets will be $2.00 for the series:

Oct. 20. Adamoski Quartette of Boston, and soprano soloist (to be announced.)

Nov. 4. Prof. Churchill, Reader and Impersonator, and piano soloist (to be announced.)

Nov. 18. Mrs. E. Humphrey-Allen, soprano, Miss Ella Chamberlain, whistling soloist, V. V. Rogers, harpist, E. W. Emerson, humorist and impersonator.

Dec. 2. Lecture by Wm. Blakie, and Athletic Exhibition.

Dec. 16. Wagner Concert Co. of Boston.

Dec. 30. Illustrated Lecture, J. Nelson Lewis, accompanied by the famous Ladies' Schubert Quartette.

Last Friday morning between 12 and 1 o'clock burglars visited that part of this town known as Cutter's Village. They effected an entrance into the house of Mr. William Cameron, on Salem street, through a window in the kitchen which had been left open, and secured about $20 from a pocket-book of Mr. Cameron's, which was in his trousers pocket in the room where he was sleeping. From the dining room they took a dozen of solid silver spoons, but did not take some plated ones that were with the others. They were then evidentally frightened away by Mr. James Cameron, the son, who, being awakened about that time by the restlessness of his child, arose and lighted a lamp. He then heard a noise but supposed it was occasioned by his father who occupies a room down stairs. A wallet containing $10, which lay on the mantlepiece in the kitchen, was found untouched. Mr. James Cameron always has a loaded revolver handy and he would have made it hot for them if he had known any burglars were in the house. The house of Mr. John McConughy on the same street was also visited, where they stole a gold watch, a diamond ring and a small sum of money. They also made unsuccessful attempts at Mr. Hall's on Salem street, Mr. Henry Winde's on Water street, and Mr. Patrick Dowd's on Canal street. In the latter place they got into the cellar but were frightened away by the barking of Mr. Dowd's small dog. The police were notified but as yet have found no clue as to who the burglars were.

KID GLOVES

Good women and good gloves should be mutually appreciated, so Novalls says, for both are tested by time, and their value depends upon their wearing qualities. This explains why our Five Hook Kid Gloves are such favorites. They are made of a peculiar elastic luxurious feeling kid, correctly fashioned, thoroughly finished, wear like iron, and satisfy their owner. We are going to sell them for a while at 66c. a pair, and the reason for doing so is simply because we are using these hook gloves as a bait to catch your trade. See? They are in Blacks, Tans, Browns and Slates.

LESSON XII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 21.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xix, 37-48. Commit Verses, 37, 38—Golden Text, Luke xix, 38—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

37. "And when He was come nigh, even now at the descent of the Mount of Olives." He was riding upon the ass' colt, according to Zech. ix, 9, thus literally fulfilling one of the last public signs that He was the long predicted Messiah, the Son of David, Israel's king.

"The whole multitude of the disciples began to rejoice and praise God with a loud voice, for all the mighty works which they had seen." They were convinced that He was their Messiah, and, notwithstanding the parable of the last lesson, they thought He would now surely proclaim Himself king, and therefore their joy was most exultant, their praise most hearty.

38. "Saying, Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord: Peace in Heaven and glory in the highest."

39. "And some of the Pharisees from among the multitude said unto Him, Master, rebuke thy disciples." The religious rulers always against Him. The people who ought to have welcomed Him hating every word spoken in His favor. A little later, as the children praise Him in the temple (Matt. xxi, 15, 16), they again find fault. When there was occasion to rebuke His disciples He did not hesitate to do it (Matt. xvi, 23; Mark x, 14), but there was no occasion now. They were not praising any too loud.

40. "And He answered and said unto them, I tell you, that, if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out." John the Baptist told those who came to him not to pride themselves upon being children of Abraham, for, said he, "God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham" (Matt. iii, 9). And as to stones crying out, one of the prophets had said that, because of their sin, "the stone should cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber should answer it."

41. "And when He was come near, He beheld the city and wept over it." Steir says that so in some sense He weeps over all cities. While this may be true, His weeping over this city had a special significance, for this was the city of David, the holy city, the city of the great King, the city which He had chosen to put His name there, that He might be glorified (Matt. iv, 5; v, 35; II Chron. vi, 6).

42. "Saying, If thou hadst known, even thou at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes." Thou—thy day—thy peace; this was Zion that He had chosen, that He had desired for His habitation, concerning which He had said: "This is my rest forever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it," etc. (Ps. cxxxii, 13-18). But by her unbelief she was blinded and knew not her day nor Him who was her peace. To every sinner this same Jesus is saying: "Now is the day of thy salvation." "I am thy peace." But of how many is it so sadly true that "In them the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them" (II Cor. vi, 2; iv, 4; Eph. ii, 14). Blessed are all who can say, I thank God that whereas I was blind, I now see.

43. "For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side." So it literally came to pass in about forty years.

44. "And shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation." So also did it literally come to pass, as He said. And as the same Spirit had said through Micah 700 years before: "Zion shall for your sake be plowed as a field and Jerusalem shall become heaps" (Mic. iii, 12). When we see how clearly events have been by the Spirit foretold, and how literally they have been fulfilled, how can any believer doubt that the thoughts of the Lord shall come to pass, that as He has proposed so shall it stand, and that every purpose of the Lord shall be fulfilled? (Isa. xiv, 24; Jer. li, 29.)

45. "And He went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold therein, and them that bought." The Tabernacle of Moses and the Temple of Solomon were in some respects the most remarkable buildings this world ever saw; chiefly because God alone was the architect of each, and each was made that God might dwell on earth in the midst of His people. Jesus Himself was the true tabernacle and temple, and when the Kingdom comes we shall then see the full significance of each. They were never intended to be places of merchandise, but rather places where God might reveal Himself to His people, and where they might draw near and worship Him. The whole company of believers is now the living temple of God on this earth, in which He desires to reveal Himself to men; but the Church is largely given up to providing entertainment and amusement for the people, rather than inviting them to the blood and water, and bread and light and incense of God's salvation, cleansing, food, heavenly fellowship. Every individual believer is also a temple of the Holy Ghost, and it is His pleasure that we should cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God (I Cor. vi, 19; II Cor. vii, 1). When the New Jerusalem shall have come down from God out of Heaven we shall see more clearly.

46. "Saying unto them, It is written, My house is the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves." In Isa. lvi, 7, the reading is: "Mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people." And the context refers to strangers joining themselves to the Lord to serve Him and love His name. One of those references to the flocking of all nations to Israel when once the Lord shall have come again to dwell in their midst. It is the exaltation of Jehovah that shall draw the nations; not the desecration of His temple. Take the Church of today and, instead of taking up the time with entertaining the people and providing food and delicacies for the body, let the time be given to earnest waiting upon God in prayer for the outpouring of His Spirit and the revelation of Himself as a God of salvation, and then He would be glorified and all worldliness would be crowded out by His presence and the manifestation of His power.

47. "And He taught daily in the temple. But the chief priests and the scribes and the chief of the people sought to destroy Him." The next two chapters will give us some of His teachings during these days, but it is more fully recorded in Matt. xx, 25. He exposed their sin, their heartlessness of their ceremonies, foretold more fully the coming judgments, and made many references to His return in power and glory. But as far as the chief of the people, either in civil or religious matters, were concerned, His teaching fell on deaf ears and hearts full of hatred for Him and His teachings.

The Pulpit and the Stage.

Rev. F. M. Shrout, Pastor United Brethren Church, Blue Mound, Kan., says: "I feel it my duty to tell what wonders Dr. King's New Discovery has done for me. My Lungs were badly diseased, and my parishioners thought I could live only a few weeks. I took five bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery and am sound and well, gaining 25 lbs. in weight."

Arthur Love, Manager Love's Funny Folks Combination, writes: "After a thorough trial and convincing evidence, I am confident Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, beats 'em all, and cures when everything else fails. The greatest kindness I can do my many thousand friends is to urge them to try it." Free trial bottles at H. L. Flanders & Co.'s Drug Store. Regular sizes 50c. and $1.00.

Says the Philadelphia Times: "From many quarters, especially from physicians, come reports of a wide-spread renewal of symptoms similar to the grip. Business men and others are compelled to go to bed and undergo the most rigid treatment, and altogether the prevailing ailment seems to be something much worse than an ordinary bad cold."

A PROFESSIONAL BACKSTOP.

How a Baseball Catcher Should Train for His Season's Work.

The training of the catcher has in it less variety, and is in consequence far more tedious than that of the pitcher. The work of strengthening the muscles of the shoulder and arm is the same as that described for the pitcher; but in the throwing practice the catcher should devote his attention to the shortarm throw. He should begin at the short distance of perhaps fifty feet, and increase that distance very gradually. In fact, he ought, even when he can readily throw the full distance from home to second with comparative ease, to do most of his throwing at two-thirds that distance. After the nine has begun to work in the field it is not advisable for the catcher to throw to second anything like the number of times the majority of amateurs attempt daily. Only after the nine has been out of doors for two or three weeks is so much of the full distance throwing safe for any catcher who wishes to have his arm in good condition.

The position of the feet in throwing is all important. If he be a strong man of moderate weight he can and should throw without changing the position of the feet. To this object his gymnasium practice should be devoted. Standing steadily upon his feet in the exact position assumed at the moment of catching the ball, he should, with a slight swing at the hips, be able to send the ball down. Throwing in a cage with a low ceiling is the best thing possible for him, as it forces him to throw hard and on a line.

A point of catcher's practice, which does not enter into the work of the pitcher, is that of toughening the hands. Rowing on the machines, climbing the rope, swinging on the flying rings and handball, if there are any courts for that excellent game, will all tend toward this end. He should consider, however, that it is not merely toughening the skin of the hands that is desirable, but also hardening the flesh so that it is not easily bruised. For this reason he should "pass ball" without gloves regularly every day.

At the outset he should receive no swift balls, and should stop at the first feeling of anything beyond a moderate tingling of the palms. His hands should receive their full preparatory hardening before he goes out into the field, for ordinary carefulness demands that he should do no catching behind the bat after the season commences except with hands thoroughly protected by well padded gloves. What is called a stone bruise is one of the tenderest and most lasting mementoes of carelessness in this respect. In his gymnasium practice he should wear the mask. This seems to most catchers a useless bore, but the captain or coach should insist upon it, and the mask should become almost a part of the catcher himself. All his throwing and catching should be performed with his eyes behind its wires, in order that, from becoming thoroughly accustomed to it, it may add no inconvenience to his work.

The breastplate need not be so rigorously insisted upon, but even this should be worn frequently. The right hand glove must always be worn when practicing throwing, in order that this also shall offer no unusual difficulty in the later work. Many a catcher may think that it looks silly to stand up with a mask and glove on to throw at a mark; but there is every reason for doing this, and he will himself appreciate the value of such practice when he stands accoutered on the field behind the batsman and with a runner on first.

As often as it is convenient the catcher, particularly if a novice, should have some one swing the bat before him while he is "passing ball" in the gymnasium. By the time he gets out of doors he should be thoroughly accustomed to the close proximity of the batsman.—Walter Camp in St. Nicholas.

The Material of Dumas' Stories.

For the backgrounds of his stories Dumas went naturally to the epoch of intrigue, his mots de la fin would not easily have come from the bars of a helmet in the rougher older days; it is the thrust of the rapier he loves rather than the downright blow of the heavy sword, the coup d'estoc rather than the coup de taille. His is the true drama de cape et d'epee, as the French have always called it, and his dialogue is its exponent—the cloak to dissimulate, the sword to attack and defend. The whole epoch of Louis XIII and of Mazarin was mask and dagger, conspiracy and duel. Dumas leads us among a gilded dramatis persone; he loves a noble, and though he distrusted princes the royal blood was never quite a common ichor to him. His artist side responded eagerly to the picturesqueness of the court.—E. H. and E. W. Blashfield in Scribner's.

Apparent Idleness.

Sometimes apparent idleness is only a change of work. George Lewes was one day dredging a roadside pond, putting all the living treasures he found into a glass jar.

"What are you doing?" inquired a sneering bystander. "Fishing for salmon?"

But when he saw what strange beings were discovered in that unpromising pool his interest was excited, and he asked Mr. Lewes many curious questions, all of which were patiently answered.

"Ah," said the scoffer respectfully, at the end of the interview, "it's a fine thing to be able to name all God's creatures."—Youth's Companion.

A Valuable Discovery

Dr. Brown Sequard's elixir of youth may be an important discovery, but every one knows that Dr. Franklin Miles' New Heart Cure certainly is. It has given thousands afflicted with serious heart disease a New Lease of Life. Druggists who can observe its effects on many customers eveywhere speak very highly of it. Mr. John Weaver, of Knightstown, Ind., says: "I have sold much of Dr. Miles' New Cure and have received many good reports." O. Monroe, of Dunkirk, N. Y., reports large sales. "And the best part of it is every bottle has given satisfaction. Sold by Charles H. Buss.

Teacher—Johnny, in the sentence, "The audience cheered the tennis players loudley," you may point out the absurdity. Johnny—"There isn't any absurdity, ma'am." "Are you sure? What is the meaning of the word 'audience?'" "An assembly of hearers." "Exactly, And do persons hear a game of tennis?" "Yes'm. They hear the racket."

A PREVALENT DISEASE.

Ten Symptoms Peculiar to Churchgoing Members on Wet Sundays.

When preachers hanker for a rest the flock can hardly be condemned for doing likewise. With the mercury traveling above the 90 mark the inducements for churchgoing are hardly as strong as when the temperature is more moderate. And when the regular shepherd is taking in ocean or mountain breezes the part of the flock which by necessity is compelled to stay by the stuff can readily find excuses for absence from church when a strange preacher fills the pulpit. What with camp meetings, watering places and hot weather the stay at home preacher meets with slim congregations, as a rule, during dog days.

There are not a few churches in this city of which a large proportion of the membership are absent from the city during the months of July and August. Some churches take advantage of the summer lull to clean and renovate. It has come to be understood that the pastor is to have his rest at this season of the year, and most of the churches stipulate this when the bond is made. In the line of absenteeism from church services the following is suggestive: "The attack comes on suddenly every Sunday; no symptoms are felt on Saturday night; the patient sleeps well and awakes feeling well; eats a hearty breakfast, but about church time the attack comes on and continues until the services are over for the morning."

Then the patient feels easy and eats a hearty dinner. In the afternoon he feels much better and is able to take a walk, talk politics and read the Sunday papers; he eats a hearty supper, but about church time he has another attack and stays at home. He retires early, sleeps well and wakes Monday morning refreshed and able to go to work, and does not have any symptoms of the disease till the following Sunday.

The peculiar features of the disease are as follows: 1. It always attacks members of the church. 2. It never makes its appearance except on the Sabbath. 3. The symptoms vary, but it never interferes with the sleep or appetite. 4. It never lasts more than twenty-four hours. 5. It generally attacks the head of the family. 6. No physician is ever called. 7. It always proves fatal in the end—to the soul. 8. No remedy is known for it except prayer. 9. Religion is the only antidote. 10. It is becoming fearfully prevalent, and is sweeping thousands every year prematurely to destruction."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Proper Way to Study Europe.

Among the renovating forces of my later years I must name three seasons of European travel and sojourn, each of them when I was in special need of rest and relaxation. I returned each time with the feeling that I had thrown off a full half score of the years reckoned as mine. I was between fifty and sixty years of age when I first went abroad, and I have been glad that I first saw Europe so late in life. What a man gets by foreign travel depends on what he carries with him. He finds answers only to the questions which he is prepared to ask, and the longer he lives the more numerous are the interrogations which he has in his mind to put to and concerning the places and objects that he visits. Then, too, the power of enjoyment as to whatever is grand or beautiful grows, or ought to grow, with one's years, and a lake or mountain, a palace or cathedral, a picture or a statue, is more, means more and tells more to a man of 50 than to a man of 25.—Professor A. P. Peabody in Forum.

Lemon Squeezer.

One of the best lemon squeezers ever invented has just been patented. It is designed especially for hotel keepers, and others whose business includes that of making lemon squashes and similar drinks. It is worked by the foot, and can be operated quickly and easily. It consists of a sliding bracket containing a cup for the lemon and a superlying stud for pressing the same, a glass fitting underneath. Pressure is made by the foot on a treadle, to which is attached an iron rod, the other end of which is connected to the sliding squeezer. Care has been taken in the design to avoid all sharp edges, and the cups are made of the hardest ironstone china, and extra thick to avoid all risk of breakage. The cost is stated to be less than that of the screw presses now in use, and the speed with which the squeezer can be manipulated and its simplicity are excellent recommendations.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

A Farm Without a Whip.

There is a beautiful farm just back of Ocean Springs, Miss., owned by Mr. Parker Earle, who, very wisely, allows no man on the place to use a whip on any of the stock. It is said that there is but one old whip on the farm, probably a relic of some other owner, but the old whip is not used, and the farm does well and the animals work with a will and never feel the lash. Kindness can run anything, even a farm.—New Orleans Picayune.

Modern Heroes.

"There are just as many heroes and heroines now as in any age before," says a Cleveland paper, "but the opportunities for exhibiting acts of heroism are somewhat scarcer." That's entirely correct, unless a young lady wants to pick up the broom and give her old mother a rest, or a young man dares face a crowd with his pants bagging at the knees.—Detroit Free Press.

Forced To Leave Home.

Over 60 people were forced to leave their homes yesterday to call at their druggists for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicines. If your blood is bad, your liver and kidneys out of order, if you are constipated and have headache and an unsightly complexion, don't fail to call on any druggists to-day for a free sample of this grand remedy. The ladies praise it. Everyone likes it. Large size packages 50 cents.

The Dominion experimental farms are said not to be very helpful to agriculturists. On the contrary, they have a discouraging effect. When a farmer of moderate means visits one of these farms he sees a large number of dwelling houses, barns, stables, etc., erected at enormous cost. He sees valuable horses, a large staff of men, and "fancy farming" on a large scale. He concludes that if such costly luxuries are necessary in order to make farming pay, he cannot afford them, and he gives up agriculture to try something else.

Not Half Warm Enough for Him.

"Warm!" he said, putting on a heavy pair of gloves and buttoning his light overcoat, "you don't call this warm weather, do you?"

"Do I call it warm?" said the other, mopping his brow and trying to fan himself at the same time, while his face grew redder and redder. "I call it gridiron heat."

"Pooh, pooh, my dear fellow; the mercury isn't above ninety-two."

"Ninety-two!"

"And it hasn't been above a hundred more than once this year."

"Shades of all the Icelanders!" cried the red, fat man, "what would you like to have it—135 in the shade? Would you like to boil eggs in the public fountains? Do you want foundries to run their furnaces without fire? One hundred! Do you want to sizzle and vanish in steam? One hundred!" he screamed in shrill, agonized tones, and he danced around madly in his wrath until his face was of flaming scarlet. "One hundred! Why, man, haven't you got any blood in your veins?"

"Oh, yes," said the other, shivering as a warm breeze touched him, "but I have 40,000 tons of ice cornered."

And then the little stout man fell in a swoon, and an ambulance carried him to the hospital, where he was recorded as suffering from prostration by heat, while the ice king went home to order the servants to put more coal on the fire.—New York Tribune.

Telegraphing in Africa.

That the conduct of a cable station is not always monotonous is shown by a letter recently received from an officer of the West African Telegraph company. This gentleman is in charge of the Kotonou station, in the territory of the notorious King of Dahomey. The king, it seems, had for some time been spoiling for a fight, and had at last become so ugly and aggressive that it was deemed advisable to arm the station, and have some soldiers handy. "Early one morning the station was surrounded by the natives," the superintendent writes, "and we were under the painful necessity of sending a few of them across the Styx. The station was for a time in imminent danger; Orsini and I fired more than 250 rounds each, and the thirty-five Senegalese sharpshooters who helped in the defense fired some 120 rounds apiece. An artillery sergeant who worked our two guns was killed, and the white gunners were so hard pressed that they had to club their rifles. This racket began at 4 in the morning.

"At 9 a. m. we left the soldiers still firing and went to the instruments, and you may imagine what a dance the mirror led us. By 10 o'clock, however, all was quiet in our neighborhood and the messages had all been sent through. I must not forget to tell you that we had to do with the famous Amazons. They were very fine creatures, fought like wild beasts, and were worth ten men."—New York Sun.

A Self Inflating Life Saving Belt.

In nautical circles a newly patented life saving belt is attracting much attention. This new apparatus clasps around the body at the waist line, and in its empty condition is easily carried. To this girdle is attached a little iron flask, which contains carbonic acid or carburetted hydrogen gas, the former mixed with from 10 to 20 per cent. of pure alcohol in order to prevent the chilling of the gases when filling the flask. The hollow space in the belt has a capacity of a little less than 100 English quarts. Two hundred grains of fluid carbonic acid gas and twenty grains of alcohol are required to fill it. When the belt is to be used a conveniently placed valve is opened and fills at once with light gases. According to scientific principles 100 liters of gas will displace the same amount of water; that is to say, will support in the water a weight corresponding to 100 quarts, or, in other words, about 200 pounds. Any human being equipped with the girdle has every prospect of success in a combat with the waves.—New York Journal.

Of Course She Regretted It.

On one of our suburban streets resides a lady who has a passionate fondness for plants and flowers, and many of these can be seen in the windows, which almost overhang the sidewalk. Sunday evening I happened to be strolling along the street in question, and noticed that the gentleman preceding me wore an almost supernaturally brilliant tile. As he passed Mrs. F——'s house one of the windows happened to be up and a present plant was dislodged. The flower pot was attracted by the shiny tile, and lit on it with a resounding thump, that sounds so funny when it's some other fellow's hat and so sad when it's your own. The gentleman under the crushed stovepipe ejaculated some words certainly not from the book under his arm, and passed on. Soon Mrs. F—— rushed out and said: "It's too bad—the only double geranium I had."—Bangor News.

Poison In Eels.

Eels contain as much poison as vipers, according to one studious Italian scientist. After careful investigation he finds that an eel weighing four pounds possesses enough venom to kill ten men. When the fish is cooked, however, the poison loses its power.—Chatter.

"Have you boarded long at this house?" inquired the new boarder of the sour dejected man sitting next to him. "About ten years." "I don't see how you can stand it. Why haven't you left long ago?" "No other place to go," said the other, dismally, "the landlady's my wife."

Mr Isaac H. Edgett of Beverly, First Assistant to Secretary Pierce, is named by his friends as a suitable successor. He has an honorable record of service in the war.

Misleading Street Car Signs.

A victim of the ingenious system of misdirection by signs upon the street cars has related to me his adventures in making an economical transit across the city. His itinerary consisted of a trip to the New York and New England railroad station, where he was to pick up a gripsack and umbrella left at the parcel room in the morning, and thence to take a train out of town on the Eastern railroad. This was to be done at the small cost of ten cents, by availing himself of the admirable facilities in the way of street car transportation. He tells me that he first boarded a car on which the name of the New England railroad station was prominently displayed, and sat in peaceful confidence until he found himself in the neighborhood of the Maverick bank, when a question put to the conductor drew out the information that the route named on the sign board of the car would not be followed until "some time in the fall."

He took a herdic and thus made his first station. Securing his gripsack he thought himself fortunate in finding a car just passing whose signs told that it was on its way to the "Eastern depot." When some point in the South Cove was reached he learned from the conductor, on inquiry, that if he should get out and walk to the next block he would find a car going in the opposite direction which would take him to his destination. He then hired another herdic and managed to catch his train. —Boston Post.

Paid Off in His Own Coin.

A remarkable case of "diamond cut diamond" occurred in Boston recently, not far from the Providence railroad station. A druggist had fitted up a neat corner store and had established at once a fine trade. One day another druggist entered his store and said: "I want to buy you out. How much will you take?" "I do not want to sell," was the reply. "I expected that answer," said the encroaching person, "and I am prepared for it. Now, if you don't sell out to me I will open a drug store in opposition on the opposite corner. How much will you take?"

The druggist, offended at this species of browbeating, said he would sleep on it and report the next morning. At the appointed hour the aspirant was in the store and a large price was named. The bargain was bound. The druggist who had been thus ousted from a corner which he had fitted up with a view to years of peace and profit sought the owners of the opposite corner which had been held out to him as a threat, secured from them a long lease, worked night and day, and now has a drug store in which any community might take satisfaction and repose confidence. What is more, he is doing a better business than he did in the former locality. —Boston Saturday Gazette.

A la Mother Goose.

The Nawab Vicar ul Omrah recently tendered a breakfast at his magnificent new palace near Hyderabad to the English viceroy of India and his staff.

Whether he borrowed an idea from Mother Goose or his imagination was inspired by the same muse that inspired her we cannot know, but certainly appreciation is due him for making "a true story" of that fascinating rhyme about the "four and twenty blackbirds baked in a pie." It all happened at his breakfast.

"Large, but not suspiciously large, cakes were handed around," writes one of the guests. "As they were opened a little amaduvad, or wax bill, flew chirping out of each and alighted on the flowers and shrubs with which the table was covered or flew about the room.

"There were sixty guests, so that when the pies were opened no less than sixty birds began to sing."

Changes in the "Big Dipper."

One of the most notable examples of the constant and yet almost imperceptible changes taking place in the heavens is to be found in the motion of the seven bright stars collectively known as the big dipper. Huggins, the noted astronomer, is now engaged in proving that five of these stars are moving in the same direction, while the other two are moving in a direction directly opposite. Prof. Flammarion has reduced Huggins' calculations to a system, arranging them upon charts. These ingeniously constructed heavenly outlines show that 100,000 years ago the "Dipper" stars were arranged in the outline of a large and irregular shaped cross; and that 100,000 years hence they will have assumed the form of an elongated diamond, stretching over three or four times the extent of sky now occupied.—St. Louis Republic.

An Ancient Bank Note.

Mr. Barber, an antiquarian of West Chester, Pa., has recently come into the possession of a Chinese bank note of the Fourteenth century. It is a note of the Ming dynasty, made of fibrous paper of a grayish color, covered with Chinese characters. The owner says there are but two other specimens of these early bank notes in existence, one being in the Imperial museum at St. Petersburg, Russia.—St. Louis Republic.

A Split Ear.

The curious case is mentioned by a German doctor of a man who experienced unpleasant crackling noises in the left ear during a period of a year and a half. These occurred every few seconds, and could be heard by any person at a distance of a foot. There was no deafness or inflammation, but the drum was found to have a split in it through which air was forced by the act of swallowing.—Arkansaw Traveler.

The Democratic papers are now very busy deciding that the Original Package law is not constitutional. Happily, the duty of deciding upon the constitutionality of laws is devolved, not upon Democratic press, but on the Supreme Court of the United States, and that tribunal gave its opinion in advance upon the effectiveness of the remedy applied in the bill in question.

The Niagara River is to be tunneled at the falls for the development of a power. The tunnel will be more than a mile and a half long and will pass directly under the village of Niagara Falls.

Woman's Column.

Wyoming—"A Crowing Success."

When stout-hearted Oliver Cromwell won a victory in a fight with the kings troops, he called it, in his quaint way, "a crowning mercy." England then saw but faintly the blessed and far reaching results of those victories.

So we today see but faintly the still more blessed and greater results which will follow the greatest "crowning mercy" of our century—a victory won, not by push of pike or stroke of sword, as Cromwell's Ironsides won his battles, but

"With the mild arms of truth and love
Made mighty by the living God."

Womanhood has won in Wyoming. It is the beginning of the end of a long struggle. That end will be that in every State in our Union, in every government of the world, woman will stand beside man as helpmeet and law-maker and co-worker, and

"The world will be better for it."

No millennium will come, but a great upward step has been taken, opening the way for other steps to surely follow.

We want arbitration to take the place of that great "duel of nations" which men call war. We want the saloon—the curse of our civilization—to be swept away. Woman must help to these and like good ends.

It is said that for years past in Wyoming bad men, of whatever party, have stood but poor chance of election to office. Woman helped in this hindrance; let her give like help elsewhere.

The tide sets toward justice as the only true expediency. We need not be perplexed about superiority or inferiority. Manhood and womanhood are unlike in such a way that each needs the other. "It is not good for man to be alone" is as true in our State as it was in Eden. Equal rights, equal opportunity, mutual helpfulness, and one common welfare is the highest wisdom and noblest courtesy, and the world is moving that way.

Intelligent Englishwomen, who have voted for years in municipal affairs, will be glad that their sisters in the far West have still wider rights. Amelia B. Edwards, the gifted English lady whose lectures on Egypt were heard by such great audiences in this city, said to a lady here: "I wonder that all American women are not equal suffragists." In every European country, noble women and true men will rejoice. In distant Hindostan, Pundita Ramabai and her oppressed sisters will feel the thrill of a new hope. Changing the poet's words, we may say:

"When this deed is done for freedom,
Through the broad earth's thropping breast
Runs a thrill of joy prophetic,
Pulsing Eastward from the West."

Our good land has had leading part in favor of national arbitration. The admission of Wyoming as a State—the first true Republic in the world, with equal rights for men and women in its organic law—set us in the forefront of the Nations for other wise and beneficent movement. Let those become American ideas, a part of the "righteousness which exalteth a nation."—Giles B. Stebbins, in Detroit Tribune.

Specimen Cases.

S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was troubled with Neuralgia and Rheumatism, his Stomach was disordered his Liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured him.

Edward Shepherd, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O., had five large Fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured him entirely. Sold at H. L. Flanders & Co.'s Drug Store.

A Noted Doctor Who Was Shy.

Abernethy, an eminent London surgeon of the last century, was noted for his independence and for his indifference to people of rank and wealth. A certain nobleman once presented himself at the surgeon's office and without waiting for his turn demanded to see Abernethy. He was refused, and when it came his turn he entered the consulting room in great anger.

"Do you know who I am?" he asked.

"No, sir!" was the cool reply, "but I am John Abernethy, surgeon, and if you wish to consult me, I am now ready to hear what you have to say in your turn."

Yet this man, so indifferent to lords and ladies, when he had to lecture before several hundred medical students was often painfully embarrassed. As he was about to begin he would be obliged to retire in order to collect his thoughts. The consciousness of his great reputation, and the anxiety to stand well with the students, made him shy.—Youth's Companion.

Judge Simpson

Of the Superior Court writes: From mental exhaustion, my nervous system became shattered, and I was utterly unable to sleep nights. Sulphur Bitters cured me, and my sleep is now sound, sweet and refreshing.

Hold It To The Light.

The man who tells you confidentially just what will cure your cold is prescribing Kemp's Balsam this year. In the preparation of this remarkable medicine for coughs and colds no expense is spared to combine only the best and purest ingredients. Hold a bottle of Kemp's Balsam to the light and look through it; notice the bright, clear look; then compare with other remedies. Price 50c. and $1.

Over Wild Bill's Grave.

There has been another red letter day in the history of Deadwood. That was the day on which Wild Bill was killed by McCaull. Though a popular man, Bill was a dead shot, and McCaull could not have killed him if he had not approached him treacherously. McCaull was immediately locked up, but the excitement became so great that a mob assembled for the purpose of trying, convicting and lynching him. While the proceedings were in progress the clatter of hoofs was heard and a man on horseback appeared riding at full speed with his reins in his teeth and with a rifle in one hand and an Indian's dripping head in the other. He had shot and killed the Indian just outside of Deadwood, and the event was considered of so much importance that the crowd forgot its lynching and proceeded to gratify its thirst for vengeance by contemplating the glory trophy which rolled at its feet. McCaull was afterward taken to Yankton, where he was hanged by the neck in a lawful manner.

Wild Bill was buried in the old cemetery with a rude white board at his head, but five years later some of his friends exhumed the body and gave it proper burial in the new cemetery on Mount Moriah. It was reported at that time that Wild Bill's body had turned to stone, and a man came here not long afterward and offered the undertaker $15,000 if he would help him steal it for purposes of exhibition. Since then there have been many inquiries about the case, but no one believes that the body was petrified. Bill's new grave on the mountain top shows that it is the resort of many curiosity seekers. A path is worn across lots to it from the main wagon road, and the white headboard has been whittled away by relic hunters until it resembles a big toothpick.

One man appears to have worked a knot out of the board, and the ground all about the well beaten grave is covered with cartridge shells. There are frontiersmen, it appears, who show their regard for Bill's memory by standing upon his grave and emptying their revolvers into the air, throwing away their cartridge shells as they reload. The other day the city marshal found it necessary to run in one of these fellows, who had done little else for a week except shoot his revolvers over Wild Bill's grave. The man appeared to have a genuine regard for the dead man's memory, and as he submitted to arrest he expressed his sense of the outrage in most forcible terms.—Cor. Chicago Herald.

Great Discoverers.

What Bell and Edison are to the telephone and electricity, says the Pittsburg News, Dr. Franklin Miles, the well-known specialist in nervous diseases, is to the nervous system and nerve fluid. Among his numerous discoveries the Restorative Nervine is undoubtedly one of the greatest. It is unsurpassed in nervousness, dyspepsia, headache, epilepsy, neuralgia, backache, melancholy, sleeplessness, change of life, etc. Free trial bottles of it may be had of Charles H. Buss, Druggist. All should read his "New and Startling Facts for the Afflicted," a very able, interesting, and finely illustrated book. Free to all.

An Untimely Discourse.

A man 60 years old was married recently in a small German town to a woman ten years his senior. The "youthful bride insisted upon having a great wedding, with the addition of a "special" marriage sermon from the lips of her beloved pastor. The groom after useless protestations, assented to the wishes of his future better half. His feelings, however, can be imagined more easily than described when the pastor began his sermon with the text, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."—New York Tribune.

Pimples on The Face cured. Sulphur Bitters will cure the worst case of skin disease; from a common pimple on the face to that awful disease scrofula, it is the best medicine to use in all cases of such stubborn and deep-seated disease. Do not delay; use Sulphur Bitters and drive the humor from your blood.

A Tuscarora (Nev.) newspaper prepares the young mind for the coming of a new school principal by the remark that "the official's teaching weight is about two hundred and twenty-five pounds avoirdupois, which, under certain conditions, might be made to approximate a ton."

Why continue the use of irritating powders, snuffs, or liquids Ely's Cream Balm, pleasant of application and a sure cure for catarrh and cold in head, can be had for 50c. It is easily applied into the nostrils, is safe and pleasant, and is curing the most obstinate cases. It gives relief at once.

The proprietors of Ely's Cream Balm do not claim it to be a cure-all, but a sure remedy for catarrh, colds in the head and hay fever. It is not a liquid or a snuff, but is easily applied into the nostrils. It gives relief at once.

A woman who died lately at St. Martin, near Montreal, at the age of 92, was married when 13 years old, and had 17 children, 145 grandchildren and 286 great grandchildren. Her living decendants number 393.

"KATIE'S WORK."

HOW A GIRL SAVED A MILL.

"Hurrah!"

The door flew open with a bang as Phil Payson burst into the little room where his mother and his sister Katie sat sewing, his face flushed, his eyes shining, and his cap swinging high over his head.

"Why, Phil!"

"Give three cheers, mother. Dance like a dervish, Kate! I'm going to be night watchman in Mr. Medway's mill, at fifteen dollars a month. Oh, mother, ain't you glad?"

"Very glad, indeed," answered Mrs. Payson, and for a moment she looked pleased enough to satisfy Phil's highest expectations. Then her face clouded.

"But your school, Phil, dear; I can't have you leave that."

"I don't mean to, mother," said Phil, earnestly. "It's all fixed just right. I'll study nights—it will help keep me awake, you know—and Miss Cary is going to hear me recite every afternoon at five o'clock. She offered to, mother. Oh, mother, do say you're glad, really!"

Mrs. Payson pulled her tall boy down and kissed him tenderly on both glowing cheeks. As for Katie, she was literally on tiptoe with delight. She was a little brown gypsy, with dark eyes full of fire and fun.

"Good for Miss Cary," she cried, twirling lightly around on her toes. "Isn't she just splendid?"

"She is very kind," said Mrs. Payson, smiling; "and I am glad, Phil, more glad than I can tell you. How came Mr. Medway to give you the place? It is a very responsible position, you know."

"Yes," said Phil, and he blushed and hung his head. "Squire Deems recommended me, mother. Mr. Medway said he told him I was a very trustworthy boy. I'm sorry I said such hard things about him."

"I'm sure he deserved it," Katie flashed forth, "for advising mamma to 'put us out'—that is just what he said—when—papa—went away, and offering to find good homes for us. The idea! What would a home be without mamma? and what would she do without us, I'd like to know?"

"What, indeed!" echoed her mother. "I can't tell, Katie. But Squire Deems thought he was acting for the best. He has been very kind all through our trouble, and I am sure it was his influence that procured Phil this situation."

"But it's mean for Phil to do it all," argued Kate. "I wish I could do something."

Phil wrinkled his nose at his sister and laughed.

"I'm the man o' this house," said he. "You and mother are ladies, Katydid. I don't mean you shall do much more sewing for people."

"My fifteen-year-old man," said his mother, laughing, too; but there were tears gathering in her eyes.

And Katie dimpled and then relaxed into swift gravity.

"I know what I can do, Phil," she said, going close to her brother. "I can hold up your hands the way that somebody in the Bible did. I can see the mill from my window, and every night—every night, Phil, before I go to sleep, I shall ask God to take care of my brother; and every time I'm awake I shall look down at you, so you needn't feel lonesome."

"Something of the guardian angel style?" laughed Phil, trying to joke away the moisture he felt creeping into his eyes. "You're a trump, Katie; but of course that's all nonsense—the looking out, you know."

Katie wasn't sure of that, however, and she meant to do just as she said if it were. She would feel as if she were somehow helping Phil, and that would be a comfort.

Their little dwelling, though on the same side of the river as the mill, was above it and around a wide bend; and so the long, low structure under the river bank was in plain view from the window of Katie's little chamber. She kept her word faithfully; and once or twice every night she would creep out of her warm nest to the window and look down across the bend to the mill. Often, not always, she could see Phil's light shining out of the engine-room, and sometimes she watched it go from window to window as Phil went his hourly rounds over the mill.

As for Phil I am sure that, though he would hardly have acknowledged it, the lonely place where his nights were passed seemed far less lonely to him when he remembered that Katie might at any minute be looking from her window and thinking of him.

So a month passed by, and Phil performed his duties to Mr. Medway's entire satisfaction. There were some, indeed, who considered him much too young for his post and did not hesitate to say so. But Mr. Medway always answered with a smile:

"Well, Squire Deems recommended him and guaranteed I wouldn't be sorry I hired him. I've tested him all times o' night; he's always wide awake and about his business. He does the work of a man and I get him ten dollars on a month's hire less."

Which was very true, and Mr. Medway ought to have blushed for it, though, to be sure, Phil was more than satisfied with what he received.

He kept well up with his classes, too, he was so ambitious. Miss Cary declared she was proud of him to Katie, and Katie's heart swelled with joy to hear it.

One day early in March something happened. Mrs. Payson was taken suddenly and violently ill. Katie, terrified beyond measure, could do nothing but rouse Phil from his sleep; and when the boy, startled by his sister's white, scared face, had brought the doctor, he felt as though he could never sleep again.

There was no great cause for alarm, however.

"It's a bad attack of cramp," Dr. Daley said, with a reassuring smile in Katie's direction. "You're doing just right. Apply hot cloths and keep them hot. The spasms will ease away in a little time."

It was not until nearly nightfall, nevertheless, that Mrs. Payson became perfectly free from pain and quite herself again. Then Phil, light-hearted enough, and whistling a merry air, took up his lunch-basket and his books and trudged off to his work. Katie, troubled, followed him to the door.

"I'd get some one else tonight, Phil," she said. "You have always been used to sleeping all day. What if—"

But Phil laughed, and opened his dark eyes to their utmost. "I'm as wide awake as an owl," said he. "I couldn't go to sleep if I wanted to. See!"

Katie laughed, too, at the comical, strained expression on Phil's face. But she couldn't help feeling a little anxious as she went slowly back into the house. Suppose Phil should go to sleep, and Mr. Medway have a notion to visit him, as he often did, Katie knew, what a sad thing it would be for them all, and how dreadfully Phil would feel!

"It would just break his heart, I know," said she to herself. "But of course he won't."

Katie's prayer for her brother's welfare was much longer that night than usual; and, once in bed, she tossed and tumbled, only to fall at last into an uneasy slumber. More than once before the little clock on the sitting-room mantel struck ten she sprang to the window, gazed down across the wide white river bend, only to see Phil's lamp beaming cheerily in the engine-room. How Phil would laugh at her if he knew, she thought, feeling really out of patience with herself.

"I won't look out again," she said. "It's nonsense, just as Phil said. I will not look out again tonight."

But she did—once more. The lamp in the engine-room still burned steadily. It would have been a relief to see the light flashing from window as she had seen it often, Katie thought. She could feel sure then that all was right. Now—

Was that the lamp? It flickered strangely. One instant it died into the ghost of a light, and the next it flared brilliantly. Katie rubbed her eyes in wondering terror. It was no illusion; the light shining from the engine-room window was not clear, steady lamplight. It was red—like fire!

Katie was already hurrying on her clothes. There was a dreadful lump in her throat, and her breath came in short, quick gasps. She did not pause for her boots with their endless rows of buttons; she pulled on her stockings and rushed swiftly out of her room and down stairs, catching a shawl from the hall stand as she ran. Behind the kitchen stove hung a pair of Phil's thick woolen stockings and these she pulled on over her own. There was no question in her mind as to the course she would take. It was more than half a mile by the road to the mill; across the river bend it was less than half that distance.

The late rains had swelled the river and overflowed its banks, but the bridge was still there, even though many of the country people had begun to think it unsafe. Katie did not doubt for a moment but that it would hold her light weight, and over it she flew. She thought that it creaked and swayed under her, and she fancied herself breaking through once or twice, but on she sped, her large dark eyes strained and fixed on that flaring red light. It seemed hours to her before she reached the mill. She had been there before to take Phil his lunch once when he had forgotten it, and she knew the way perfectly well. In at the dark, yawning door she darted, and up two or three narrow steps. There was smoke in the air—surely.

She opened the door of the engine-room, and closed it hastily behind her with a quick, shrill cry of dismay.

"Phil!" Oh, Phil!"

For the room was full of smoke. Through it the lamp-light showed pale and dim. Little tongues of flame were running over the floor before the furnace, lapping up a shaving here and there, and crawling snake-like, up the wall very near the window. And Phil sat by the rough table, his face buried in his arms, asleep—so sound asleep, and so stupefied by the smoke that Katie's first cry failed to arouse him.

She screamed with all her might and shook him then.

"Phil! dear Phil!" she cried. "Oh, —fire!"

It all happened in a very little time. That one last word shrieked in Phil's ear awoke him effectually. He understood the situation, and sprang to his feet. Don't whistle!" cried Katie, catching his arm. "Don't rouse the town, Phil. We can put it out."

They fell to work then with a will. After all it was not much of a battle. There were pails and an abundance of water at hand, and the fire was not really under headway. The flames, though widespread, had not begun to burn through the solid floor, which was soon thoroughly flooded. In a few minutes it was all over, and Phil had opened the window. He turned to Katie then, who stood pale and trembling, as she had not trembled before.

"Oh, Katie!" he cried, chokingly, "how did you—"

And Katie told—or tried to tell him; but long before she had finished she was crying hysterically around his neck.

"Oh, Katie darling, don't. Don't Katie."

The door opened at that moment. Phil knew who stood there before he heard Mr. Medway's voice.

"Heyday! What's all this fuss about?"

"There has been a fire, sir," answered Phil readily, though with a shake in his voice. "But it is out now."

Mr. Medway stepped into the room without another word, and taking up the lamp proceeded to examine the wall, the floor and the furnace itself carefully.

"Gibbs must look after this a little in the morning," he said; and he placed the lamp on the bench again, while Katie and Phil stood by with sinking hearts. Suddenly he looked at Phil's sister. "Why, what are you here for?" he asked, not unkindly.

Ah, how easy it would have been not to tell him—to say that Phil was lonesome and wanted her for company; to say anything but the dreadful truth. But Katie's honest little nature abhorred a falsehood.

"I—I—he was—I—" she stammered, with painful pauses. "I—"

But right here Phil came bravely to the rescue.

"I was asleep, Mr. Medway," he said, "and if it hadn't been for Katie your mill—"

"Asleep!" repeated Mr. Medway, his face stern and cold.

It was an awful moment, and Katie ended it by springing forward and grasping Mr. Medway's hand.

"Oh, if you please," she cried, "may I tell you how he happened to do it? Mamma was ill, and he could not sleep at all yesterday. It was not his fault, sir—indeed it was not. Poor Phil! Oh, sir—"

Mr. Medway was not all a hard-hearted man, though perhaps a little too intent on his own particular interests. His voice was husky when he spoke to Katie.

"How did you happen to see the fire?"

"Why—I—I—"

"She looks out of her window a dozen times a night to see that I'm all right," said Phil, with brusque earnestness; "and she prays for me before she goes to sleep. That's how, Mr. Medway. Oh, Katie, little sister!"

"Well! well!" said Mr. Medway, who seemed to be having a great deal of trouble with his throat and eyes. "Well! well!" And he was silent for what seemed to Katie and Phil a long, long time.

"I suppose I needn't—needn't come here again," Phil mustered courage to say, presently.

"Not come again?" echoed Mr. Medway. "Why not, boy? Of course you'll come again, every night." He put his hand on Katie's head. "And I'm going to pay you a man's wages after this, remember. A boy with a sister like yours ought to be encouraged. I'm pretty sure you won't let this happen again."

And he slammed the door behind him.

"Oh, Phil!"

"Oh, Katie!"

They went home in the morning early, and Mrs. Payson heard the story of the night's adventure.

"Twenty-five dollars a month, mother!" cried Phil. "Think of that! And it's all Katie's work, every bit."

But Mrs. Payson, thinking, too, of Katie's work, shuddered and drew them close, and kissed them both.—Harper's Young People.

Photographing a Bird in Its Nest.

Mr. John Watson, at a meeting of the Kendal Natural History society, described the manner in which he had been able to procure a photograph of a woodcock sitting on its nest. He was walking in the neighborhood of Arnside, a village on the shore of Morecambe bay, and observed one of the birds on its nest, which was placed in an open situation. He watched it for some minutes, and wished that he had some means of transferring the picture to paper. He shortly afterward fell in with a friend who fortunately had with him his camera. In the course of an hour and a half, during which the bird sat as if unconscious of their presence, they secured four negatives. A picture of the nest and eggs, after the bird had been driven off, was also obtained—New York Tribune.

100 Ladies Wanted

And 100 men to call on any druggist for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicine, the great root and herb remedy, discovered by Dr. Silas Lane while in the Rocky Mountains. For diseases of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys it is a positive cure. For constipation and clearing up the complection it does wonders. It is the best spring medicine known. Large size package, 50 cents. At all druggists'.

Actors Need No Intellect.

M. Got, the doyen of the French theatre, sheds some original light upon his profession. He says: "You ask me if a comedian requires intellect in order to succeed. None whatever. I would go even further, and say that the less intellect he has the better he will get on. Actors without intellect—and heaven knows there are plenty of them—rush forward without fear, full of self reliance, while if they were intellectual they would be continually afraid that their interpretation of such and such a character was wrong, and fearful of having made a mistake would lose their confidence. Speaking broadly, therefore, it is best that the actor should not be possessed of a great intellect. Many artists are in exactly the same position. For my own part I know many sculptors and painters of real talent who outside their own line are as foolish as geese."

Eupepsy.

This is what you ought to have, in fact, you must have it, to fully enjoy life. Thousands are searching for it daily, and mourning because they find it not. Thousands upon thousands of dollars are spent annually by our people in the hope that they may attain this boon. And yet it may be had by all. We guarantee that Electric Bitters, if used according to directions and the use persisted in, will bring you Good Digestion and oust the demon Dyspepsia and instal instead Eupepsy. We recommend Electric Bitters for Dyspepsia and all diseases of Liver Stomach and Kidneys. Sold at 50c. and $1.00 per bottle by H. L Flanders & Co., Druggists.

Henry C. Wilson, a stable keeper at Kansas City, has been indicted for planning to kidnap the children of wealthy parents, conduct them to a secret place in some distant State, and keep them there until their ransom should be paid. A man whom he took for an accomplice weakened when the first child was to be taken and exposed the scheme.

Marvellous Endurance.

The vast amount of labor performed by the heart in keeping all portions of the body supplied with blood is not generally known. It beats 100,000 times, and forces the blood at the rate of 168 miles a day, which is 3,000,000,000 times and 5,150,880 miles in a life time. No wonder there are so many heart failures. The first symptoms are shortness of breath when exercising, pain in the side or stomach, fluttering, choking in throat, oppression, then follow weak, hungry or smothering spells, swollen ankles, etc. Dr. Franklin Miles' New Heart Cure is the only reliable remedy. Sold by Charles H. Buss.

There are always 3,500,000 people on the seas of the world.

Why Is Popular.

Because it has proven its absolute merit over and over again, because it has an unequalled record of cures, because its business is conducted in a thoroughly honest manner, and because it combines economy and strength, being the only medicine of which "100 Doses One Dollar" is true—these strong points have made Hood's Sarsaparilla the most successful medicine of the day.

The Montana Republicans were emphatic in their approval of the Harrison Administration and in their demand for the enactment of the Federal Elections bill. It is a vigorous and uncompromising type of Republicanism which prevails out there.

If Your Skin

The Woburn Journal

FRIDAY, SEPT. 26, 1890.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

All Advertisements, to insure insertion in this paper, must be handed in as early as 10 o'clock on Thursday forenoon.

REPUBLICAN TICKET.

For Governor, ... J. Q. A. Brackett
For Lieut. Governor, ... William H. Haile
For Secretary of State, ... William M. Olin
For Auditor, ... J. H. Gould
For Attorney-General, ... A. E. Pillsbury
For Treasurer, ... George A. Marden
For Congress, ... James A. Fox

FOR REPRESENTATIVE TO THE GENERAL COURT.

Mr. Samuel A. Grammer of this city is a candidate for the Massachusetts House of Representatives from the 14th Middlesex District and the chances are strongly in favor of his nomination and election. If the forthcoming District convention adheres to the compact made by Republican agents of the towns when they were legislated into a Representative District, which was that each town should be entitled to a candidate each year, as will probably be the case, then Mr. Grammer's nomination is assured, and his election will fellow almost as a matter of course.

The JOURNAL need not undertake to tell the people of either Woburn or Reading who Mr. Samuel A. Grammer is, nor what sort of material he is made of. He was born and bred in Woburn and has spent his life within her borders. He is known in all the region round about here as an intelligent, honest, upright man and useful citizen, and no person enjoys the esteem and confidence of his fellow-men in larger measure than he does. Nor has he ever been an office-seeker.

Mr. Grammer is popular with all classes. He will command the entire Republican strength of the District and draw heavily from the Democratic ranks. There is probably no Republican in Woburn who would receive more, and very few as much, support at the polls as he. Everyone knows just where to find him; he has never made a secret of his political principles; he is outspoken on the temperance and other moral questions; and still no man has fewer enemies than Grammer.

A majority of the delegates to the convention are already pledged to support Mr. Grammer, and if Reading Republicans put up a candidate equally acceptable the District will be represented the next Legislature by two Republicans instead of two Democrats.

WILL NOT BE A CANDIDATE.

Representative Charlie A. Jones, Esq., of this city has been importuned by leading and influential Republicans and Democrats to accept another term in the Legislature but he positively declines to do so.

Mr. Jones filled the place admirably at the last session. He is a good business man and carried practical ideas into his official conduct. Thus his course was eminently satisfactory to men of both parties who like to see business methods prevail in the law-making brauch of our State government. That is the reason why they have been to Mr. Jones and repeatedly urged him take a re-election.

But he declines peremptorily to allow his name to be used in the nominating convention. This is to be regretted for he is the right man for the place.

The demands of his private business is the reason given by Mr. Jones for refusing to yield to the solicitations of leading citizens and be a candidate again this year.

CONGRESSIONAL CONVENTION.

The Republican Congressional Convention for the 5th District was held at Wesleyan Hall in Boston last Tuesday and resulted, on the 15th ballot, in the nomination of James A. Fox, Esq., of Combridge. If the opposition had massed their forces against him he could not have prevailed and some other gentleman would have carried off the prize.

Mayor Johnson was handsomely supported by his friends and, for a beginner, made a strong showing in the convention. He was perfectly satisfied with the support he received.

Now, gentlemen, shall the Cambridge ex-Mayor be triumphantly elected in November?

☞ The Republican District Committee for the 14th Middlesex Representative District are: William E. Blodgett, George C. Conn and Charles F. Spear, all of Woburn; and F. W. B. Pratt and Gilman F. Parker, both of Reading. The convention has not yet been called.

As Woburn did so much better by candidate Bancroft last year than Reading did (Bancroft is a citizen of Reading) it would be no more than fair for Reading to let Woburn have both candidates this year.

☞ Since the Peabody Press had the good sense to abandon a semi-weekly issue and return to a weekly it has become altogether a better newspaper. It looks well and reads well and is worth a dozen of weak country attempts at metropolitan journalism.

— Sunday was a delicious day and several others equally delicious followed it. The autumn weather so far, rain excepted, has been all that the heart could ask for.

— Mr. Phil K. Richardson has been appointed to fill a vacancy on the Board of Registrars of Voters caused by the resignation of George C. Conn, and he will make a good one.

— A gentleman up at No. Woburn wants the JOURNAL to ask if it is possible to pickle peppers so that they will retain their sharp, pungent qualities. Don't all answer at once.

— The Fitzgibbons family sang to not more than two dozen people at Lyceum Hall last Saturday. It was too bad, for the troup is a fine musical combination and deserved a full house.

— But precious little fruit of any kind has been raised around in these parts these part this season. The quantity is almost nix and the quality of what little there is is nothing to brag on.

— Miss Pollard's contribution to the columns of the JOURNAL this week makes good reading and will be found valuable as a guide to patrons of our Public Library who seek the best books.

— The official report of the Census Bureau shows the population of Woburn to be 13,491 instead of 13,440, which was Chief Wadlin's estimated figures. Might as well call it 13,500, and done with it.

— Last Tuesday we were favored with a pleasant call from Mr. Parker Wheeler of Bellingham formerly of Somerset County, Maine, who was making a business trip through these parts. As an old townsman we were glad to see him.

— Mr. Elmore A. Pierce of Woburn, associated press reporter for that city, has been nominated as Representative to the Legislature. He is a remarkably brilliant man and would most creditably represent the District. —Winchester Star.

— Mrs. E. C. Colman, the mistress of Woodside, is visiting her old home and many friends at East Wilton, Franklin County, Maine. She will be away several weeks, during which period the master of the place will drag out a miserable existence keeping "bachelor's hall."

— Mr. J. B. McDonald and his son Mr. Fred McDonald left here last Tuesday evening for Grovetown, N. H., where the Weston Lumber Company, of which the senior McDonald is President, are building a saw-mill of double the capacity of any now owned and run by them which is demanded by the increase of their lumber manufacturing business there. The Company have had built for the new mill a 300 H-P. engine and a 350 H. P. boiler and all the machinery will be of the very best.

— Mr. Sparrow Horton's new store at 412 Main street, College (Wade) Block is going to be a nice, neat and snug one. The location is better than the old one, easier of ingress, handy to everything, and right where it can't help but catch the transient people who want to buy. The change is a good one.

— The American Library Association were royally entertained in Boston last week by a few leading Boston publishing houses. They were given a banquet, a sail down the Harbor, and had other attentions paid to them. Mr. W. R. Cutter, Librarian of the Woburn Public Library, was one of the guests.

— The JOURNAL Book and Job office is complete in all its appointments and has the reputation of turning out as fine work and as much of it as any printing establishment in Middlesex county. It is fully supplied with presses, all the latest styles of type, stock and men to use them, and gentlemen, your work is respectfully solicited. —tf.

— It is reported that Representative Moreland will not under any circumstances be a candidate for re-election to the House this fall. We had supposed it would be otherwise, but there are good grounds for saying that if he is nominated he will certainly refuse to accept. The truth is, Mr. Moreland don't want the place and will have no more of it for the present at least.

— A wonderful bargain in a Bookcase is offered by Paine's Furniture Co., 48 Canal street, Boston. The price is only $10, and the Bookcase has five wide shelves, carrying 175 to 200 volumes, with brass rod and brass polished rings for curtain front. Above the Bookcase is a charming cabinet with side openings, and a broad top with a gallery on three sides. It is really a $20 Bookcase for $10.

— The report of the failure of Mr. C. E. Smith, the painter, wallpaper merchant, etc., which was current last week, was totally without foundation. The story grew out of the failure of a painter by the name of Smith in some other town. Our Mr. Smith is doing a bigger and more prosperous business than ever before. He employs a large number of workmen and pays them promptly, as he does all other debts. Not much failure there.

— Who should drop in on the Editor's family last Tuesday but Solon Kendall, Esq., for many years an Illinois neighbor and friend. He has been in the East since early in August and is about to return to Kansas City near where he has been stopping some time. Up to a year ago Mr. Kendall had been a Trustee of the Illinois Reform School at Pontiac continuously for over 20 years and is a gentleman who has hosts of friends in the West. We were glad to see him.

— Mr. E. C. Cottle is putting new machinery and power into the Blake tannery recently bought by him and intends to do a large amount of manufacturing there. He will carry on a bigger business than ever and increase his pile accordingly. It is reported that Mr. John K. Murdock contemplates putting in a tannery plant to supplement his currying business, which two items taken together give the impression that there is "money in leather" about these days. It means too a better general trade in this city this fall than we have had for some time past.

— Relief Corps 83 have organized a Sewing Society for the benefit of the cause. It is a sort of revival of the old fashioned Sewing Circle (sometimes called Dorcas Society, sometimes the Good Samaritan, etc.) and is generally regarded one of the best things there is to promote social intercourse and the welfare of the needy or the collection of funds, in the community. The old Sewing Circle used to be the butt of senseless jokes before days of telegraphs and daily papers for their propensity to circulate news; but all that is passed away, and the Sewing Society of this later day is not by any means amenable to such charge.

— The alterations, changes, improvements and furnishings of Mr. C. M. Munroe's store are completed and a finer one can't be found in Middlesex county. New electric light and gas fixtures of the brightest brass have been put in; the show windows will be lighted each by a string of incandescent electrics on brass arms which not only afford a brilliant illumination but are ornamental and set the windows off in good shape. New tables for goods from Paine's celebrated furniture establishment in Boston have been put in; there is a plenty of counter and shelf room; the store is admirably lighted in back and front; and there is no reason why Mr. Munroe shouldn't be a reasonably happy man.

— "Chas. Erin Verner" the well-known Irish Comedian will appear at Lyceum Hall, Monday, Sept. 29. Read what the Boston Herald says: "There was a large audience in the Howard last evening, and it thoroughly enjoyed a good performance of that interesting play 'Shamus O'Brien,' given by Mr. Charles Erin Verner, supported by Miss Katherine Walsh and a carefully selected company. Mr. Verner is a favorite with Howard patrons and he was given a very enthusiastic reception. The play is one of the best of its class and improves upon acquaintance. The engagement is for one week only, and will prove profitable." Seats now on sale at Horton's Bookstore, 412 Main street.

— Mr. J. P. Clark of this city has the sale by subscription of Stanley's "In Darkest Africa" in Woburn and Winchester and is doing firstrate. He canvassed Winchester first and had his expectations in the matter of subscribers exceeded by 40 percent, and it is not at all unlikely that his sales here may be equally encouraging. The reason of this is that every intelligent person wants to read Stanley's great book on Africa and the narrative of his years of wanderings, deprivations, dangers and almost death in that darkest spot on earth in search of Dr. Livingstone and making scientific explorations. It is a wonderful story, and the book containing it can be procured only by susbcription of a regularly constituted agent which Mr. J. P. Clark is one. Whoever wants the work should see the gentleman and put his name down for a copy at once.

— The new officers of the W. H. S. Battalion are: Major, Irving R. Bancroft; Adjutant, Elliot F. Trull; Quartermaster, George Barker. The officers of Company A are: Captain, Edwin K. Porter; First Lieutenant, Frank S. Ellard; Second Lieutenant, Patrick D. Carney. The officers of Company B are: Captain, J. Chester Hanson; First Lieutenant, Frederic Hovey; Second Lieutenant, Walter L. Dodge. About 90 men compose the Battalion, a dozen or so of whom are members of the Grammer schools, the balance being High School pupils. Samuel W. Mendum, Assistant Principal of the High School, was elected Drillmaster at the election of teachers in July last and is doing good work it is said. He obtained his military training in the Boston Latin School chiefly and is well versed in the science of military tactics. The W. H. S. B. is the 6th in the Second Mass. School Regiment. It is composed of a sturdy set of lads this year.

— After two years of hard and persistant effort Postmaster Reade has succeeded in securing an early morning mail for this city from Boston. Heretofore the first mail received from the Boston Dis. office has been towards 8 o'clock in the morning, but hereafter, beginning on Oct. 1, the accommodation train which leaves Boston at 6 a. m. and arrives in this city at 6.30 a. m. will bring all mail matter lying in the metropolitan office at that hour destined for Woburn which will give our people their mail an hour earlier than heretofore, for the letter carriers will start that much sooner from the office and the office delivery will be ready for business at an hour correspondingly early. This is a valuable concession on the part of the Postoffice department, for securing which the credit belongs to Postmaster Reade. Another good thing which he has accomplished is an order for the mails from the north to be left here instead of being conveyed to Boston and from thence sent back to Woburn. Why such an idiotic practice was continued after the trains from the north were sent via the Woburn Loop is beyond the comprehension of the average citizen; but Mr. Reade has secured a reform and hereafter our mails from the north will be thrown off here instead of going to Boston, being assorted there, and sent back to this city. These changes are improvements and will be duly appreciated by the public.

City Government.

COMMON COUNCIL.

The Board of Common Council held their regular meeting on last Friday evening, with President Thompson and members McGowen and both Beggses absent.

Councilman Alex Grant of Ward 3 presided and City Clerk Moreland acted as Scribe.

After the transaction of a very little business the body adjourned to the evening of Sept. 25.

ALDERMEN.

There was a special meeting of the Board of Aldermen Tuesday evening, all the members except Place being present. A communication was received from the School Committee, which stated that that body had voted to request the City Council to build a schoolhouse in the vicinity of Central Square, as soon as possible, in order to accommodate the large number of pupils in that part of the city; and also stated that a subcommittee, consisting of Messrs. Trull, Kenney and Carter, were chosen to confer with the Council, and asked for a hearing. Referred to Aldermen Goddard and Kenney. George C. Conn resigned as a registrar of voters, and the resignation was accepted. His Honor nominated and the Board confirmed Philip K. Richardson as Mr. Conn's successor. Leave to withdraw was voted on the matter of the petitions of W. H. Bartlett and others, and Levi Furbush and others. The Ward officers nominated by the Mayor were unanimously confirmed. Alderman Goddard offered the following order: That Chapter 16 of Ordinance 1 be amended by the addition thereto of an additional section to read as follows: "For the prevention of fire, every building hereafter erected on any lot of land fronting on that portion of Main street, in the city of Woburn, which lies between Salem street and the track of the Boston & Lowell Railroad Corporation, south of High street, shall be of brick or stone, iron or other substantial and incombustible material. Any person violating the provisions of this ordinance shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100." Referred to the committee on ordinances.

S. S. Concert.

Last Sunday evening Superintendent John R. Carter prepared a feast of fat things for the Sunday School of the First Congregational church in this city in which he was aided by Assistant Secretary George C. Conn. The exercises were held in the large lecture-room of the church which was filled to its utmost capacity with the good people of the place.

The literary and musical repast was called "An Evening with the Soldiers of the Bible," and seldom if ever has a course of exercises of this kind been more highly enjoyed at the Congregational church. The parts were filled and carried through in the best of shape by the Superintendent and pupils, and the address by Lieut. Edward Mills of Arlington was particularly good. But the programme will tell the story much better than our Faber No. 2 can possibly do it, therefore here is the

What a "Good Time" They Had!!

ED. JOURNAL: A pleasant party of pupils from one of the upper Grammar grades of this city visited the Massachusetts Reformatory at Warnerville last Saturday, the 20th of Sept. A most delightful and profitable time was spent. Through the kindness of Superintendent Tufts the boys and girls were conducted by a courteous official to every part of the great building.

The industrial instruction, conducted in such a marked spirit of kindness throughout this Institution, is most commendable and in no part of this broad land is there a better institution of Christian principles put into practical operation than in this Reformatory throughout its entire management. The beauty and extent of well-kept grounds, the brilliant glow of the autumn flowers, made the young people forget that the seven hundred and thirty inmates were indeed prisoners and that by them the majesty of law had been trampled upon.

As we rode away in the September afternoon glow we thought how much better after all is Prevention than Reformation.

Dirt flees before Brussels soap like a grasshopper before the advance of a yellow-legged chicken.

Reunion of the 39th Massachusetts Regiment.

Last Tuesday was a gala-day in this city. Out of respect for the occasion it was made a sort of semi-holiday by the people and trade was partially suspended. Music, flags, marching, banqueting and oratory comprised the chief features of the order of exercises.

It was the 24th annual reunion of the 39th Massachusetts Regiment of Volunteers. The Regiment were the guests of Company K of this city, who on two former occasions have done the honors of host in a manner highly to their credit and to the satisfaction of the other Companies. Co. K are generous entertainers, as they were brave soldiers on the field of conflict.

The weather was just as glorious as any weather could possibly have been, and when the Veterans arrived on the 10.15, a. m. train they found genial sunshine, bracing autumn breezes, a splendidly decorated city, and many open hearts and hands to give them welcome to Woburn. They were a fine looking body of men and there seemed to be nearly as much elasticity in their step when marching through our streets as there was when, nearly 30 years ago, they left their Northern homes for Southern battlefields to put down the great Rebellion.

The Regiment were met at the train by Company K and the Woburn Brass Band and escorted to G. A. R. Hall, Post 161, where they formed for the parade. At 10.30 the line left headquarters and marched through Main street, to stirring martial music by the band, to Hammond Square; then countermarched to the Hall and broke ranks. Following the column of Veterans were carriages containing clergymen and men of prominence, and large crowds of people reviewed the procession and listened to the music from the sidewalks.

Immediately after the arrival of the Regiment at Post 161 G. A. R. Hall the annual business meeting of the Association and election of officers for the ensuing year took place. The companies composing the Regiment have their homes as follows: A, Peabody; B, Dorchester; C, Medford; D, Quincy; E, Somerville; F, Taunton; G Roxbury; H, Boston; I, Natick; K, Woburn. The Regiment were mustered into service at Lynnfield, where the 25th reunion will be held in 1891, and went to the front in 1862 Woburn raised one whole Company of 100 men, which however was changed somewhat by the addition of a few Boston men.

The officers of the 39th Regimental Association elected for 1890-91, were: President, Charles G. Brett; Vice-President, Edward P. Miles; Treasurer, Samuel H. Mitchell; General Regimental Secretary, Major Charles H. Porter; Executive Committee, G. F. R. Hosea, Charles B. Currier, J. F. French. The usual memorial resolutions were passed for those who have dropped out of the ranks since the last reunion in which the widows and orphans of the deceased Comrades were feelingly remembered. After these matters were disposed of and an ineffectual move was made to change the plan of holding the annual reunions the meeting adjourned sine die.

Waiting in the finely decorated parlors of the Y. M. C. A. for this and the Veterans up stairs in the hall to assemble below to join in the reception were Mrs. Warren, widow of the late Major General G. K. Warren, the brave and distinguished Commander of the Fifth Army Corps of the Army of the Potomac, and daughter, Mrs. General Pierson, whose husband was the Regiment's first Lieutenant Colonel; Mrs. Cummings, wife of Hon. John Cummings of this city, and Mayor E. F. Johnson and lady, to whom the Regiment gave a reception as their honored guests on this occasion. The introductions, which were made by President Abijah Thompson of the Association assisted by Colonel Porter, began about half past 11 o'clock and by the time the 166 members of the Regiment, citizens, members of the City Government, etc., had given the hands of the ladies hearty shakes the hour was getting close on to dinner time. General Warren was the idol of the old 39th as well as every other Regiment and every man in the 5th Corps, and his memory is cherished above that of any other of the gallant souls who led the Army of the Potomac, with hardly the exception of General McClelen himself.

In the morning and during the parade Mrs. General Warren and daughter, Mrs. General Pierson, Mrs. John Cummings, Mayor Johnson and lady, and some prominent citizens, were the guests of Dr. John M. Harlow and lady at their pleasant home on Main street. Mrs. and Dr. Harlow had had General Beals put some of his best decorative touches on to the handsome house which gave it a patriotic and very attractive appearance, especially when their distinguished guests had assembled on the broad verandas to receive and acknowledge the salute of "the boys" as they passed. The hospitable host and hostess also gave an elegant repast to their company, the invitations to the same including members of the local and Boston press. At about 1 o'clock the party left Dr. and Mrs. Harlow's residence for the parlors of the Y. M. C. A. where the hour for the reception had been fixed at 11.15.

Here Comrades pressed forward to grasp the hands of the wife and daughter of their old Corps Commander, to receive a pleasant word from Mrs. and Gen. Pierson, and give a bow of recognition to the other honored guests. The scene was one of great interest. President Thompson and Col. Porter performed their duties admirably.

At the close of these pleasing ceremonies the members of the Regiment circulated around among each other, tendering warm greetings, cementing the fraternal ties that bind them so closely together, indulging in a pipe of tobacco here and there, making ready for the excellent dinner which Capt. Cyrus Tay, himself a Vet, was preparing for them in Lyceum Hall. Before the dinner line was formed however, by invitation, the members assembled on the steps of the Armory and had their photographs taken en group as a souvenir of the 24th annual reunion of the 39th Regiment Association and the warm greetings which they received at the hands of their whole-souled Woburn Comrades.

About 1 o'clock the line was formed when with lively step to a rattling martial air by the band the Association and their invited guests marched to Lyceum Hall for dinner.

But right here something should be said concerning the decorations of the city in honor of the occasion. Flags were flying all day from the Liberty-pole, Armory, Municipal Building and school houses, and they made a very pretty appearance. There is nothing more inspiriting to a well regulated American mind than floating bunting with the Stars and Stripes emblazoned thereon. It always strikes a patriotic chord in the Yankee heart, and so it did last Wednesday. General Beals, the famous Boston decorator who decorated the Hub inside and out for the great G. A. R. encampment last month, and who, it is everywhere acknowledged, has no peer in his line of work in New England, assisted by a corps of competent artists decorated the city for this reunion and it was never done so handsomely and tastefully before. The buildings which were given to him to make as beautiful as possible regardless of expense were Lyceum Hall (interior and exterior), G. A. R. Hall of Post 33, G. A. R. Hall of Post 161, Municipal Building, Postoffice, building of Richardson Brothers, and Dr. John M. Harlow's residence. These were all done in the highest style of decorative art. On the exterior of the buildings were mottoes of welcome, patriotic sentiments, and appropriate quotations, and on the interior of Lyceum Hall these wordings, were numerous. On all the buildings too there were pictures of soldiers, of camp, field and other war scenes, of patriotic achievements, and deeds of loyalty. There were spread eagles in gold, streamers, festoons of starry flags, "Old Glory" in assorted sizes and all sorts of positions, giving everything a military hue and making everything look gay and bright and beautiful. General Beals made the most of his carte blanch and let himself clean out on his decorative work for the 39th in this city that day. The interior of Lyceum Hall never before began to approach in beauty and fitness of decorative design and execution in a condition on last Wednesday. Its appearance elicited many encomiums on General Beals's taste, judgment and most excellent work, and everybody was pleased with it.

The dinner was a supurb one. Capt. Tay was given full swing and he produced a repast worthy of the occasion and the gallant old "boys in blue" whose well whetted appetites were appeased by the abundance of choice viands set before them. Mayor Johnson and lady and the City magnates were honored guests and sat at the head of the tables. Rev. Daniel March, D. D., was Chaplain of the Day, hence was given a seat of eminence. Mrs. General Warren and Miss Warren, Mrs. General Pierson and Mrs. Honorable John Cummings, President Abijah Thompson and Colonel Porter, members of the city government, Gen. Charles L. Pierson and lady, Hon. John Cummings, the Veteran War Democrat and Soldiers Friend "Uncle" William B. Harris, Rev. Leander Thompson, City Clerk Moreland, Postmaster Lawrence Reade, Dr. John M. Harlow and Mrs. Harlow, Hon. J. G. Pollard, Mrs. L. A. Turner, and other distinguished guests and Comrades, sat at well laden tables on the stage, while the long and equally well laden tables in the body of the Hall presented one of the most stirring spectacles that the reporter has been privileged to look on for many a long day.

Lyceum Hall was filled with old soldiers, public functionaries, clergymen, distinguished citizens, orators, reporters, musicians, etc., and a birdseye of the scene from the galleries (occupied by many lady spectators) was one that a person would not be likely to soon forget. The general remark was that a finer, more intelligent, or sturdier body of men than those of which the remnant of the old 39th was composed it would be hard to find anywhere in New England or out of it. And one would have been impressed with the idea while viewing the great crowd through his opera-glass that the gentlemen who occupied the guests table at the head of the Hall in front of the stage, namely, G. R. Gage Esq., E. N. Blake, Esq., City Messenger Edward Simonds, Councilmen Alex Grant and J. J. Walsh, Aldermen Wm. T. Kendall and J. H. Doherty, and other officials and privates, enjoyed the occasion with as keen a zest as any others in the Hall, and had as much decorum paid them.

The members of Company K (Woburn Rangers) now resident in this city and vicinity are: Capt. Luke R. Tidd, John Gilcreast, Albert Bancroft, Albert S. Leslie, George E. Fowle, Abijah Thompson, Andrew R. Linscott, Loren Searle, M. H. Baldwin, Albert P. Barrett, Alonzo D. Carpenter, Charles K. Conn, Alona P. Downing, Parker Eaton, Joseph W. Garfield, W. H. LeBaron, George W. Linscott, Timothy Mahoney, Rufus F. Poole, Albert H. Richardson, William Brown, Charles H. Johnson, T. Marvin Parker, A. G. Brown, C. H. Colegate, George W. Dean, Albert Gleason, Edward Hoskins, J. Fred Leslie, Julius F. Ramsdell, Albert L. Richardson, Newall Z. Tabor, T. Morton Parker.

The after-dinner exercises were of an inviting and pleasing character. Band music constituted an important part of them, for it was of the best quality and abundant in quantity. The feast having been got through with President Abijah Thompson felicitiously introduced Mayor Johnson to the audience who, in a happy speech, extended a hearty welcome, in behalf of the city, to the Association and their guests. At the close of the official welcome the President introduced General and Mrs. C. L. Pierson who were received with rousing cheers from all over the Hall. General Pierson made a brief address which was listened to with marked attention and was warmly applauded.

This was succeeded by short speeches by Rev. Daniel March, D. D., Hon. John Cummings, Hon. J. G. Pollard, Postmaster Reade, City Clerk Moreland, Colonel C. H. Porter of Quincy, and some others.

Prof. Elmore A. Pierce of this city read an appropriate poem, and in conconjunction with the Woburn Brass Band rendered a musical and poetical sentiment in memory of the gallant dead.

With this and an appropriate air by the Band the programme of one of the largest and most enjoyable reunions the 39th ever held came to a close well towards the end of the day. Not long after this the Veterans dispersed to their respective homes and the city put on its usual work-a-day clothes and airs, and went back into its old tracks and habits once more.

She Was "Particular" Like.

"John, go up to Mrs. Swandown's and get that barrel of flour we sent up yesterday. Head it up and drive around the block and when you go back open the other head and she'll think it another barrel and 'twill suit." Thus said a grocery-man who had a very particular customer. But these particular kind, though they may be deceived in the matter of flour, are never cheated in their soap, for they buy Brussels, the economical soap. The name is on the goods.

The Co-Operative Bank.

The semi-annual report of Treasurer Whitcher of the Woburn Co-operative Bank presents an encouraging exhibit of the standing of that institution. It shows that it is prosperous and that its management is in careful hands. The public have confidence in its soundness and believe in its exceptional utility as a local loan association. Treasurer Whitcher's report reads as follows:

Loans on real estate,	$53,625 00
Loans on shares,	1,000 00
Suspense account,	217 69
Cash on hand,	4,806 28
	$59,648 97

LIABILITIES.

Dues, capital,	$54,491 00
Forfeited shares,	66 21
Surplus,	458 99
Profit,	4,489 89
Guarantee fund,	142 88
Total,	$59,648 97

Of the amount, $4,806 28 cash on hand, $4,264.07 is subject to call. There are now 362 members, and 2169 shares have been sold. The profit per share by series is as follows: First series, $4.82; second, $3.33; third, $2.28; fourth, $1.44; fifth, 81c.; sixth, 36c.; seventh, 9c. A dividend of 6 per cent. per annum has been declared.

The officers of the Bank are: President, James Skinner; Vice-President, J. W. Hammond; Treasurer, A. W. Whitcher; Secretary, A. W. Whitcher; Directors, B. F. Whittemore, George Buchanan, William F. Davis, Edward F. Johnson, W. C. Kenney, Martin Hayward, John R. Carter, S. B. Goddard, Thomas Salmon, F. H. Lewis, H. C. Hall, S. F. Trull, Fred J. Brown, John C. Buck, H. E. Smith; Auditors, C. A. Burdett, A. E. Gage, Winthrop Hammond.

Annual Shoot and Dinner.

Yesterday the Woburn Mechanic Phalanx (Co. G, 5th Reg. Inf. M. V. M.) held their annual target shoot followed by the annual dinner at the Armory. They had magnificent weather for it and the boys enjoyed it to the full extent of the law.

The Company under command of Capt. W. C. Parker, Fine Members and invited guests, left the Armory for Brookside Range at about 1 o'clock P. M., and were in high spirits as they repaired down Pleasant street into Lexington street thence to the Range.

Good marksmanship was displayed in the target contest and the results of it were satisfactory.

At 6 o'clock, P. M. the Company and guests sat down to a fine dinner in Armory Hall and enjoyed it. The dinner was a good one and when it was through with there were speeches, toasts, and good music to the close of the evening.

All speak of it as one of the best shoots and dinners the Company have had in recent years.

The Laundry Sewer.

Street Superintendent Gilman F. Jones finished the sewer on Main street laid chiefly for the use of the Woburn Steam Laundry on Saturday evening last in good shape and without any interference from the Medford authorities. If these latter gentlemen had known what Mr. Jones was up to it is highly probable that the air in this city would have been filled full of Court injunctions and things of that kind all day Friday and Saturday, but they were in dense ignorance of what was going on until late Saturday when an officer of Medford came up and found it was too late to prevent the sewer being laid.
